There are now over 40,000,000 pounds of foreign mutton and lamb in cold storage and 10,000,000 pounds more now on ships from foreign countries coming into the United States free, and when by amendment I seek to place a duty of 5 cents per pound on same, watch our Republican brothers make points of order against the amendments. And you will see that it is the Republican Party that is protecting the big packers.

All of this talk of foreign countries retaliating against us is bunk. They need our products. They must have our products. And the only reason now that our cotton and wool can not be sold is that foreign countries have neither money nor credit with which to buy. By reorganizing the War Finance Board the other day we have taken steps to help them get the necessary credit. They can not retaliate against our products, because they must have them.

Under this bill now before us for passage the following duty on foreign products imported from foreign countries into the United States is provided:

Wheat, 30 cents per bushel.
Corn or maize, 15 cents per bushel.
Beans, 2 cents per pound.
Peanuts, 3 cents per pound.
Potatoes, 25 cents per bushel.
Onions, 40 cents per bushel.
Rice, cleaned, 2 cents per pound.
Lemons, 1½ cents per pound.
Peanut, cottonseed, coconut, and soya bean oil, 20 cents per gallon.
Cattle, 30 per cent ad valorem.
Sheep, $2; lambs, $1.
Fresh mutton and lamb, 2½ cents per pound.
Cotton with 1⅛ staple, 7 cents per pound.
Wool and mohair, unwashed, 15 cents per pound; washed, 30 cents per pound; scoured, 45 cents per pound.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER].

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, in the limited time allotted to me it will be impossible for me to discuss the bill in many of its phases.

It has been argued so often by so many that the cause of our depression, that the cause of the failure of the farmers of this country to get high prices for their products, is due to the fact that they made their crops upon a high-priced market, and when the time came to market those crops there was, by reason of the change of conditions in foreign countries, a decrease or change in the national exchange of these countries. That has been argued to such an extent that in the limited time at my disposal I shall not go into it. We all know that from an economic standpoint what we need is not a tariff law to keep out importations, but a market to which we may send our surplus products.

There are one or two articles in this bill to which I desire to address myself, and one of them is wool. My friends on the Republican side of this House, do you know that from 1898 to 1912, during the time when there was the highest protective tariff of any country on wool, and in addition to that a tax of 15 per cent on the carcass of the sheep, there was a decrease in the number of sheep in the United States—during those 12 to 14 years of the highest protective tariff in the history of our Republic—a decrease amounting to over 11,500,000 sheep? I heard a man telling a Member of this House sometime ago, speaking of how the sheep, by reason of the tariff conditions, had decreased in the great State of Texas from 1898 until 1912, with a tariff of 11 cents a pound on wool in the rough, with a tax of 33 cents a pound on the scoured wool, with a tax as high as the Washington Monument on the finished product, I heard a man state that in the State of Texas during those 14 years sheep decreased in number from 2,500,000 down to about 1,200,000. I looked into this. I found that the other agricultural products of that great State during that time increased enormously in value, from less than a billion dollars to over $2,500,000,000. The sheep-raising business is simply a frontier proposition. Do you want a man who has 1,000 acres on which he formerly grazed 300 or 400 head of sheep, but which now is devoted to the production of corn, cotton, wheat, to stop the production of those food products, worth ten times in value the amount of sheep, and go back to the raising of a few sheep?

Again, it has been estimated that it requires 600,000,000 pounds of wool to take care of the needs of the American people. Our home supply is 300,000,000 pounds. How is this going to help the sheep farmer to-day, when, according to the report of the majority, we find that there is enough wool on hand now to last the country for 12 months, and that other information is enough for two years?

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Can the gentleman, as a member of the committee, explain why it is that frozen beef was not put into this bill, when cattle are not shipped to this country, and the packers have big packing establishments in South American countries?

Mr. COLLIER. I understand the gentleman very well. I listened with much amusement to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], a man who has been in this House for nearly 20 years, one of the leaders, when he spoke of how this bill would curb the packers. Why, the gentleman from Kansas well knows that the packers of Chicago, Kansas City, and other places do not import live stock into this country. The testimony before the Ways and Means Committee shows that there are hundreds of millions of pounds of frozen beef brought into this country, which is now in storage in New York, not for sale now, but in storage, and when the Republican majority meets next year, if they enact a high tariff, all of that frozen meat will then be dumped onto the American public and the consumer will have to pay the difference between the tariff they fix at that time and the tariff that is paid now. The tariff on cattle amounts to practically nothing. The disturbances in Mexico have practically denuded that country of cattle. I heard Mr. LONGWORTH the other day, with tears streaming down his cheeks, say that if we did not pass this bill the ewes, the mothers, as he put it, of the poor little lambs in the West, would be destroyed. Yet at the same time he votes for the bill which he knows will not give relief in the next three or four months, and by that time, according to his statement, the poor mothers of the little lambs will have been destroyed, and yet he votes for a bill which will prohibit my friend, Mr. HUDSPETH, from Texas, and other sheep owners from going down into Mexico and buying some more mothers to take care of these little lambs. [Laughter and applause.]

Then, again, I want to say something about cotton. It is amusing to listen to the tender solicitude of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY], the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] for the cotton farmer. It is interesting to see such tender solicitude on the part of those gentlemen who do not know a cotton boll from a cocklebur for the poor cotton farmer. It is one of the most pathetic and touching incidents in modern politics. Why did they put a tariff of 7 cents a pound on a cotton of 1⅛ inches in length, a cotton that is not raised, not 1 per cent of it, in the United States?

It looks as if it was done as a way to keep us from saying anything, because there is somebody who believes that a tax on cotton would amount to something. But there is something beyond all that. There is a reason for it, because when they put a tax of 7 cents a pound on cotton, which they know will never come in competition with the American product, it will allow the manufacturer of cotton goods to add that tariff to the price of the manufactured article——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COLLIER. Is my time up so soon? Well, this will be continued about the 15th or the 18th of May, 1921. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is not insisted by the proponents of this bill that it is either scientific or logical. Neither is it insisted that the causes which it is sought to remedy by the passage of this bill were due to the existence or absence of tariffs at the time the causes manifested themselves. If it were so insisted, it would be patently untrue, because there was a general slump in prices of most raw materials and the advanced stages of many manufactured articles, in securities, and in foodstuffs about the same time in one half of the world, regardless of tariff conditions, while the other half of the world was starving, as it is now, for most of those identical articles and commodities. So that in considering this bill the House is in the situation of saying that it proposes by its enactment to remedy the very causes which in their inception had no relation whatever to the existence or the absence of tariff legislation.

The gentleman from Ohio, my genial friend, Mr. LONGWORTH, in common with several others recently, somewhat amused me on yesterday when, assuming a heroic attitude, he announced that he proposed to surrender the entire debt due us from Europe rather than surrender home markets. When I contemplate the fact that we are to-day manufacturing and selling all the countries of the world $4,000,000,000 of all kinds of manufactured products and others, exclusive of agricultural products—as much as our total foreign commerce was in 1914—and when I further contemplate our wonderfully strong and impregnable position as a financial, commercial, and industrial nation compared with the present crippled condition of all other countries, and when I heard my friend make that startling declaration, it reminded me of the assumed attitude of a well-known Member on my side of the House who represents a district composed exclusively of farmers. His constant platform is that he proposes to stand by the farmers in this House, even though it should defeat him overwhelmingly in the next election. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I see no particular concern that any Member of the House should feel in regard to the question of scientific or certain tariff protection in this bill in view of the fact that it is conceded on every hand and was argued at length by the gentleman from Ohio on yesterday that with the existing confused and abnormal economic conditions of the world it is utterly impossible now or soon to frame any protective tariff measure that would be at all intelligent or scientific or practicable. It therefore follows that this measure is simply thrown in here in a crude, haphazard, careless kind of way because our farmers, in common with many other classes of persons and business, are in serious distress at this time. So with a measure which is neither flesh nor fowl as to any definite amount of actual protection it embodies, Members on my side might well be more disturbed about voting for this bill and for the naked doctrine of protection which it does contain than they need be concerned with the idea of voting for it and securing a certain or definite amount of protection for some local industry in return. Now, what is the real situation? We have serious distress among the farmers. The values of many of their products have suddenly shrunk nearly 50 per cent during the past six months just as the values of many raw materials and other products and commodities have shrunk in this and other countries of the world. Every class thus affected, of course, wants the most available remedy for it, and speedily. This Congress proceeds after some weeks deliberation to throw in the hopper this so-called protective-tariff measure. Now, the situation as I see it, my friends, is that if we really desire to help the farmer there are three practical ways by which it can be done. I do not consider this tariff measure as in the least a remedial measure. In the first place, as my friend from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] correctly stated, we have a surplus of commodities in this country. We desire to sell them. They have helped to produce stagnation and sudden depression here. We can not sell them at home; we do not expect to sell them at home, because we shall continue to produce as much as our domestic needs require and more. The result is we must, as in the past, find foreign markets for them. We are now exporting or have been until recently about $8,000,000,000, one-half manufactures raw materials, and so forth, and the other half foodstuffs and other agricultural products. We expect to continue to produce a surplus which we must sell abroad. How can this tariff bill help to do that? Then the only remedy for sane, practical relief is to open up and facilitate our foreign market conditions. That involves a rehabilitation and a strengthening of our international exchange and trade situation, international credits, and so forth, to bring those trade facilities between nations back to a functioning order. Then we will be able gradually to work off our surpluses and work them off to countries which are to-day and will be to-morrow actually starving for almost every ounce of surplus which we have.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will permit, I will ask if this, instead of being a tariff bill, were a bill which imposed a straight embargo, would the gentleman support it?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am now coming to that embargo situation and shall be glad to answer the gentleman on that point.

Mr. JEFFERIS rose.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I shall have to ask the gentleman to excuse me, because my time is so limited. I was in the act of stating, and I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio what I conceive to be the practical remedies under existing circumstances in lieu of either remedy that he suggests: First, let the Government and the banking and other financial agencies of this country cooperate with the commercial, banking, and other agencies of other countries who want our surplus commodities, in reviving and strengthening our international trade and exchange situation. That opens the door, that gives us a free flow of commerce back and forth between nations. This would afford temporary relief. America will have to make large, long-time investments abroad to give us a stable and sound and permanent export situation. In the second place, I would have the farmers of this country who still own a surplus of farm products and live stock given all the credit accommodations possible that will enable them to hold this surplus, pending the revival of international trade functions. I do not mean by this to hold up the values of this surplus artificially, but rather up to a fair world-price level at this stage of readjustment. In the third place, Congress could do much to encourage and considerable to aid in bringing the farmer in more direct communication with the consumer. For many years we have heard constant talk about efficiency in production, but we have heard entirely too little about economic efficiency and directness in the distribution of that which the farmer produces between him and the consumer. Cooperative sales agencies, cooperative purchasing agencies, additional storage facilities properly supervised, better transportation, terminal facilities, all these are important steps which are now being pointed out to you by the farmer himself to bring the farmer more directly and in cheaper contact with the consumer, and which, if it enabled him to get even one-third to one-half the level of prices which the American consumers are now paying for his products, would put him in the most independent position economically at this minute. [Applause.] Now, these, in my judgment, are the practical methods by which the agricultural surplus, as well as the other surpluses, we produce in this country will finally be disposed of. What is the situation on the other side? We are now no longer living within ourselves. This very condition we are called upon to remedy demonstrates that. We must find countries which are in great need of our surplus and work out a way to get it to them in order that we may sell it on amply satisfactory terms to ourselves.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I will have to ask the gentleman to excuse me because my time is so limited. If I could get a little extension I would be only too glad to yield.

I repeat, what is the situation, Mr. Chairman? It is a world situation. We need not delude ourselves with the theory that we can face inward instead of outward across the ocean when it comes to facing and solving this serious condition. We have to look out and see what the world economic situation is and help to deal with it, and that comes home to us in a forcible way in connection with this proposal.

Now, the European countries must get to functioning in the way of coming back toward normal, economically. At this time the European nations have suffered a loss of from 30 to 50 per cent of their productive power. They still suffer it, because they are utterly unable to get our foods and raw materials—our surplus materials and foodstuffs—which are giving us so much trouble here at home at this time. They can not get them because they have neither the cash nor the credit to pay for them, and we now propose to put on an embargo in large measure. In other words, we propose to say, in effect, that while we demand the privilege of selling $8,000,000,000 worth of products every year to all other nations, we in turn deny them the right to sell to us at all, at least to an appreciable extent, except when it precisely suits us to buy.

Now, if it is wise and sound policy to enact this measure as a remedy for the present depression in agricultural products then it is equally wise and sound for every other nation in the world suffering from a slump to enact a similar prohibitory measure to keep out our automobiles, to keep out our iron and steel products, to keep out all our other $4,000,000,000 of manufactured products, raw materials, and so forth, and an additional $4,000,000,000 of agricultural products and foodstuffs.

It is equally sound and justifiable, I say, that this precedent should be adopted by every other nation. And then where would we be? [Applause.] We would then have a live and real congestion and slump. This action would invite protest and retaliation by other nations, and I feel sure we would soon see it. This is a mighty dangerous precedent for a big exporting Nation.

We ought to realize that with international credit in a state of partial paralysis, and with the exchange situation so utterly broken down as to put an enormous penalty on what we sell abroad and somewhat of a corresponding premium upon what we purchase from abroad, we ought to realize the utter impossibility of getting back toward normal and resuming international trade functions in our trade affairs until these conditions are first corrected.

Now, if we face backward and enact this legislation we will be proceeding in precisely the opposite direction from that which we should pursue, and we will later have to retrace our steps on our way back toward a resumption of sound and normal conditions. During the last 20 months I have heard the very champions of this measure daily thundering in this House against the retention of any further governmental restrictions on business, demanding that the Government take its hands off of business and let it function undisturbed. And yet here comes in that entire brigade of former denunciators of Government restrictions on business and demanding the imposition of the most artificial economic barrier that has ever been presented or even thought of during the last four or five years. It is utterly inconsistent and utterly contradictory.

This shortsighted tariff policy not only gets us nowhere, but it invites all other nations likewise to refuse to buy from us. I am, of course, most anxious to support any sort of measure even halfway practical and sound that would be reasonably calculated to aid agriculture in the present emergency, but it is so patent to my mind that we can only get relief by working off our surplus farm products and live stock in European and other markets that I am utterly unable to see any advantage but only material injury from the passage of the proposed high tariff bill.

According to all human calculations, the foreign exchange and international trade barriers will undoubtedly be in a measure removed during the next few months so as to permit a gradual outlet and sale of our surplus products with the result that the present condition of stagnation and abnormally low prices, due to the temporary inability of one half the world to dispose of its surplus to the other half, will be correspondingly relieved. We all hope and pray for such improvement, which can not come too soon. But it will in no sense be due to the effect of any high tariff nostrum such as this bill proposes.

Now, the European countries are in a frightful condition. I have before me the report of the finance committee of the international conference which represented 39 nations which held protracted sessions at Brussels a few weeks ago. Among other things in that report, referring to the world situation and the necessity for restoring it economically, they make this statement:

> It is of the greatest importance that every Government should abandon at the earliest practicable date all uneconomic and artificial measures which will conceal from the people the true economic situation. Each country should aim at the progressive reality of that freedom of commerce which prevailed before the war.

Whether it was high tariff in one country or low tariff in another, they said that the conditions should be restored instead of being made more artificial.

Europe's economic power is in eclipse. Her financial, commercial, and industrial conditions are highly artificial, disjointed, demoralized, and constantly changing. The financial situation of each European country in regard to its budget, internal and external debt, currency, and exchange, is frightful to contemplate. All budgets show great gaping deficits in current receipts and expenditures, notwithstanding each of these nations has since the armistice added new taxes to its undisturbed war taxes. The Italian deficit for this fiscal year will be around $2,400,000,000, while that of France will be greater unless expected payments of the German indemnity should be realized to a surprising extent. The German deficit is about $11,200,000,000. Several nations in and contiguous to Europe, not engaged in the war, likewise have very considerable deficits, such as Spain, Switzerland, Holland, and Denmark. These conditions are not surprising when we reflect that the annual expenditures of the Governments of the world before the war aggregated $9,250,000,000, whereas they now aggregate $52,250,000,000. The external debt of the European countries amounts to $155,000,000,000 compared with $17,000,000,000 in 1913, to say nothing of the immense internal indebtedness. I am, of course, not including England in these references to European nations. The currencies of European countries have been inflated to the extent of $55,000,000,000 and more, the larger portion of which is fiat money, while the printing presses have not even yet been stopped by some of these Governments. In addition there has been a limitless expansion of credit. Efforts to fund unbearable loads of floating debt have in a number of cases proven fruitless. France recently carried through successfully a refunding operation of magnitude, but at a 6 per cent interest level, tax free. Several foreign loans negotiated during the past autumn by French interests ranged from 8 per cent to 9½ per cent interest. The exchange situation has operated against Europe with deadly effect since the removal of the artificial and arbitrary stabilizing influences provided by Government regulations during the war. The English pound sterling exchange rates are around $3.50 compared with $4.86 par; the French franc 5.90 compared with 19.3 par; the Italian lira 3.41 compared with 19.3 par; the Belgian franc 6.22 compared with 19.3 par; the German mark 1.39 compared with 23.8 par; the Austrian crown .26 compared with 20.3 cents par; the Czechoslovakian crown 1.16 compared with 20.3 cents par; the Danish krone 15.15 compared with 26.8 cents par; the Grecian drachma 7.38 compared with 19.3 cents par; the Holland florin 31.25 compared with 42.2 cents par; the Norway krone 14.95 compared with 26.3 cents par; the Spanish peseta 12.91 compared with 19.3 cents par, and in like proportion elsewhere.

The South American exchange is 20 per cent to 40 per cent off. These adverse exchange conditions impose added cost corresponding to the percentage of decline of all that these countries thus suffering buy from abroad with cash, while their credit strength has been rapidly ebbing away. Europe is on a paper basis, while the United States is on a gold basis and offers virtually the only free gold market. Unfortunately, these countries have comparatively little to sell and much to buy, especially of food and raw materials, while America, with great surpluses of these very products which Europe so greatly needs, is fenced off from the markets of the latter by these abnormally low exchange conditions and by a lack of international credits. It has been said recently that the English pound sterling at $3.40 means that Europe pays a premium of over 40 per cent on all it buys and that the farmers and manufacturers of other countries have 40 per cent advantage over ours in selling their products to Europe. This delicate situation reveals the critical state of our foreign trade at this time and the extreme importance of conserving rather than jeopardizing or abandoning it by the use of artificial barriers such as the proposed tariff embargo. The proposed high tariff would only drive the exchange rates farther down. Who can justify that suicidal course?

A general depression in all trades, including the textile manufacturing industries, exists throughout Europe and England, while the former is at the same time suffering most severely from the shortage of food and raw materials. Only two great manufacturing nations remain at all intact as a result of the war—the United States and England. Only four important commercial nations have favorable trade balances—the United States, Canada, Spain, and the Argentine. The great excess of exports from the United States over imports which has taken place in the circumstances already described materially aided in the serious breakdown of exchange conditions. To restore these, as well as the economic equilibrium of the world, Europe must at least gradually regain her productive power. To do this she must have food and raw materials, of which we have a most burdensome surplus. She at present has little credit, less goods that we need, and no cash. The chief underlying cause of the failure of Europe thus far to return to production to a reasonable extent has been the failure to establish general peace conditions and to fix the amount of the German indemnity. The result of these failures has been general uncertainty, doubt, apprehension, suspense, inaction, and helplessness in most lines of commerce, finance, and industry, not only in Germany but in several commercial countries of Europe. France, for instance, has suffered in her credit and general economic situation because she has been waiting in patient expectancy of large German indemnities from month to month with which to meet urgent necessities. The economic affairs of all nations are closely interwoven and interrelated, and the inability of Europe thus far to procure sufficient food and raw materials to enable her to revive production has most seriously crippled and retarded the development and normal restoration of the financial and commercial affairs of the world.

In further considering the policy embodied in the pending high tariff bill in the light of world conditions, present and prospective, it is important that we should keep in mind our own unparalleled development and growth in finance, commerce, and industry. We will thus more clearly realize how difficult it is and will be for our Nation to function commercially and industrially except as an integral part of the great economic structure of the world. Apart from being the greatest creditor Nation and the center of the world's finance and commerce, we are the greatest producing Nation in history. We are annually producing vast surpluses of foodstuffs, raw materials, and manufactured products. To keep capital and labor employed and to prevent calamitous stagnation and depression the Nation will and must continue to turn out increasing surpluses from year to year, all of which can only be sold in foreign markets. Our international commerce jumped from a little over $4,000,000,000 in 1913 to over $13,000,000,000 in 1920. Those who imagined that we could isolate ourselves after the war and live alone and within ourselves have already experienced a rude shock as they saw prices of farm products and many articles of raw material and manufactures take a serious slump during recent months, mainly because artificial trade barriers resulting from the war prevented their shipment and sale to foreign markets where they have been and are so urgently needed. It is due, however, to say that the general reactionary effects of the war have also contributed to the decline in values in such countries as England, Canada, South America, United States, Japan, and the Far East, but the actual slump which has so violently affected the values of so many commodities in these countries during recent months constitutes a much greater decline than was justified at this stage of deflation and economic readjustment. The big problem of this country, which is that of every important country, is to get the world back to normal. No prohibitive or embargo tariff legislation which this and other Nations may adopt will in the least contribute to this great end, but on the contrary will only result in exasperating, hurtful, and damaging delay. How can this proposed high tariff stay the economic decay of Europe which is so directly injuring our prosperity? No reasonable person can well underestimate the major factor which our foreign trade constitutes in our domestic prosperity.

The world to-day owes the United States near $16,000,000,000, which in chief measure constitutes the balance of trade in our favor during the past six years. The amount our Government loaned the allied Governments during the war was mainly credited for the payment of goods and war supplies purchased from us. From $3,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000 of our exports have been financed by private agencies in the United States. The United States is now in the paradoxical situation of seeking payment of this vast world indebtedness, and especially the interest thereon, while at the same time it faces the absolute necessity of selling several billions of surplus abroad, thereby piling up the indebtedness due it. Other Governments and their citizens owing us can only pay by means of cash, credit, or goods. To compel payment of either principal or interest in cash correspondingly reduces the ability of foreign markets to absorb our surplus agricultural products and other surplus commodities.

If we should attempt to compel payment in gold we would readily realize that we already have too much gold and are suffering inflation of values on account of the excess, and, above all, it is physically impossible for our debtors to pay gold at this time. It would also be wholly infeasible for other governments to pay us in their own depreciated currencies. They can not pay in credits, because they are now starving for our surplus foodstuffs, raw materials, and other products because of their utter inability to furnish acceptable credit. It follows, therefore, that the principal payments we may expect at any early date must be in goods. Some citizens here look with keen disfavor upon the idea of such payments in goods. They seem to be afflicted with the wholly false and superficial view that this method would result in displacing vast quantities of our domestic products and materially injuring the proper development of our domestic industries. I notice in the debate to-day the statement that the pending high tariff bill does not propose to prohibit or obstruct imports except mainly those from nations that were not engaged in the war and which profited most from the war. This sharply raises the question as to the true effect and meaning of international commercial operations. The 11 allied Governments to whom our Government loaned $9,580,000,000 could pay their debts to us with goods, but without selling or shipping to us directly a single product or commodity. For illustration, England sells manufactured and other products to Brazil, from whom we purchase nearly $200,000,000 worth of coffee each year. We owe Brazil and Brazil owes England—the result is that $200,000,000 of England's debt to us is canceled. In other words, neither imports nor exports are paid for by the shipment of money to any appreciable extent. This general situation is well expressed by a noted economic authority as follows:

> From South American countries and from the Far East we have bought, year in and year out, more than we have sold to them. We have been enabled to pay for the commodities thus bought because of our heavy exports to other countries, chiefly to Europe. The balance of trade between any pair of countries is rarely such as to bring about an equalization of their exports and imports. It is in the grand total of the countries' transactions that we find the equalization of imports and exports, or rather the equalization of all of a country's international debts and credits; and it is this broad equalization which serves to bring about a settlement without the flow of specie. * * * In times of peace the Americans have been able to pay for their imports of coffee from Brazil or raw silk from Japan through credits based on heavy exports of breadstuffs and cotton and copper to European countries. London was the clearing house for these transactions, which were disposed of irrespective of the particular relations of the United States with Brazil and Japan.

International commerce is mainly barter—an exchange of goods. When imports decline exports will decline.

It is important to note that only 23 per cent of our total imports for 1920 came from Europe, against 50 per cent prior to the war, while the remaining 77 per cent came from Canada, South America, Japan, the Far East, and other countries; but, on the other hand, 60 per cent of our total exports went to Europe in 1920, as against 68 per cent prior to the war. It is manifestly absurd, therefore, to contend that we are not injuring ourselves when we obstruct trade with the countries south and west of us, because it is plain that in the ultimate outcome such action would be just as detrimental to the United States, if not more so in the circumstances, than to obstruct the flow of commerce between this country and those engaged in the war.

A few highly partisan individuals are inclined to rail against our present large volume of imports, which aggregated $5,238,000,000 for the last fiscal year of 1920. They studiously ignore their true economic significance. They complain as if the entire amount of these imports were manufactures or similar products which are displacing finished American production to that extent. This is wholly false and fallacious. For example, the amount of imports of manufactures ready for consumption for the last fiscal year was only $745,000,000, which amount was less in quantity than that imported annually under the operation of the Payne tariff law. The value of foodstuffs in various forms imported during the same year aggregated near $1,500,000,000, but these items of import consisted mainly of sugar, $688,000,000; coffee, $310,000,000; fruits and nuts, $124,000,000; cocoa, $72,000,000; tea, $19,000,000, and other smaller items, more than 60 per cent of all of which constituted luxuries, and most of which we do not produce. Carrying this analysis a little further, our imports of crude materials for use and for further use in manufacturing aggregated $2,900,000,000 for the fiscal year 1920. Who but the narrow protectionist politician would complain at this phase of our international commerce? Certainly our manufacturers who turn it into the finished product and sell for a good profit, and our laborers who are thereby given increased employment at good wages, are offering no complaint. In addition to these considerations these classes of large imports are not only not detrimental to our economic situation but are both helpful to it and to the settlement of foreign indebtedness due us. I may also add that it is only through the purchase and importation of these classes of products that we are able to make satisfactory exportation and sale of our immense surpluses in all lines. It would be most fatal for this country to slacken or diminish production, for such course would mean unemployment with all its attendant circumstances. France, Italy, Belgium, and central Europe, to say nothing of certain other countries, urgently need all our surplus. The other half of the world should move forward in production notwithstanding the recent slump in values it has experienced, and at the same time should as rapidly as possible develop credit and other plans for the active and full resumption of trade relations with the European countries just named.

The proposed tariff bill, in my judgment, is not nearly so innocent as appears on its face, for whether so intended or not, this measure sharply raises the question of the most supreme importance to this Nation, one involving the whole future commercial policy of the Nation in the light of the new and changed economic conditions in which our country and the world find themselves as the result of the war. The American people are now face to face with the momentous question of whether they as a Nation will maintain our present supreme position in world finance, commerce, and industry, going forward with the development of our foreign trade, keeping alive and expanding our great merchant marine, making sound and permanent investments of surplus capital abroad, affording labor increased employment at home, negotiating wise reciprocal commercial treaties, cooperating with other nations in the elimination of unfair, hurtful, and dangerous trade practices so as to promote fair and friendly trade relations, prescribing a tariff for revenue only, and doing in other essential respects big things in a big way as sound, enlightened, and progressive policy would suggest.

The American Nation must either adopt this wise and philosophic policy for its future and continue to progress, or it must inevitably and as the only alternative adopt the narrow, short-sighted, suicidal policy of commercial isolation not unlike that pursued by China after she had become a world factor in finance and commerce and which has brought her to her present low and despised estate. This latter policy means that the United States shall return to a general and comprehensive system of high protective tariffs—tariffs on the commodities of all producers, from the raw material to the finished product, when selfishly demanded by them, whether really needed or not even from the standpoint of protection. It practically means going backward 40 years, although economic conditions have entirely changed. This policy would assure permanent artificial commercial conditions, a new army of trusts, monopolistic prices to consumers at home, inefficiency in production, stagnation, shutdowns, and an artificially high level of costs of production which would prevent successful American competition in world markets and would compel a return to the old practice under former high protective tariff systems of dumping our annual surpluses abroad at prices far below the domestic prices charged the American consumer. This policy, so backward, antiquated, and utterly provincial for a full-grown country, would mean the death knell to our present $13,000,000,000 of international commerce, and along with it our dominant position in the financial and commercial affairs of the world. It would then be entirely appropriate to remit our foreign debt and let the gift become a monument to our economic stupidity and our future national decadence. Bourbon protectionists can not realize that we are living in a new world and that the position of our Nation in the world economy is vastly different from that of the past. From this time the Nation will move forward or backward according to which of these great epochal policies it adopts.

In the language of President William McKinley, "the period of exclusiveness is past. The expansion of our trade and commerce is the pressing problem." Notwithstanding every true sign and wise warning to the contrary, the fight for reaction, for exclusiveness, and for economic isolation is now on. The sudden appearance of this hastily constructed high tariff bill was the signal to all the forces of stand-pat protection and of greed and selfishness to rally in a grand effort again to get both their arms and feet into the Federal Treasury. The logrollers behind this and other like high-tariff bills make the pork-barrel logrollers drop their heads in shame. No person or business can become a beneficiary of one of these general high protective tariff laws without joining with all other beneficiaries, no matter how undeserving or extortionate, and upholding their demands. I am persuaded that the proponents of this measure, while recognizing its utter futility as a remedy for the present distress of the farmers, have rushed it before Congress for the purpose of exciting the favorable interest and whetting the appetite of certain wheat raisers and livestock growers, bean, peanut, onion, and other raisers of certain agricultural products, to the extent that they will next spring demand that their representatives here give their support not only to protective-tariff items affecting them at home but to the entire high protective tariff measure the reactionary Republicans expect to lay before Congress next year.

The peanut farmer will be expected to join hands with the supporters of schedule K, a schedule the past history of which reeks with bargain and intrigue, not to say scandal. The wheat grower who will get no protective benefits will be asked to lock arms with the Agricultural Implement Trust in an effort to secure a restoration of his monopolistic tariff rates. The long-staple cotton producer will be called on to assist the Cotton Bagging Trust to secure new and high rates so that he can plunder the cotton grower, and so on down the line. This is an auspicious time, considering the distress in the country, for the high priests of high protection to marshal their forces along the highest protective lines. Those who oppose this general policy for the Nation and favor the liberalized commercial policy I have outlined seem oblivious to the full significance of this present high-tariff movement, and unless they bestir themselves the extreme reactionary, hidebound high protectionist will have control when the work of general tariff revision is taken up next spring. In that event a bill will be prepared very much after the manner of the preparation of the pending bill. The Tariff Commission will be shunted aside and its work and services ignored. Full and true economic facts will not be sought or welcomed. The beneficiaries will come and write their own extortionate rates as they have on many former occasions. We will see old schedule K unblanketed and brought forth to do duty again with its specific duties, its ad valorem duties, its compound duties, its duties by the pound, its duties by the yard, its compensatory duties, and a further network of combined and complicated levies and iniquities which only greed and selfishness can devise. I recall that the Dingley law was framed almost in its entirety prior to the existence of the Congress which was to take jurisdiction of it, and it was hastily introduced and passed through the House within five days after Congress met. There was no time then for tariff commissions to make real investigations and true reports of facts so vital to any honest, intelligent tariff revision, and I predict that there will be no time in this instance. The reactionary schedule K protectionists have in the past, when out of power or threatened by defeat, preached loud and long in favor of tariff commissions, scientific tariffs, taking the tariff out of politics. They indulged in this performance in 1882 when they were about to be overthrown, and in 1909–10 when disaster faced them. Will history repeat itself?

Unless legitimate business and citizens who oppose taxing one citizen for the benefit of another and who favor an honest tariff for revenue or a well-balanced system of customhouse taxation, modeled along the most scientific lines in the light of true modern facts and actual economic conditions shall bestir themselves we bid fair to see another orgy of the schedule K protectionists at our Capitol—lobbyists infesting every corridor, rates written mountain high, and every economic law violated. I had thought that by the creation of the Tariff Commission both political parties had at least tacitly agreed that there would be no more general tariff revisions except after full investigation of all the essential facts necessary first to be had as a basis for intelligent, practicable, and sound action.

It is utterly infeasible, in my judgment, even though both parties should be willing, for such facts to be procured or such tariff revision to be made either now or during the coming months. The commercial and industrial conditions of the Nation and of the world are so completely abnormal and out of joint as to render any sort of intelligent tariff revision impracticable. Let me preface what I am about to say by recalling the fact that until 1840 high protectionists only advocated their doctrine in behalf of new or undeveloped industries. Protection of American labor against "cheap foreign labor" was not even mentioned during that period. About 1840, however, the country began to insist that the existing industries were full grown, and protection advocates then conceived the idea of urging protection on the theory that it was to protect American labor. The country heard much of this new argument from time to time until after 1900, when the extortionate tariff rates had permitted the formation of thousands of trusts in this country which arbitrarily fixed exorbitant prices to all consumers, and thereupon the advocates of high protection, being hard pressed, again modified their attitude by proclaiming themselves in favor of a tariff that would equal the difference in cost of production at home and abroad plus a reasonable profit to the manufacturer or producer. It soon developed that under this theory the beneficiary of protection was fixing his own profits without limit and to the great injury and loss of the consuming public. These "Schedule K" advocates thereupon abandoned the clause "plus a reasonable profit" and have since preached the generality or abstraction that the tariff should be based on the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. They now propose to formulate a general tariff revision act on this amended theory, although the theory has broken down and become discredited by the best economic thought the world over. It would be impossible to conceive of a more fruitless undertaking now or soon than that of ascertaining the difference in the cost of commodities here and elsewhere. The economic situation in every country is abnormal and is constantly changing. The cost of a commodity to-day is often different from that of yesterday or to-morrow. Many governments still retain regulation and control of many prices, of businesses, and of commercial transactions generally. Exchanges are badly out of joint; domestic currencies are greatly depreciated; some countries are overstocked with all lines, from the raw material to the finished product, while others are virtually destitute of either; ocean freight rates and insurance are high and uncertain; there is no level of production costs and no average cost of production either obtainable or in existence in any important commercial country at this time.

Vast inflations of credit and currency still exist in many countries. Other commercial nations have not yet outlined their future economic policies. But I need not elaborate. Suffice it to say that any general tariff revision made during the next few months will call for still more elaborate revision a year or two later. In the meantime those who oppose sweeping high tariffs, which in the future must be hurtful both to legitimate business and to the healthy commercial and industrial development of the country, can only urge a later and more suitable occasion for real permanent tariff revision—revision on the principle of a competitive tariff, which is a tariff levied for revenue and not for protectionist purposes, with the highest rates on luxuries and the lowest, or none at all, on the actual necessities of life. There is a vast irreconcilable and well-defined difference in attitude of one endeavoring to write a tariff for revenue purposes and one writing a tariff for protection. The whole spirit and purpose of each is utterly antagonistic. One seeks the protection of profits with only secondary regard for revenue, while the other seeks revenue without any regard for protection; one prescribes rates for protective purposes upon the impossible theory of the difference in cost of production, while the other discards this theory and acts on the policy that some competition should exist in every line of industry, a condition that can be determined by comparing the amount of imports coming into this country with the amount of goods consumed, in conjunction with all other available facts relating to the volume of production in a given line here and elsewhere, the consumption, the freight costs, the trade conditions, and trade movements. Competitive tariff rates do not contemplate destructive rates where the existence of a business is justified economically, but rates competitive and designed to prevent monopoly and to assure reasonable competition in the domestic markets. The cost of production theory is futile, because costs not only vary in one country, but there are even several levels of costs of production in the same industry of any one country.

Again, the question always arises under this theory as to whether a tariff rate shall be based on the difference between the production costs of the least efficient business concern at home and the most highly efficient concern abroad. A tariff based on this will-o'-the-wisp theory may just as easily be made high as low, or vice versa, for the reason that it is not difficult to obtain a set of cost figures for either purpose. If it is proposed to take an average cost of production basis, then the efficient business concern gets protection it does not need, while the less efficient business receives inadequate protection. Artificial prices of imports created by subsidies, rebates, drawbacks, trust combinations, or other unfair trade practices should be dealt with by commercial treaties or other special adequate method, and not by a simple high tariff which is not applicable.

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the unsoundness of the protective tariff as a tax. It is no more nor less than a subsidy or gratuity levied in the form of a tribute on the people generally for the benefit of a select and favored few. In the event of such a law these governmental beneficiaries should be required to make an annual accounting of profits to the end that any excess would be turned back into the Treasury. There can be no pretext in the light of present conditions for the enactment of a typical standpat high-protective tariff system from any viewpoint of enlightened self-interest. Such a measure would wholly disregard the true interests of the taxpayers, of the consumers, and would greatly retard our material development. On what possible theory can or should Congress reimpose tariff taxes to prevent or materially restrict imports of wood and lumber products which we are exporting to the annual amount of $186,000,000; of mineral oils, which we are exporting to the amount of $426,000,000; of iron and steel products, which we are exporting to the amount of $932,000,000; of rubber manufactures, which we are exporting to the amount of $69,000,000; of copper and copper manufactures, which we are exporting to the amount of $150,000,000; of bituminous coal, which we are exporting to the amount of $132,000,000; of automobiles, which we are exporting to the amount of $233,000,000; of agricultural implements, which we are exporting to the amount of $87,000,000; of any kind of raw cotton, which we are exporting to the amount of $1,381,000,000; of meat and dairy products, which we are exporting to the amount of $771,000,000; of paints and varnishes, which we are exporting to the amount of $27,000,000; and so on through the list of infinite varieties of foodstuffs, raw materials, and manufactures which we are to-day producing and selling to all nations to the extent of $8,000,000,000? How can the manufacturer's difference in cost of production theory be invoked and applied as a basis for protective-tariff levies in the cases of all these classes of enormous exports? How can the foreign "pauper labor" shibboleth be made to do service in the face of the fact that the efficiency and effectiveness of our intelligent and skilled labor with the superior advantages of modernized machinery, great variety and quantity of raw materials, and systems of mass production, produce commodities of the value of $8,000,000,000 which we are able to ship and sell in all the world markets in utter defiance of the competition of similar commodities produced any and everywhere else by pauper, ignorant, or any other kind of labor? There is no ground for the protectionist and no pretext for a Democrat upon either the theory of protection or of "placing a tariff on everything imported" to support a measure to place customs duties on sporadic items of imports when our home manufacturers and producers are both supplying the domestic market and shipping and selling the same commodities ad libitum throughout the world. Our basic supplies far excel those of any other country.

The United States has grain, meat, coal, iron, copper, timber, oil, cotton, wool, leather, either in unlimited or such reasonable quantities as to insure our industrial independence. On the other hand, every foreign commercial country is materially handicapped by the lack of some or several of these great basic resources. England proper only has coal and iron and must purchase abroad her foodstuffs and raw materials; Germany is without cotton, copper, wool, and others; France, Italy, and Austria are in like predicament; Japan has few of the basic materials with which to develop a manufacturing nation, and she is now gradually slipping back into a greatly restricted economic situation which will leave her but a minor factor in world competition. We need potash and nitrate among a very few other widely necessary products. The test of the friendly interest of Congress in the peanut and cotton belt will come not in the dispensing of a little tariff sop but on the question of allowing an additional appropriation to complete and operate the great nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals.

I have thus briefly contrasted the respective attitudes of the majority membership of each political party as I construe them. Those who favor a revenue tariff would place upon the free list not only articles of prime necessity but manufactured or other products which are produced with such high efficiency and corresponding lower costs as to permit their export and sale generally in other countries. It was from this viewpoint that agricultural implements, typewriters, cash registers, sewing machines, iron ore, pig iron, steel rails, structural steel, boots and shoes, wood and lumber products, mineral oils, meat and dairy products, leather and many leather manufactures, breadstuffs, cotton bagging, drawing chains, and many trust-controlled and other domestic products were either placed on the free list or given a very low rate of duty in the existing Underwood tariff law. Why should we try to fool anyone, as has often been done in the case of agricultural products, by imposing a nominal tariff which affords no sort of protection? The only theory on which this could be done would be to enlist the support of those thus deceived for other protective items. The view also that in these modern times "some tariff should be placed on everything" is utterly unwise and unsound. The Walker tariff of 1846 slanted in this direction, but it placed most of the controverted articles in the 30 per cent tariff class and the others in the 25 per cent class. But we were not a great exporting Nation then, and we did not have thousands of trusts ready to hide behind every tariff rate, big or little, and raise prices to filch the domestic consumers. Any effective revenue tariff rate contemplates a regular flow of imports even though small in volume—not a sporadic entry—and more than a nominal yield of revenue. Otherwise, why impose it unless for protection? A high or low tariff rate levied to-day on many scores of articles of great volume would result in no revenue, or but a few cents or a few odd dollars. Then, I repeat, why impose such useless rates except for such protection as might at least now and then be availed of to the unjust injury of consumers?

Let me point out a few instances showing that the pending tariff bill is fraudulent on its face, and this should constitute evidence of its general unsoundness. The controlling purpose of the bill is to create the false impression in the minds of the farmers of the Nation that they can be materially benefited by a high protective tariff, upon the theory that the tariff will prevent outside competition and thereby enable the farmer to secure higher prices than otherwise for his products in the domestic market. A few general facts and conditions patent to every sane person utterly disprove this view. The American farmer has an enormous amount of fertile land and employs intelligent and skilled labor and utilizes the most highly developed agricultural machinery. The result is that he annually produces vast surpluses of wheat, meat products, cotton, and other commodities, which he is compelled to export and sell in the world markets under the law of supply and demand and in open competition with like products of every nation. Every intelligent person knows that the price the American farmer thus receives for his surplus sold in the world markets virtually fixes the price of his products sold at home for domestic consumption. This truism is best illustrated in the case of cotton and wheat. The reason, and the only reason, that the high protective-tariff interests have always insisted on placing nominal duties on agricultural products, which do not bestow any benefits, has been that the farmer would, under this false delusion, aid or acquiesce in a policy that would impose exorbitant tariff rates on most commodities the farmer is obliged to purchase to eat or wear or use and at such artificially high prices as the tariff will make possible. Under this method of misleading the farmer he is placed in the actual position of supporting high-tariff rates on all agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, leather, boots and shoes, fence wire, timber, lumber, sewing machines, hats, clothing, and many other articles which he would otherwise be able to purchase at a correspondingly lower price. How are the profits of the wheat farmer protected in the American markets when his exports of wheat and wheat flour during the last fiscal year, 1920, aggregated $546,000,000, compared with imports of like products aggregating less than $40,000,000? This Nation has exported millions of bushels of wheat each year for three-quarters of a century. During the past eight years the annual amount of wheat exported has ranged from 132,000,000 bushels up to 332,000,000 bushels, while the imports have been insignificant in comparison. The United States and Canada each exports and sells an annual surplus of wheat, and both the foreign and home prices are fixed alike in the world's market at Liverpool. Some Canadian wheat passes through the United States on its way to foreign markets. During the first 10 months of the present year the United States exported $668,000,000 worth of wheat and wheat flour. It is clear that any trivial advantage the farmer might now and then receive from a tariff on wheat and products in a similar situation would be infinitesimal when compared to the greatly increased prices he would be obliged to pay for all he buys under the operation of a high protective tariff.

The proposed high-tariff measure carries 15 cents per bushel on corn imports, although we are annually producing 3,000,000,000 bushels, while the imports have been running around 2,000,000, 3,000,000, and 5,000,000 bushels for such years as 1916, 1917, and 1918, and our exports for the same years have been 40,000,000, 67,000,000, and 49,000,000, respectively. During some years a few million bushels come in from Argentina and go to the corn-products companies to be manufactured and reexported, or are taken and fed at near-by Atlantic coast points. These nominal imports, if absolutely prohibited, would not affect our home prices for corn one one-thousandth of 1 per cent. It is for such theoretical benefits as this that the American farmer is expected in turn to give his support to an entire system of high tariff rates which would enable the domestic manufacturer to rob and plunder him with respect to everything he buys. The American corn raiser has been bringing in a few hundred thousand head of cattle each year in order to feed his corn. The proposed 30 per cent duty on cattle, whether so intended or not, strikes principally at this profitable business and in no remote respect affects the general level of domestic cattle prices. At the behest of a few lemon growers, principally in California, the tariff on lemons is increased 150 per cent, in order that these enterprising gentlemen may fatten their pockets with excessive profits at the expense of 105,000,000 consumers. The peanut grower, for some unfathomable reason, gets a tariff increase of 325 per cent, and he gets it in the face of the statistical fact that the combined import and domestic production of peanuts leaves a deficiency for domestic consumption of 220,000,000 pounds for the years 1919–20, when compared with the preceding year. France's annual imports of peanuts before the war were approximately fifteen times as great as those of America's best year; Holland's and Germany's were more than twice as great, while Italy's and Belgium's regular imports were about equal to America's in her banner year, ending June 30,.1918. During recent years new and extensive uses of peanut products for oil, butter, candy, and other confection purposes have caused an enormous consumption. The result has been that during the past one or two years the oil millers have been put out of business because of an utter lack of an adequate supply of peanuts from any source. The confectioners are using the entire product. For the first 10 months of the present year there were imported 110,788,209 pounds of shelled peanuts at an import price of 9½ cents per pound and 8,596,000 pounds of unshelled at 9 cents per pound, while the imports of less than 700,000 pounds during October, 1920, were at corresponding prices of 7½ cents and 7 cents per pound. An added freight differential to the point of general distribution amounting to 1¾ cents per pound in favor of the domestic producer would give him the combined tariff and freight advantage over western imports of 4¾ cents per pound. These combined conditions of the peanut industry show that the proposed tariff measure would give protection with a vengeance, although not in the least necessary for the success of the domestic industry in the light of the history of its rapid and phenomenal development. It is only another instance of the robbery of the masses of the people by the high protective tariff.

We have had the wool controversy with us since the American woolen manufacturer and woolgrower in 1867 entered into a hard and fast compact to maintain what was finally developed into schedule K. I am sorry I have not the time to enter into the details of the wool and woolen situation. It is a long story. In the first place, the bulk of the wool, the prices of which it is proposed to protect by this bill, has passed out of the hands of the grower and is in the hands of speculators, middlemen, and manufacturers, with the result that the former would derive no benefits to this extent, while the latter are neither seeking nor entitled to any benefits. I may add that this is the situation with respect to most of the products it is now sought to protect, but it is all done in the name of the farmer, although much or most of the commodities are now out of his hands. There has been a slump in wool prices throughout the world and it was in no sense due to the presence or absence of any tariffs. Due to a lack of normal consumption of wool during the war period, large surplus stocks of wool are on hand in all wool centers, including America, the Argentine, England, and Australia. The British Government paid 31 cents per pound for 2,500,000 bales, most of which it now has on hand. In this state of world congestion of raw wool the Australian and English interests have organized what is called a realization commission and financed it for the purpose of carrying their surplus wool stocks until the manufacturing industry revives and with the view of unloading these stocks gradually as improved and improving market conditions make justifiable. This course contemplates that in the early future the world will begin to buy woolen clothing and other woolen manufactures as was its custom prior to the war, and this will enable the woolen manufacturing concerns to resume operations which are now curtailed some 50 per cent, with the result that fairly reasonable prices will be ultimately realized for existing stocks as well as coming crops of wool. In my judgment, some similar agency in the United States is the only feasible remedy for real and merited relief to the wool grower. To dam up our present and prospective wool supply in the United States with no definite plan or concert of action to regulate the surplus distribution and to conserve the market situation will result in greater losses to the American woolgrower than those great woolgrowing countries will suffer in the world market stabilized as it will be under the operations of the realization commission.

I well recall that during many different years while schedule K was in operation prices in the world market at London were higher than our domestic prices in the market at Boston, but our American woolgrower did not get the benefit of them, because he had long since placed himself exclusively at the mercy of the American woolen manufacturer. Our present annual exports of wool and woolen manufactures amount to $56,000,000. There is no reason why this business should not be greatly expanded from year to year. If we reverse our policy, however, and return to schedule K, it would simply mean greatly increased costs to the manufacturer of all woolen articles, much higher prices of the same to all American consumers, and the utter destruction of our export opportunities. The woolgrower and the woolen manufacturer had a temporary estrangement during the nineties, with the result that the representatives of the woolen manufacturers in the person of Mr. S. N. D. North and others came on to Washington and appeared before the Dingley Ways and Means Committee with an elaborate statement setting out the extreme disadvantages the manufacturers suffered by reason of the wool duty, and further averring that no American manufacturer buys foreign wool for any purpose that he can accomplish equally well by the use of domestic wool, and concluding with the statement that if they would—make this tariff bill right, the domestic manufacturer could promise the woolgrower a quick market for all the raw wool he can grow for many years to come.

This view forcibly emphasizes the fact that a tariff levied generally falls not alone on what individuals eat and wear but the burden strikes all classes of business which buy unfinished products and carry them through higher processes to the finished stage, with the result that all production costs are greatly enhanced to the producer as well as the ultimate consumer.

Let me say in conclusion that this high-tariff bill will not improve existing artificial trade conditions in this country, but will only make "confusion worse confounded." We must realize that these price declines and slumps are due to inevitable post-war and other conditions which I have described. We must realize, for example, that the decline in our exports of meat stuffs of $600,000,000 during the first 11 months of this year and the resulting surplus left on our hands had something to do with the slump in prices of certain live stock, and that it is utter folly to allow politicians to attribute every cause and effect, every wrong and remedy, to the tariff.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, has the other side used all of its time?

The CHAIRMAN. All.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in the few minutes allotted to me in which to go over this bill I shall have to decline to yield to anyone, but in these few minutes I hope to be able to justify the action of the Committee on Ways and Means in bringing this bill before you.

I shall not attempt to argue, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] has done, the beauties of the tariff system of England, which has left her fields uncultivated and utterly ruined her agricultural producers, nor shall I attempt to answer those who have criticised the bill but propose to do nothing whatever for the farmers under the present situation.

Mr. Chairman, there are few, even among the farmers themselves, that realize the extent of the calamity that has befallen the whole Nation in the evils which now beset the farmer. A careful calculation shows that the depreciation in the value of crops of this year below the prices which prevailed last year amounts to the staggering sum of $5,000,000,000. The depreciation in the value of live stock, while it can not be easily calculated, is probably one-quarter as much more.

Without taking into account the depreciation in the value of real estate, you can see the condition of the farmer to-day. The Ways and Means Committee found that the wheat market of the Northwest farmers was practically destroyed. It found that the farmer in western Nebraska was burning corn for fuel rather than attempting to put it upon the market. It found that the sheep grower has no market for his wool in certain communities; he could obtain no bid for it whatever. It found under certain circumstances that a sheep grower had better feed his sheep to the hogs, if he had any hogs to feed, than to send them to the Chicago market.

And so I might go down the line with all the products which are included in this bill.

What was the Ways and Means Committee to do under such circumstances? Some gentlemen on my own side proposed that we introduce a comprehensive tariff bill covering all cases, because the plight of the farmer, bad as it was, was also shared to some extent by the manufacturer. But a moment's thought will convince any person, I think, that a comprehensive tariff bill along Republican lines would not have a shadow of a chance of becoming a law under this administration. Was the Ways and Means Committee, then, to sit down and do absolutely nothing, or was it to act? And what was its action to be? Some members said that we ought at least to bring in a bill covering all agricultural products. But such action would have been as futile, as fatal to any chance of the bill becoming a law, as it would be to introduce at this time the Payne-Aldrich bill.

What could be done by the committee? Just exactly what was done, and that alone. Only such a bill stood any chance of becoming a law at this time. We reported a nonpolitical bill, selecting articles as to which there had been the most depreciation and as to which there was the greatest crisis in the market, and attempting to give relief to all parts of the country, from Maine to California, from Oregon to Florida, from Minnesota to Louisiana, to help them all some.

Now, if some gentlemen say, very properly, perhaps, that even considering this as a bill applying to this particular emergency, there are articles included in the bill which ought not to be included in an emergency bill, I for one will grant it. If they say that there are some articles that are excluded that ought to be included in this bill, I will admit it. But because a bill is not what I want or possibly what they want, ought we at this time to refuse any aid whatever to the farmer? I say no. The time has come for action, and immediate action, if we are going to get any benefit from our action now. The situation is such that it can not wait.

Now, there are some gentlemen who have said, "Why is frozen beef omitted from this bill?" So far as I am concerned, I would be glad to see frozen beef put in this bill. I would have been glad to see butter put in this bill. Beef and butter are both articles which are produced in enormous quantities by my own State. But it is a fact, nevertheless, that, bad as is the situation of those who produce beef and those who produce butter, it is not as bad as the situation of those who produce wool and mutton. Butter has depreciated, but not to the same extent as many agricultural products. Cattle have declined in the Chicago market on an average about 27 per cent from the prices of last year. Sheep have declined over 50 per cent—about 52 per cent, I think, to speak accurately. The wool market is destroyed, and for that reason we seek, if possible, to benefit the woolgrower by putting him in a situation where there will not be further depreciation in wool by reason of the importation of the enormous stores of wool and mutton still held in Australia and New Zealand awaiting a market in this country.

While, as I have said, we have endeavored to reach every part of this country—and in framing the bill I may say candidly and frankly that I, for my part, thought there was no use to bring in the bill unless we could so shape it that it would command votes enough to override a presidential veto—we have not framed this bill, as some think, without a substantial basis. In a rough way we have endeavored to put nothing in the bill the value of which had not depreciated over 50 per cent since the same time last year; and in a rough way—it may not be entirely accurate, owing to the limitations upon our time—nothing has been excluded from the bill except articles that have not depreciated to that extent in the same period. And I might say also that no article was excluded unless, in the opinion of the majority of the committee, it would most seriously imperil the chances of the bill becoming a law.

So, gentlemen, here is the situation: We were told by those who are suffering the most, the sheep grower, the wool grower, and the cattle raiser, that if we do not act upon this matter at once there is no use of taking any action at all. If it goes beyond the holidays I fear that they will receive no benefit from it. We have prepared this measure somewhat hastily because of the necessities of the case. It is not in all respects logical. It is not in all respects scientific. It was the best that we could do in the time that was given to us to meet the pressing emergency that besets the American farmer. There may be some who say that because this is not a comprehensive bill and does not take care of the manufacturer also, they will not support it. If so, I think that they are making a mistake, so far as the interests of the manufacturer are concerned. Destroy the farmer and you destroy the market of the manufacturer. This is not a local emergency. It is a national calamity that is upon us at this time, which we have sought to meet as best we could by the bill that we now present to you. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. Three o'clock having arrived, the Clerk will read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the day following the passage of this act, for the period of 10 months, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the following articles, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), the rates of duty which are prescribed by this section, namely:

1. Wheat, 30 cents per bushel.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Page 1, line 10, after the word "bushel," strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and the following:

"Provided, however, That the rates herein to be levied shall not apply to wheat purchased prior to the 20th day of December, 1920, and that said wheat shall be permitted to enter under the now prevailing rate, under proper regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio reserves a point of order.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this bill which materially affects the duties upon many of our imports was introduced in the House at the close of the day, day before yesterday. Just one day therefore has elapsed between the day of its introduction and the day of its consideration upon the floor. Within almost a matter of hours preceding the introduction of this measure responsible leaders in Congress were informing the people that no revision of the tariff would be possible during the present session.

An examination of the bill will disclose many items. Ordinarily this would call for exhaustive hearings with notification to those desiring to appear either for or against the measure. Yet upon this measure practically no hearings have been had with the exception of the item of wool. Information which is ordinarily available to Members as to the effect of the measure is not available and can not be under these circumstances. Yet we are asked to pass this bill this afternoon. Why? Because of the emergency. Granted. This does not relieve us, however, of the obligation to act wisely and for the best interests of the whole country. In our endeavor to relieve one situation which is bad by the passing of remedial legislation we must avoid creating greater emergencies by acting too hastily.

Mr. Chairman, I represent almost altogether a city constituency. Yet in a truer sense I am a representative of the Nation. Furthermore, no city can prosper while the rural district surrounding it is in jeopardy.

The producer should be encouraged. Many of them are now having serious difficulty. This has led to many proposed remedies, many of which, in my judgment, would injure rather than help the farmer. In order to prescribe the proper remedy we must first ascertain the cause. Personally, I think the farmer needs markets and that little can be accomplished toward furnishing new markets and consequent increased demand for his produce until the world and especially Europe recovers from the late war. In the meantime let us legislate carefully and wisely and endeavor to avoid injuring some while trying to aid others.

I take it that there is no intention on the part of this committee to injure or destroy any business or any individual. You want to avoid that. Hence I have offered the proposed amendment.

Heretofore in the enactment of a tariff measure the business interests of the country have had ample notice of a possible revision. They have been able to make their contracts with that in mind. All of a sudden comes this bill, introduced on the 20th of December. Yet, here is the item of wheat and wheat products that we are considering in this bill. We have the following situation confronting certain interests in the city of Minneapolis which I represent:

In my district is the largest primary wheat market in the world. We have large milling concerns there employing thousands of men. Long before this measure was ever contemplated contracts were made for the importation of wheat from Canada, and upon wheat from those contracts to be received here during the months of December and January millers made contracts for the sale of flour. If this bill should become a law before the end of January, so that this wheat can reach this country under the contracts made, it would mean the levying of a duty of 30 cents a bushel on that wheat. The effect would be obvious and might lead to either the bankruptcy of the concern or the repudiation of contracts and resulting litigation.

I take it that is not intended, and I therefore submit this amendment to the House providing that wheat coming in on contracts made prior to the introduction of this bill shall not be affected by the provisions of the act.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Why did not the millers make their contracts with the farmers of the United States for their wheat?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. For the simple reason that the millers of Minneapolis and the millers of the whole country are in business under existing laws, and I may say to the gentleman that so far as I have been able to ascertain there is not a grain man nor miller in the city of Minneapolis who would not gladly see the duty on wheat restored. But they are competing with world conditions, and under the circumstances they naturally avail themselves of all the markets available.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Does not the gentleman believe that if his amendment were adopted it would eventually be determined that practically all of the wheat they want to import was under contract prior to the 20th of December?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No; I think not. Contracts previous to the 20th of December can be easily ascertained, and there is a provision in my amendment for issuance of proper regulations by the Secretary of the Treasury in order to safeguard that very thing.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is it not entirely feasible that the buyer of wheat, the manufacturer, will add the loss that he suffers to the price of the flour that he sells?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If he does that, then the consumers are going to suffer by it.

Mr. FESS. That is the point.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It is pretty near time in the consideration of this legislation that we consider the consumers of the country and try to deal fairly with both producer and consumer.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Under the terms of the gentleman's amendment, as I heard it read, all that is required is a contract entered into prior to the 20th of December.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. It may be a verbal contract, it may be a written contract, no consideration may have been stated, and I am quite sure the adoption of the amendment would wipe out the tariff.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Contracts under this provision would inevitably have to be in writing or by wire, or some kind of a written contract.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. It is claimed by the millers that they always hedge all purchases on the grain exchanges so that they can save themselves against loss. If they have done that, why are they going to lose?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If they did that at the time it would be with the idea that the law was going to remain as it is now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It seems to me the point of order will lie against the amendment because it provides a new method of dealing with the importation of wheat. This is simply a tariff bill putting a certain rate on these items. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment providing that in certain cases the tariff duty shall not lie, but that some other method may be employed by the Secretary of the Treasury under certain regulations to be made by him. The present occupant of the chair has been the chairman of the committee a number of times in the consideration of revenue laws. I think he is one of those who believe that the rule with regard to amendments of revenue laws should be construed very strictly. I concede that this is a pretty close case, because it deals with items referred to in the bill; but because it offers a different method, a method we can not ascertain, because it is to be provided under regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, it is a violation of paragraph 3, Rule XXI.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, in which it is provided that the duty provided for in the bill shall not apply to contracts entered into prior to December 20, and that regulations shall be made by means of which it may be ascertained whether or not a violation of the provisions included in the amendment is practiced by those who are receiving wheat from foreign countries, the gentleman from Ohio argues that this is a different subject. I do not see how he can contend for that. This provision of the bill contemplates the assessment of 30 cents a bushel on wheat coming into the United States.

The amendment provides that the 30 cents a bushel shall not be levied on any wheat that may come in under a contract entered into prior to a certain date, and that regulations shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury under which this wheat under contract may come in.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman think that a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make regulations touching conditions of the admission of this grain to this country is germane to this item?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I think it is quite germane. In the first instance, we levy the tax, and the Secretary of the Treasury does, under that provision of the bill, whether we say so in the bill or not, make regulations touching the amount of tax that shall be collected, and I can see no reason why under the rules of the House he could not also be authorized to make further regulations to provide for the method of the importation of any wheat that may come in under contract. I do not think that it in any way violates any rule under which the committee is operating, but on the contrary is germane in every respect, and I think that it deals with the same subject and only provides that contracts entered into in good faith prior to the enactment of this law shall not be violated.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The operation of the amendment as I understand it merely limits the tariff imports. The bill provides a tariff on wheat, and the amendment places a limitation exempting a certain kind of wheat.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not exempt a certain kind of wheat. It does not go to the kind of wheat at all. It simply makes an exemption on the importation of wheat which comes into the country under contracts already entered into, the legality of which no one can question.

Mr. REAVIS. I expressed myself rather awkwardly. I did not mean the kind or character of wheat. I did not mean it in that way. The sole effect of this amendment is a limitation upon the tariff that contract wheat shall come in free of duty.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think the gentleman states it now correctly. Contract wheat under contracts made before the enactment of the law; otherwise the law that we are considering would be retroactive, and if I understand the policy of the Congress it is that the laws shall become effective after they are passed and not before they are passed. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] provides that this law shall not be retroactive where contracts exist that were legitimately entered into prior to the consideration of the bill or its enactment into law, and the gentleman stated very frankly on the floor that nobody knew that this bill was coming up for consideration and that it was only fair to assume that anybody in the United States could enter into a contract that was binding before knowledge was in the possession of the public to the effect that this bill was to come up for consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Chairman asked the gentleman from Illinois whether he thought that part of the amendment giving the Secretary of the Treasury power to make regulations in reference to admission of this contract wheat was germane to this section. Is it not true that under the terms of the amendment the only function the Secretary of the Treasury would have to perform would be to determine whether it was contract wheat antedating the 20th day of this month?

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose that would be the only function.

Mr. BARKLEY. And is not that a function properly belonging to an administrative officer?

Mr. MADDEN. He would have to make regulations for wheat that was not coming in under contract, and it is perfectly supposable that he would have the right under any law that we might enact to ascertain whether any contracts have been entered into that should be enforced and under which exemptions should be made. I maintain that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, paragraph 3 of Rule XXI is as follows:

> No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter in the bill; nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order that does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

I respectfully submit that the proposition in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] is not obnoxious to either of the inhibitions contained in paragraph 3 of Rule XXI. The amendment is germane. That is to say, Mr. Chairman, the fundamental feature of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is germane to the fundamental feature of the bill.

It does relate to the particular item which is under consideration. The only possible ground upon which it might be held to be out of order is suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] as being contained in the language authorizing the making of regulations by the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not think it would appreciably affect the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota if he were to strike out that part of the language, because there is a provision at the conclusion of this bill, section 4, under which, in my opinion, taken in connection with existing law, the Secretary of the Treasury could and would make the regulations necessary to identify the wheat that is now under contract. But that is not the main purpose of the gentleman's amendment. That is merely an administrative proposition. The test, the acid test, it seems to me to apply, is the first part of the gentleman's amendment. What is intended by that; and this important question should not be permitted to turn upon a mere incidental administrative provision. I respectfully submit that it is not obnoxious to either of the provisions laid down in paragraph 3 of Rule XXI, or any other rule of the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, because of the probable effect of the ruling on this point of order on future tariff bills, it is rather an important matter. This bill itself provides for making regulations by the Secretary of the Treasury. That is, it carries existing provisions of law and makes them applicable to this bill. I do not see how it could be contended that the regulations proposed in the amendment are not germane to the provisions of the bill itself. It seems to me the only question is whether it is germane to the paragraph under consideration. Here is an item in the bill that provides for a duty of 30 cents a bushel on wheat. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] offers an amendment providing that that duty shall not apply to certain wheat, and adds to that a provision for the method of determining as to what wheat shall be exempted from the payment of the 30 cents a bushel, which certainly is germane. Providing a method for ascertaining what wheat will not be subject to duty is clearly germane to the levying of the duty.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose the gentleman from Minnesota, instead of offering an amendment relating to the duty on wheat, had proposed to amend this particular item by proposing an administrative provision with respect to the levying of that duty. Does the gentleman from Illinois think that that administrative provision would be in order as an amendment to this item?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I am inclined to think it would not be. But that is not the question, Mr. Chairman. If this item provided that certain wheat should be subject to a duty, then it would be in order to add to that either in the original bill or by way of an amendment. A method of determining what wheat is was thus defined where there is no definition of wheat in the bill itself. That is a distinction which seems to be perfectly patent. Here is a proposition in the bill for the levying of a duty on all wheat. If the bill had provided for the levying of a duty only on a certain class of wheat, then it would be in order to add by way of an amendment a method of determining the class of wheat, because that would be germane to the provision, essential to the provision. That is the gentleman's amendment now.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I am not in sympathy with this amendment and shall vote against it; but I think myself it is very important, indeed, that a rule of this character should be determined correctly. Now, after all, everyone will admit, I think, who has any knowledge whatever of the application of these rules that it is perfectly proper and perfectly germane to make an exception from the operation of an act. In this bill a certain duty is levied on wheat. It is perfectly proper to except certain classes of wheat from the operation of that act. There has been numerous decisions that would support that contention. In this case it seems to me that it is equally clear that the administrative feature of the amendment, which merely says that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power to make rules for the determination of the fact of the exception and the question of fact is whether or not a claim for the exception is well founded or not, is perfectly germane to the exception itself and does not formulate a new rule that might be applicable only to a general exception. I think the statement made by the Chairman would be clearly out of order; but this is not the case. If it is germane to make an exception from the operation of a statement or rule made in the bill, which certainly no one could contend was not the case, it is equally germane to make it effective by provisions that are not antagonistic or otherwise out of order, and for that reason it seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman is not subject to the objection which has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is not unmindful of the importance of the question which he is about to decide. Because of its importance and because a decision with respect to this particular item may have applicability to amendments which may be offered hereafter, the Chair will take the liberty of going into the matter at somewhat greater length than might otherwise be the case. The general rule of the House relative to the admissibility of amendments is found in clause 7 of Rule XVI. The Chair will only read a part of that clause, which is as follows:

> And no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

That clause has been construed to require that an amendment proposed shall be germane not only to the general subject of the bill but as well to the paragraph to which it is offered as an amendment. This general rule has been in force in the House for many years. There is another rule, which is applicable only to revenue bills, adopted in the Sixty-second Congress. That rule was read by the gentleman from Tennessee, but the Chair takes the liberty of reading it again:

> No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter which is in the bill, nor shall any amendment to any item in such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

It seems clear to the Chair that this rule, adopted subsequently to the adoption of the original rule relative to admissibility, must have been intended to further limit and restrict the character of amendments admissible under the general rule applicable to the admission of amendments. That is to say, that the House intended by the adoption of this rule to adopt a stricter rule with respect to the admission of amendments to revenue bills than would apply to amendments to general legislation. It is not the province of the Chair to ameliorate the rigor of this rule; that is the province of the House. It is the province of the Chair to apply it in all its strictness in accordance with its specific terms, and the Chair wishes to direct particular attention to the fact that this rule does not provide merely that an amendment shall be germane to the paragraph but that it shall be germane to the item to which it is offered as an amendment. Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is as follows:

Provided, however, That the rate herein to be levied shall not apply to wheat purchased previous to the 20th day of December, 1920, and that such wheat shall be permitted to enter under the now prevailing rate under proper regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Chair has no doubt that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, exclusive of that portion of the amendment which provides for the issuance of regulations by the Secretary of the Treasury, is germane to the item to which it is offered as an amendment, and is in order. If the latter part of the amendment is intended to accomplish anything, it must be intended to extend the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the issuance of regulations and to amend the authority which the Secretary now has. That is an administrative provision, and it may be in order to another portion of the bill, but the Chair thinks it is not germane to the item under consideration under the strict rule which must be applied to it. The mere fact that it is attached to a provision which is germane does not make it germane itself. If such a rule were adopted by the process of offering an amendment which is germane, there might be brought into consideration by the House propositions which were not germane and which would wholly destroy the purpose and effect of the rule under consideration. The Chair realizes, of course, that it is an important question, and the Chair admits the possibility of error on the part of the Chair and would welcome an appeal in order that the question may be determined by the House.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire personally, as far as I am concerned, to appeal from the decision of the Chair, but before the Chair announces his final decision I trust it may not be an impertinence if I venture to direct his attention to the fact that the Chair is in error in stating that the second provision of paragraph 3 of Rule XXI provides that an amendment must be germane to the item in the bill. It does not so read. It must be germane to the bill. That is by the provision of the first section.

But the language—and I call the Chair's particular attention to it, because there is to my mind a clear distinction; I think it was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]—the language is, "Nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed." The word "germane" is not used in connection with the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is glad to have the gentleman from Tennessee call his attention to that matter, but in determining the matter in the way he has decided to determine it the Chair thinks he is following a long line of precedents already established which he is not at this time willing to overrule. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. I have only one copy of the amendment here and it is a revision of the previous amendment. All I desire to do is to offer the amendment as offered before, but with the words "under proper regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury" omitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment as it is now proposed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Page 1, line 10, after the word "bushel," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following:

"Provided, however, That the rate herein to be levied shall not apply to wheat purchased prior to the 20th day of December, 1920, and that said wheat shall be permitted to enter under the now prevailing rates."

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that, without any language directing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue proper regulations, he would have that power in order to avoid a possible fraud upon the act. I may say, however, that if it is the opinion, or should be the opinion, of anyone that he does not have that power, upon the adoption of this amendment I propose, later on in the discussion of the bill, at the proper place, to offer an amendment authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to put forth suitable regulations, in the event of the adoption of this amendment. I take it that no one in this House desires to pass any kind of emergency legislation here that would have the direct result of impairing the obligations of large contracts involving a serious loss to many people.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will not prevail. Not to my knowledge has there ever been a tariff bill passed by this House with such a provision in it, and I want to say to the House that it is no greater hardship upon men who may have made contracts prior to the introduction of this bill than the provision which he would have written into the law. If this amendment is adopted, it would work a hardship upon the farmers of this country who have wheat to sell. The gentleman from Minnesota has proposed by his amendment to shift the burden from the speculator to somebody else. That is to say, you propose to shift the burden from the manufacturer of flour to the man who produces wheat. That is the substance of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. In a minute.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FORDNEY. In a minute. Let me say to the gentleman that since the 3d day of December there has entered the ports of this country from two ports on Lake Superior—Fort William and Port Arthur—56,000,000 bushels of wheat, and the newspapers say there were 72,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat shipped to those ports for export to the United States in addition to those shipments; and yesterday papers stated that from one town in Canada—I think Brockville—22,000 cars of wheat have come into the United States. That is from one point alone. The effect of this amendment, if adopted, would be that there would be at least 200,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat come into our market to the detriment of the farmers who are producing wheat, to whom we are trying to give aid by the adoption of this emergency measure.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman has stated that there is no precedent in tariff legislation for a provision of this kind.

Mr. FORDNEY. That I know of.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. May I not ask the gentleman if there has ever been a precedent where a tariff bill, involving so much as this does, has been reported out on the 20th of December and within two days thereafter is taken up for a vote by the House? It seems to me the circumstances are entirely different.

Mr. FORDNEY. The point I make is that this is an emergency measure, designed to give immediate relief to the man who would be protected from the destruction of his home industry by importations, and the quick action of the committee is for the purpose of giving temporary and immediate relief. The gentleman's amendment would prevent that very purpose which is set out in the bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I take it that the gentleman in providing for the agricultural industry does not desire to injure any other industry in the country?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not want to protect the speculator as against the producer. That is my purpose, and the effect of the gentleman's amendment is to protect the speculator and not the producer. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I believe I have the floor.

There are three reasons, it seems to me, why this amendment should be defeated. In the first place, nearly all of the contract wheat negotiated for by the millers and big contractors is by telephone and memorandum. That is, they go to the telephone and simply make a little memorandum of the contract that is made. It may involve a great amount of wheat, but it is simply a contract made by the telephone and memorandum made. It is rarely done by formal contract. So that it would open the door to a great deal of fraud to permit contracts that were entered into, or presumed to be entered into, prior to a certain date to be admitted free. If this amendment should pass, all of the wheat contracted for importation prior to December 26 could be delivered as a free-list article regardless of the time of delivery.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman does not mean to convey to the House the idea that Canadian wheat is imported into the United States upon mere telephone communications?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not know how it is imported, but I am telling you how the millers buy the wheat. I know how it is usually done. I do not know how it comes over the border. I do not see why there should not be telephonic communication across the border. And the gentleman's amendment does not limit its application to formal contracts in writing.

There is another reason why I do not think it should be permitted, and that is this: A great deal of the wheat is contracted for over a period of months. A man may enter into a contract this month for the delivery of so much wheat per day, per week, or per month, covering the season. So a man may have wheat contracted for to be delivered through a five or six months' period. If you permit such a contract made prior to December 20 to be excepted from this bill, you might as well strike the item from the bill, since the man with a big contract for future deliveries could absolutely flood the country with his product.

Another objection is that it would give a tremendous advantage to the millers who happen to live close to the border over the inland miller. The border miller being close to the source of importation usually brings in most of the wheat. He therefore has his contracts for foreign wheat. Under these contracts, if this amendment were adopted, he could get wheat from over in Canada if he had it contracted for before the date of December 20 at a much less price than would be practicable for the inland miller and would put the inland miller out of business.

I submit that all three of these reasons are absolutely unanswerable, and that the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. To me this is a very sad hour to think that the Ways and Means Committee of the great House of Representatives in the United States of America would bring up such a hypocritical camouflage measure when the people who produce the real life-giving wealth of this country are in distress. To my utter amazement my good friend the gentleman from Texas, a member of the committee, came forward with a Republican speech in behalf of this hypocritical bill. Whatever may be the verdict, the farmer—and when I say the farmer I mean the man who tills the soil—has sense enough to know that if this Congress passes such a measure as this it is putting the harpoon in him under false pretenses. [Laughter.]

Why is it that this bill is brought here after 85 per cent of the aggregate of the articles mentioned in it are out of the farmers' hands and in the hands of speculators? Why is it that this Congress comes forward with a bill with a limitation on it of 10 months? If you figure the time when he plants his next crop and when it is in full bloom ready to begin the harvest, the law goes out of existence, and when he begins to gather his next crop he has nothing on earth to safeguard him against what you now pretend to be an emergency.

If this policy is good to bridge the farmers over an emergency, surely it would be a fine permanent policy to prevent the recurrence of low prices for farm products. These wise Republicans know this measure is a fake.

I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that a few years ago I read his splendid address which he made on this floor in behalf of the people of this country when he was speaking against the tariff on lumber. Now the gentleman comes forward with a new doctrine. If his position was good then, it was good for all time. How can any man who stands for the great producers of this Republic come forward with a doctrine under the pretense of an emergency that he knows has operated for years as an oppressor of the poor of this Republic?

If you analyze the subject, take all the items included here under the pretense of protection you can see that the man who produces it has no protection. In the fall of the year, in the closing hours of 1920, when the farmers of the country have raised bumper crops under conditions that cost them great sums of money, and the bulk of these crops are out of the hands of the farmer, the American Congress proposes to do what? To let the beef packers bring into the United States millions of tons of frozen meat. There is nothing said here except an ad valorem of 20 per cent. How is anyone going to drive cattle on hoof from South America to the United States? I asked the gentleman when he was talking about $2 on a lamb, how he is going to bring lambs over here into the United States.

Under this bill no live stock can be imported, but all frozen mutton comes in free of duty. Is that in the interest of the farmer? Every farmer knows it is strictly for the packer's benefit. I want to say to you, sir, that the records in the city of Chicago show that farmers realize 33 cents apiece on sheep sold there; but you go down here to the market and pay 45 cents a pound for two ribs of mutton with a mouthful of meat on them. [Laughter.] Then do not tell me that you are protecting the farmer here. This measure is the most deceptive thing that has ever been brought before the Congress to try to fool the man in distress.

Then they have put in here 7 cents a pound on long-staple cotton. If they want to be honest, why did they not put it on all cotton? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. I should like to have an extension of five minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I move that all debate on this amendment close in seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that debate on this amendment close in seven minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. I say if gentlemen wanted to be honest instead of endeavoring to fool the farmer, why did they not put that duty on all cotton? Out of the 13,000,000 bales of cotton raised in the United States there are only about 75,000 bales that come within the purview of this pretended protection to the farmers. You have insulted the intelligent farmers of this country. Under the pretext of protecting the farmers, but in reality letting the tariff barons of this country rob the people, you are coming here with this kind of a measure; and some people who come here as Democrats and friends of the people are foolish enough to fall into your trap of plunder and protection and your conspiracy to exploit their constituents, as you will do at the next session of Congress. [Laughter and applause.]

Another thing, I want to ask my friends from Louisiana who expect to be for the protection of the farmers, where is there a line in this bill to protect the man who raises sugar? You know that to-day the man who produces sugar in the State of Louisiana is losing 3 cents a pound on every pound of sugar that he puts on the market. Yet you pretended friends of the producers have not put a line in this bill to protect that man, who is facing disaster to-day. My friends, this measure, in all decency and fairness to the American people, ought to be defeated, and how any Democrat can stamp under foot the principles of his party and go over, boots, breeches, hide, and tallow, into the protection camp of the Republicans I can not understand. [Applause and laughter.]

The legislation herein recommended provides for the following rates of duty:

Wheat flour, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Corn and maize, 15 cents per bushel.
Beans, 2 cents per pound.
Peanuts, 3 cents per pound.
Potatoes, 25 cents per bushel.
Onions, 45 cents per bushel.
Rice, uncleaned, 1¼ cents per pound; cleaned, 2 cents per pound.
Lemons, 1½ cents per pound.
Peanut oil, 26 cents per gallon.
Cottonseed, coconut, and soya-bean oil, 20 cents per gallon.
Cattle, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Sheep, 1 year old, $2 per head; less than 1 year old, $1 per head.
Fresh mutton and lamb, 2½ cents per pound.
Long-staple cotton, 7 cents per pound, with a compensatory duty of 7 cents per pound in addition to existing rates upon the manufactures thereof.
Unwashed wool, 15 cents per pound.
Washed wool, 30 cents per pound.
Scoured wool, 45 cents per pound, with a compensatory duty of 45 cents per pound in addition to existing duties upon the manufactures of wool.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, there are three reasons why the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] ought not to prevail. First, probably all of this wheat that has been bought by the millers has been bought to arrive and it will be across the border before this bill is signed.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Under the contracts it can not be compelled to arrive until the 31st of January.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Notwithstanding that, the great bulk of this wheat is bought to arrive and it will be across the border before this bill is signed.

Secondly, the millers claim at least that they always hedge against all purchases, and if they have hedged against these purchases they will save themselves from loss.

The third reason is this, that if you adopt this amendment it will open the doors wide to fraud. You might just as well strike this item out entirely as to adopt this amendment. It would defeat the purpose of the bill.

For the reasons just mentioned, the flour millers ought not to complain. If it is the grain gamblers the gentleman has in mind to protect, I want to express the hope that the Members of this House will waste no sympathy on them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, in line 10, page 1, to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY: Page 1, line 10, strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, 25 cents is the Payne-Aldrich rate, and I want to see how much higher we are going to make this bill than the Payne-Aldrich bill, which was rejected by the people two years after it was adopted.

Under a tariff of 25 cents a bushel on wheat an average of 100,000 bushels per annum was brought into the United States, and that is all. Under a tariff of 25 cents a bushel on wheat from 34,000,000 to 259,000,000 bushels of wheat were exported. Now we are afraid of 100,000 bushels from Canada when we have been exporting from 34,000,000 bushels to 259,000,000 bushels of wheat. We are seeking to impose this tariff of 30 cents a bushel on wheat, 5 cents more than the Payne-Aldrich rate, in the absence of any information at all on the subject. No man knows what is the visible supply of wheat in the United States to-day. So far as the information submitted to this committee goes, they do not know anything about it at all. No man knows how much more wheat can come in here from Canada nor what the visible supply of Canadian export wheat is. The information I get is that the supply of wheat in Canada for export purposes is about exhausted. The world supply may be about exhausted. Twenty million starving people in China will absorb a considerable portion of it. It will be seven months before our crop of winter wheat in the United States will reach the market. We do not know whether our winter wheat crop is going to be destroyed by the cold weather of the approaching winter, or by the fly and the chinch bug of the approaching spring.

In the minority views which I filed here I made the statement that ordinarily, in fact usually, Canadian wheat commands a higher price in Canada than our wheat commands in Minneapolis.

The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], who ought to know something about the markets of his own State and Canada, takes issue with that statement and says that it is not true. Canadian wheat is better than ours, and Canadian wheat does nearly always, if not always, command a higher price in Winnipeg than the American Blue Stem and Duram wheat and other hard wheats of the North command on the Minneapolis market. For the benefit of the gentleman from North Dakota I want to read the market reports as published in the Chicago Tribune of Saturday last, December 18. In Winnipeg No. 1 northern wheat was selling for $1.94 and in Minneapolis it was selling for $1.63. No. 2 northern wheat was selling last Saturday in Winnipeg for $1.90, while in Minneapolis the same grade was selling for only $1.59. No. 3 northern wheat last Saturday was selling in Winnipeg for $1.83, and was selling in Minneapolis for only $1.55. These are the differences that usually prevail in these markets, and ordinarily under free wheat, with exchange at a parity, Winnipeg will be a better market for the wheat of North Dakota than Minneapolis will be.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. No; I can not. I know what the gentleman is going to say. He is going to say that there is a difference in the purchasing power of Canadian money.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I was going to ask why they are shipping wheat into this country by the millions of bushels from Canada if that is so.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. If the gentleman had read my minority views he would have learned that it is on account of the difference in exchange. That is the only reason, but the difference in exchange does not mean that a Canadian dollar will not buy as much of the necessaries of life in Canada as an American dollar in the United States. I was in Canada lately, and as a matter of fact a Canadian dollar will buy more of the necessaries of life in Canada than an American dollar will buy of the same things in the United States. Because of the difference in exchange, because we are sending to Canada so many more goods than Canada is sending to us, there is this difference in exchange.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. In the Payne tariff law there was a duty of 25 cents a bushel on imported wheat. The committee would have made the rate in this bill 25 cents per bushel were it not for the fact of the difference in exchange on Canadian money. On Saturday last Canadian money was worth 85 cents on the dollar. The difference between 25 cents and 30 cents practically is the difference in the rate of exchange on Canadian money and American money, so that 30 cents a bushel now is practically the same as 25 cents under the Payne tariff law. That is the only reason for making the rate 30 cents a bushel, instead of 25 cents. The difference in exchange on other money than that of Canada is far greater than on Canadian money.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Why does the committee lower the rate on flour and raise it on wheat?

Mr. FORDNEY. Because we believe the difference is as nearly correct as you can figure it, based on the value of wheat which is likely to prevail in the next 60 or 90 days. Twenty per cent on flour is just as near as could be figured out as a proper basis for 30 cents a bushel on wheat.

Mr. SNELL. Under the Payne law there was a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem on wheat flour, and that is reduced from that rate under that bill, but the duty on wheat is raised over what it was in the Payne bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman that I think the rates on flour and wheat in this bill are more scientific than the rates in the Payne bill.

Mr. SNELL. Does that statement apply to the whole bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; but to this rate on flour and wheat as compared with the rates on those commodities in the Payne bill. I believe they are more scientific than the rates in the Payne law. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this amendment close in 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I find myself in a situation where I shall not be able to vote upon this bill, because my arrangements have already been made to leave on an afternoon train, I do not want to leave the Hall with such an important matter pending—a matter that will probably be the last revenue bill to be brought before this body before I retire from it permanently—without leaving some statement as to my position upon it. I do not understand that the committee reported it merely as a revenue measure or that the House is so considering it. I do not understand that this is the prime purpose of the bill. The purpose of the proposed law is to aid agricultural conditions in this Nation, in every section of the Nation, so that as a revenue bill I shall not discuss the tariff question, but I shall discuss the broader aspect of the measure as I understand it.

Coming from a great agricultural State, where this year we have produced more than 4,000,000 bales of cotton, with probably 1,000,000 bales of that crop to be turned back to the earth because there is no market for it, coming from a State having 6,000,000 head of cattle, with more than 2,000,000 acres of land sown in wheat, a State that is about third or fourth in corn production, naturally I am intensely interested in any bill that would at this time bring relief to the farmers of the country and open up a market for the products of the farm during the current year. Does this bill do that? If it does not do it, it ought not to be passed by this Congress.

Take the great agricultural section of my State that produces cotton. You throw out a sop here of 7 cents a pound for long-staple cotton. It is nothing but a gold brick that is held out to the cotton industry of the country. I will tell you what the cotton farmer needs. Cotton is an export crop. In normal times 65 per cent of the crop goes to foreign markets to be consumed. From that great State of mine 90 per cent of the crop does not see the mills of this country, but goes to foreign countries. If you would bring relief to the cotton farmer, it will not be by tariff legislation, but you will have to open up the European markets so that the people in Europe who need this great commodity can come here and purchase this commodity from us. They can not do it. They need credit. They need funds with which to pay, and yet you are holding up here by this bill a power that will prohibit a movement into our territory of a lot of commodities from other countries that would enable the wheels of commerce to move. If you pass this bill, I say to you that other nations will respond to it and close their ports to us, and you will thus clog the wheels of commerce.

Another proposition thrown out as a sop is that on cottonseed oil. The farmers do not produce cottonseed oil. They produce cotton seed. That is their raw material. The oil-mill people buy this raw material. The packers of this country have a dominating influence and power in the control of this commodity—cotton seed and cottonseed oil. The raw product has gone out of the hands of the farmer, it is in the hands of the packers and the manufacturers, and you throw out this as a bait to the farmer, and you protect, if you protect anybody, the packer of this country, just as you do when you refuse to stop frozen meat from coming and put a tariff against live animals. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. I congratulate the committee on their prompt action in reporting the emergency measure. The duty, 30 cents a bushel, is exactly the same as I put in the bill I introduced at the beginning of this session. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] has explained the price of wheat in Winnipeg and Minneapolis and quoted market reports that wheat was higher in Winnipeg than in Minneapolis. He is entirely mistaken, and a great many others are mistaken about these quotations, because the quotation for Winnipeg wheat is not wheat delivered in Winnipeg but for wheat delivered at Port Arthur and Fort William, on Lake Superior, and nearer to the Atlantic seaboard than Minneapolis or Duluth, and it is worth more for export there than at Duluth or Minneapolis. Freight is more from Winnipeg to those points than it is from Winnipeg to Minneapolis or Duluth, therefore the quotations are misleading.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Is it not true that the farmers in western Canada have been agitating to get their wheat into the United States for the past 20 years?

Mr. STEENERSON. I have lived on the Canadian border—within a few miles—and there has not been a year in my recollection that wheat has not come over by carload and wagonload, right across, at a difference of 10, 15, 20, and 25 cents a bushel, and 30 cents a bushel is the very lowest that ought to go into this bill, because we are dealing here with an emergency. The situation is extraordinary. The price of wheat in the United States to-day is not controlled by the law of supply and demand at all. Mr. Barnes, in his recent statement to the Farm Bureau Federation, pointed out that the price is entirely controlled by foreign Governments. There is not a country in Europe buying wheat from us that is not represented by a purchasing agency, and those purchasing agencies have been consolidated so that there is no competitive bidding. There is absolutely no competition. The Governments do the buying, and they resell the wheat in their own countries at a loss, and they have been doing that ever since the war began, for the reason that their policy is to furnish their people, both England, France, Belgium, and Holland, bread at the prewar price. They bought wheat in England when it was $4 a bushel and sold it to the millers and bakers for $1.50 in order that the old penny loaf could be supplied to the people. Otherwise they feared there would be revolution.

It is plain that the ordinary laws of supply and demand are set aside and the purchasers dictate the price. Canada, on our northern boundary, is not only a great wheat-producing country, but is as near to our consuming centers as our own farmers. Ordinarily the bulk of her wheat goes to Europe, but last summer Great Britain ceased buying just as the Canadian crop was ready to move, and thereby forced it on our markets, with the result that the price fell about a dollar a bushel in less than three months.

It looks very much as if this move was cleverly designed for the very purpose of depressing the price in our domestic market, to enable Europe to buy our surplus back at the lower price. In a recent statement Mr. Julius Barnes, president of the United States Grain Corporation, among other things said:

> The largest overseas buyer, whose normal requirements run to practically one-half the overseas purchases of wheat, has bought not a bushel in America since July 29—over three months ago—their policy directed by governmental consideration which would not have affected the usual import merchants abroad. They have abstained from purchasing during the period of crop pressure here and in Canada. This particular importer has been able to so abstain because of large purchases made in America last May, June, and July, providing an enormous advance stock which has carried them through these months and may for some time longer. This is a total deflection of the operation of supply and demand as usually interpreted by commercial judgment. The merchant opinion of the world, freely operating, would never have dared accumulate such a supply of high-priced wheat, and there would never have been thus established the price level recorded last May and June, for nothing in the usual factors of supply and demand justified such urgent purchasing.

And in a recent letter Mr. Flesh, vice president of the Grain Corporation, said:

> DEAR SIR: I have your telegram of November 29, in which you request reports detailing the activities of the United States Grain Corporation up to the time its activities ceased in June, with especial reference to the purchase of wheat and wheat flour by the Allies and others.
> I am pleased to send you herewith the information asked for, in pamphlet form, compiled by Mr. A. L. Russell, statistician. We might add for your information that many of the foreign Governments still continue to control imports of flour and wheat by their own purchases, and while some few individual merchants have been from time to time in the market and have made purchases direct, our belief is that this is camouflage, and that these purchases were made under Government direction. In other words, because of Government restrictions the individual initiative of the foreign buyer for purchases of both wheat and wheat flour has not been permitted.
> If we can be of further service to you in supplying information from this end, do not hesitate to call on us.
> Yours, truly, EDW. M. FLESH,
> Vice President and Treasurer.

The duty of 30 cents per bushel would have made this manipulation of the wheat prices on our exchanges more difficult and perhaps prevented it. This bill, when enacted into law, will tide us over until a more effective protection to our farmers can be devised. It should be borne in mind that nearly all, if not all, of these European Governments have for several years since the war began taken over the sale of wheat in their respective countries, buying at the market price but selling at such a reduced price as to enable them to furnish bread to their people at prewar prices. It is said that in one year the British Government alone spent $300,000,000 in this way. They are all directly interested in getting cheap wheat, and their combined resources are all on the bear side of the market.

It is a power that enables them to nullify the so-called natural laws of supply and demand and to fix the price of our chief food staple in our own market. Such a condition can not be longer tolerated.

Mr. Barnes, speaking of the remedy for this, said:

> If this condition of Government selling and buying promised to long continue one could not, I believe, in simple justice do otherwise than urge the creation of a Government agency to protect our own producers. The injection of Government into business is most undesirable and only justified when our producers have been deprived of the usual protection of free competition.

The Federal Trade Commission recently, on direction of the President, investigated the wheat markets of the country, and among other things reported as follows:

> The following conclusions, submitted with the report herewith, are reached:
> In the matter of possible remedies—
> First. The commission believes, subject, of course, to the opinion of the Attorney General, that the President of the United States has no power under existing law to shut out wheat imports in the present situation by embargo, import duties, or otherwise.
> Second. The President of the United States apparently has certain powers under the Lever Act to stop future trading in wheat. In view of the divergence of opinions upon the possible efficacy of such action and of the failure of the wheat-futures market to perform satisfactorily the functions of stabilization and insurance which its advocates have claimed for it, if regulatory or other action is to be employed in the matter of future trading, consideration of the question by the Congress and legislation not connected with war powers are indicated.
> Third. If foreign Governments are to maintain for some time to come buying commissions with concentrated purchases, the desirability of the United States meeting them through a selling organization should be seriously considered.
> Nineteenth. Concentrated buying by foreign Governments may be deemed necessary, especially where such Governments have fixed prices for flour irrespective of the price of wheat. If such Government buying is manipulative, however, and if it is to be continued for some time to come, it would seem desirable that it should be counteracted by Government selling organization in this country. Even if such foreign buying is not intentionally manipulative, there is no reason why producers in this country should be subjected thereby to loss through unnecessarily fluctuating prices.
> Twentieth. The decline in wheat prices would appear to be in part due to country-wide and world-wide conditions. Abrupt changes in prices and comparatively low prices have occurred following changes in volume of production, variations in demand from year to year, and marketing unevenly distributed through the seasons. An improvement in the situation would follow from greater regularity of production from year to year in so far as such regularity is subject to human achievement and a more even marketing of grain through the year.

I hope that Congress will consider these things and eventually evolve some permanent measure that will protect our farmers against these manifest injustices. Those from the large cities and manufacturing districts who seem to think that this measure is class legislation are utterly mistaken.

Its aim is to restore, not to destroy, the law of supply and demand in our domestic wheat prices—to protect the producer against dumping foreign wheat upon our market to enable them to buy it back at less than cost of production. The prosperity of the farmer is necessary in order that the manufacturer and his labor may be properly paid. Lack of profitable market for the farmer destroys his purchasing power and results, as it now already has resulted, in closed factories, idle labor, and hard times. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

UMI

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] in the course of his closing remarks under general debate called attention to the fact that the industrial section of this country can not afford to have the agricultural section of the country suffer. This is true unselfishly, as he pointed out, and it is true selfishly, because the market is taken from industry if agriculture can not buy. But if that is true, the converse is also true. Agriculture can not truly prosper in this country if the industrial section of the country is not prospering. I admit with all my heart that the agricultural interests of this country need protection to-day. I admit with all my heart the need of relief from the agricultural imports of other countries, but I make the point that industry at this very moment needs protection to quite the same degree that agriculture needs it.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose this bill because it is sectional, because it is unfairly discriminatory, because it is class legislation.

I believe in the principle of the protective tariff. But a protective tariff is justifiable only if it is universal; only if it comprehends in its protection all American-made products which need protection. Admittedly this bill does not do this. It protects only certain agricultural articles—wheat, corn, beans, potatoes, rice, onions, and the like. It protects also a certain favored few of the raw materials from which are made the things we eat and wear. The purpose and intent of this legislation is to keep up artificially the prices of these commodities. If it does not do this its sponsors fail of their deliberate desire.

One-third of the wage earners of the United States are engaged in manufacturing and mechanical industries. About one-third of our total population lives directly upon the wages of those who toil in manufacture and industry. But there is not a line of protection in this bill for these millions. The framers of the legislation have not even thought of them. The result of this bill upon them is to maintain or even to increase the cost of the things they eat and wear. Their burdens are not to be decreased. On the contrary, a still more staggering load is to be heaped upon their shoulders. Their last estate will be worse than their present.

Is this sane or even decently fair tariff building? Is legislation to help only the farmers of the West and South at the expense of their brothers in industry to be tolerated in a Republican Congress pledged by its platform of 1920 to preserve the home market for American labor and industry?

I admit that agriculture sorely needs a protective tariff to-day. But so does industry. Take New England for example. The situation is critical and grows worse daily. The Boston papers of Sunday report that thousands of idle workers are calling for help. One-fourth of all our men and women workers are idle, according to the official report of the division of statistics of the State department of labor and industries. More than one-third of our textile workers are unemployed to-day. Daily further curtailments are announced. Is the condition in the West and South any worse?

The reason for the New England crisis is clear. Take the imports of cotton manufactures. Before the Underwood tariff law of 1913 our imports of manufactures of cotton for the first 10 months of a single calendar year were about $50,000,000. For the first 10 months of 1920 they were $123,000,000. The excess of $75,000,000 in imports represented loss of employment to workers in cotton mills.

Take the imports of wool manufactures. Before the Underwood law our imports for a 10-month period were about thirteen or fourteen millions. For the first 10 months of 1920 they were $51,000,000—four times as great. Unemployment of workers in wool is here again the inevitable corollary.

Take, finally, exports from Japan—a cheap-labor country—with which we, on a high-wage scale basis, can not compete without a protective tariff. Before 1913, under a Republican tariff, our imports for a 10-month period ranged from seventy to eighty millions. For the first 10 months of 1920 they were $387,000,000—a fivefold increase.

Industry is hard hit. It needs protection. It recognizes that agriculture also needs protection. It does not ask something for itself it is unwilling to extend to its fellow. On the selfish ground alone no one industry in our country, however great, can prosper if men and women in other occupations are out of work, for the necessary market then is lacking. Industry simply seeks to be included at once in a general program of protection. Protection to be useful or even defensible must, I repeat, be universal. Prosperity or adversity in the United States is not local, it is nation wide.

So this bill is shortsighted as well as viciously unsound in principle. It will defeat its own purpose. It carries an alliance of western and southern farmers against the industrial sections of the United States. Such a policy if persisted in spells ruin for all. It spells ruin for industry. But it ultimately will spell ruin as well for the beneficiaries of this very legislation.

I can not regard this as true protective legislation. I ask protection not for a favored class or section but for all our people. Industrial America does not seek sectional or class legislation to aid it, but it has a right to demand that neither sectional nor class legislation shall be invoked against it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. All time has expired on this amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first four lines on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the first four lines of the paragraph have not been passed. We have not reached the point that the gentleman refers to.

Mr. SMALL. Then I move to strike out line 1 on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. That matter has not been passed. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wheat flour and semolina, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. SMALL. It is to strike out lines 1 and 2 on page 2.

Amendment offered by Mr. SMALL: Page 2, strike out all of lines 1 and 2.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I would like to have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. FORDNEY. We can not finish this bill to-night unless we hurry along.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Did not the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] get the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. He did.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I seek this opportunity mainly for the purpose of explaining my attitude upon this bill. Unquestionably the drastic decline in the prices of agricultural products has aroused the interest of the entire country, and every normal man would be willing to do all in his power to give relief to the agricultural interests. The prices of almost all other commodities have likewise declined. This bill proposes a high protective tariff upon certain agricultural products, with the avowed purpose of preventing imports and thereby decreasing the supply and increasing the prices of farm products.

I can not vote for the measure. There are times when principle must rise above expediency. [Applause.] If I understand one policy or principle of the Democratic Party, it is in opposition to protection for protection's sake. It is in favor of a tariff in which the primary purpose shall be to raise revenue and not to keep out importations. The purpose of this bill primarily is not to raise revenue, but it is labeled an emergency measure and is intended to restrict or stifle foreign trade. It is hoped thereby to increase the price of certain farm products.

When the next Congress convenes in extra session the Republican majority will report a high protective tariff bill, with protective duties as high as they dare impose, covering all classes of products. What will then be the attitude of Democrats? It will be such a bill as no Democrat can afford to support. And yet any Democrat who votes for the present bill can not consistently oppose such future bill. I would not charge the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, or the majority of that committee, with playing politics, but if it were possible for a great party to play politics with such a serious subject as the welfare of the farmers of the country, they have assuredly done so. They have in the introduction and advocacy of this bill embarrassed Democrats of the House who represent agricultural districts. But it seems to me that if Members on this side of the House are to remain true to one ancient principle of the party to whose doctrines they subscribe, they can not favor a protective tariff for agricultural products simply because the farmers of their districts are favored and oppose in the coming Congress a protective tariff bill probably with more onerous schedules than were contained in the Payne-Aldrich bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be closed in five minutes.

UMI

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate on this amendment be closed in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 53.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL and Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] is recognized.

Mr. FORDNEY. I wish the gentleman from Illinois would yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee on this side are entitled to some time while this discussion proceeds. I am going to insist on the time that I ought to have in order to explain these paragraphs of this bill.

In order to show the little consideration that has been given to the preparation of this bill I want to call your attention to the fact that while the tariff on wheat is fixed at 5 cents per bushel higher than even the Payne-Aldrich rate, the tariff on wheat flour and semolina is placed at 20 per cent ad valorem, which is 5 per cent below the Payne-Aldrich tariff rate. Under the Payne-Aldrich tariff rate we imported from Canada $500,000 worth of wheat flour every year.

Under the Payne-Aldrich tariff rates our exports ranged from 9,000,000 barrels to nearly 22,000,000 barrels, valued at from $48,000,000 to $245,000,000. These rates while less are practically the same; but if we exclude wheat from Canada, the result will be to compel Canada to grind her wheat in her own mills, and even 12 years ago she had mills in which she was grinding wheat. Then if we exclude flour from Canada, too, Canada will simply grind her own wheat, which is better than ours, and export her own flour. As a matter of fact, Canadian wheat and Canadian flour have always come in contact and in competition with American wheat and American flour. They export theirs and we export ours, and in the port cities of Europe we meet Canadian wheat and Canadian flour, and the price is fixed there, and there always has been competition and always will be competition between Canada and the United States both in the production of wheat and the production of flour. It is simply more apparent when it occurs in Minneapolis than it is when it occurs in Liverpool or in any other of the port cities of Europe, that is all.

We do not know how much we are diminishing the food supply of this country by this kind of a bill, and these two paragraphs to which I call attention are so badly balanced that I wonder why gentlemen on the other side, if they want to make this a good bill—even from the standpoint of the Payne-Aldrich tariff, the highest tariff they have ever had—why they do not try to balance it by putting a tariff on flour 5 per cent higher than is proposed here, so that it will equal the rate in the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and balance the bill from their own standpoint. And if, as was stated a while ago, there is a difference in exchange between Canada and the United States, and they are trying to make it up, does not that difference prevail as much in the matter of flour as it does in the matter of wheat, if there is anything in that argument? Why of course it does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I move to amend, on page 2, line 1, by striking out the word "and," and after the word "semolina" strike out the comma and insert "bran and other mill feed wheat products."

Mr. LONGWORTH. I make the point of order that the amendment is out of order under clause 3 of Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Was not all debate closed on this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate was closed on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, coming as I do from a part of the country that believes in a protective tariff second only to its religion, I am in a very peculiar position as far as this bill is concerned, but if there was ever a bill presented to this House which a man coming from my part of the country would be justified in voting against, it is this measure.

This measure purports to be for the relief of the farmer. If it is honestly for the relief of farmers, it should relieve the farmers equally in all parts of this country, but as I look at it, it is simply for the relief of a special class of farmers in a particular part of the country. The farmers in my part of the country—Pennsylvania, New York, and New England—largely produce dairy products. They are to-day producing those products and selling them on the market for less than it costs them to produce them, and it looks now as if they were going to sell them at a still less price. They are in exactly the same position as the farmers in the South and West, as far as their products are concerned, and if you are going to take care of the farmers in those parts of the country, why should you not take care of the farmers of New York, Pennsylvania, and New England? I would be glad to offer an amendment to protect the dairy products of our part of the country, but under the rules of the House that is impossible. I asked certain members of the Ways and Means Committee why these articles were not included in the bill, and they told me that the schedules were made up in order to attract southern votes. [Applause.] Let me tell you, gentlemen of the House, if you bring a measure in here that is properly framed you can pass it without making special provisions in order to attract their votes. As I look at it, they will vote for this measure because it includes articles in which they are interested, but what I want to know is what they are going to do when we have a general tariff bill that interests all parts of the country.

Mr. CARAWAY. Vote against it.

Mr. SNELL. That is exactly what I thought you would do, and I wanted to get you on record. Let me tell you, if I had charge of the revenue-raising bills of the House, you would vote at this time for a tariff to cover all parts of the country and all industries or you would not vote for any. It would not be especially arranged to attract votes from any particular part of the country. As I look at it, it would have been just as easy to have written into this bill "butter, 6 cents a pound," as it was to write "peanuts, 3 cents a pound," and as there were no hearings no one knows any reason why dairy products do not need protection just exactly as much as peanuts, and my section of the country is much more interested in these. In my judgment this is a peanut tariff bill. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

3. Corn or maise, 15 cents per bushel of 56 pounds.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order until after there has been debate.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, coming from the largest corn-producing State in the Union, I want to denounce in unmeasured terms this proposed tariff of 15 cents a bushel on corn. This is the tariff imposed by the Payne-Aldrich bill. We produce in the United States 70 per cent of the world's supply of corn, and of the amount we produce in the United States 80 per cent is consumed on the farms where it is produced, in feeding animals.

This bill proposes to deprive the corn-producing sections of the country of the privilege of bringing in feeding cattle from Canada to help bring up the price of the corn they produce, and at the same time you offer this tariff of 15 cents a bushel, which, under the circumstances of the case, can absolutely accomplish nothing. The corn that we import comes in from the Argentine Republic. We never brought in over eleven or twelve or thirteen million bushels per year of corn from Argentina. We have one county in Illinois which will produce every year more corn than we have ever brought in from the Argentine Republic. This year we are bringing in less corn from the Argentine Republic than we have brought in in the years immediately preceding it.

When corn went to $2 a bushel on American farms, under free corn, we were bringing in 14,000,000 bushels of corn from the Argentine Republic, and we will not bring in 9,000,000 this year.

Nearly all of the imported corn from the Argentine Republic is absorbed by the Corn Products Co., which has a plant at Edgewater, N. Y. They have a plant there built for the purpose of utilizing Argentine corn, built in the old days when there was a tariff on Argentine corn.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any particular quality in Argentine corn that adapts it for use of the Corn Products Co. over American corn?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; it gives the corn sirup a golden hue, makes it a better color than we can make out of our American corn, but this country demands the white corn sirup. This sirup is exported, all of it, from the Edgewater plant.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that the foot-and-mouth disease was brought into Illinois through Argentine corn?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Oh no; the gentleman is having a dream. Argentine corn is unloaded at the Edgewater plant of the Corn Products Co. right into the plant and is manufactured into corn sirup. Then it is loaded, often on the same tramp steamer that brings the corn in, and is exported.

In spite of what the Government actuary says you will not get any tariff out of this measure, because this company manufactures corn sirup to be exported and they get back the tariff they pay on it as it goes abroad. It does not displace a bushel of American corn. You can not fool the farmer and get him to stand for a cut-throat tariff bill hereafter by making him believe he is protected on corn. You can not do it with my consent under the facts of this case. This paragraph is a gold brick handed to the farmers.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be closed in 10 minutes, 5 to be given to the gentleman from New York and 5 to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, it is the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] that this provides for placing a duty on corn of 15 cents a bushel and that it will have no effect whatever. If that be the case, one wonders why the gentleman is so exceedingly anxious to have this provision of the law eliminated.

The gentleman states that the amount of corn that is imported from Argentina is so small that its importation has no effect on the market in the United States. I think that the committee, if they have regard for the facts, will not take that view of the case. The fact is that every time there is an importation of corn from Argentina it does affect the market price of corn all over the United States.

A constituent of mine the other day sent me a clipping from an Omaha paper which contained a dispatch from New York City. That dispatch stated that there had been imported into the city of New York alone up to that time 6,500,000 bushels of corn. The item went on to state that all of the granaries in New York City and on the eastern seaboard which were made for the purpose of storing grain were full. It further stated that 500,000 more bushels of corn were in vessels that were then in New York Harbor that had not been unloaded, and that they were to be unloaded partially in barges for want of warehouse facilities. It also stated that there were 500,000 more bushels of corn in vessels on the way from Argentina to the United States. It stated further that the supply of corn on the eastern seaboard was sufficient to supply the eastern demand for more than two years.

Now, the gentleman says that he thinks the dispatch and information of that kind would have no effect on the markets of corn in the West. This was published in an Omaha paper in the center of the grain-growing regions of the United States.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Will the gentleman permit me to say that if he will examine the importations of corn he will find that there is nothing at all to sustain what he saw in the Omaha paper. If we are to protect the farmer from ghost stories of that kind you can not do it by a protective tariff bill; you have to educate them.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, I do not know. I do not think there is any reason to doubt the statement. We know there have been more than 10,000,000 bushels of corn already imported from Argentina this year, up to a month ago. The fact is that that information goes to every purchaser of corn from the farmers of the State of Nebraska and all through the Middle West. They are anxious, those whom they represent are anxious, to purchase all of the corn at just as low a price as possible, and when the farmer comes in to sell corn to the man who represents the purchaser in his neighborhood he is told by the purchaser, "I am sorry to say that we can not pay you as much as we did yesterday or last week; but the fact is that importations of corn from Argentina are cutting down the market every day, and we can not give you as much as we would otherwise." In other words, all of the influences that can be brought to bear by the purchasers of grain or other products on the market are exercised for the purpose of securing the grain as cheaply as possible and the importation of corn continuously from Argentina is one of the most effective arguments they use for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. TOWNER was granted leave to extend and revise his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNER. This proposed legislation is emergency legislation. It is not complete, and certainly it is not final. The present free-trade tariff which permits the dumping of foreign farm products on our markets can not last long, and the world knows it. So while it lasts, and while the gates are wide open, the foreign producer is flooding our markets with his products. The farmer does not demand and does not expect that his products shall not decline on a general declining market. All he asks, and what he has a right to expect, is that the products which he places on the market shall only suffer that measure of reduction which other products bear. But the unfortunate fact is that the farmers' products have suffered reductions in price ranging from 25 to 100 per cent greater than other products. The farmers' products are now priced on the market at figures much below the cost of production.

This extraordinary and disastrous situation is caused in large part by this dumping of foreign farm products on the market.

It is stated that 55,000,000 bushels of wheat will cross the Canadian boundary into the United States by the end of this month. Port Arthur and Fort William elevators hold 73,000,000 bushels ready to send across as rapidly as the market can receive them; and this will continue as long as the doors stand open.

During the last year we also imported over 345,000,000 pounds of cotton, over 427,000,000 pounds of wool, over 439,000,000 pounds of cowhides, over 42,000,000 pounds of beef and veal, over 16,000,000 pounds of mutton and lamb, over 538,000,000 pounds of oil, and the list could be greatly extended. The market for American-produced corn, wheat, wool, cotton, and other products has been broken by these importations. It is idle to say that they do not affect our market. They have affected it, they now affect it, and they will continue to affect it as long as we do not take steps to protect it.

We can not afford as a purely economic proposition to discourage the production of foodstuffs in the United States. The demands of free-trade theorists and of unthinking consumers for cheap farm products will result in exactly the opposite way from that expected if the farmer shall be compelled to sell his products below the cost of production. He will not continue to produce if production does not yield him a fair return. He does not ask nor expect a guaranteed profit; but he does ask and expect that he be guaranteed a fair chance in the American market. He does ask that in an emergency like this, when the American market is being flooded with the more cheaply produced products of foreign lands, the foreign product should be equalized at least with that of the American producer. The American farmer does not ask for special privileges for himself, but he does object to special privileges being granted foreigners. As long as the present tariff rates on farm products are allowed to continue the American farmer has no assurance that he will receive even the cost of production. What he asks for in this bill is that he shall not be driven from the American market by foreign competition, and not be compelled to sell his products on the market at a less cost than the cost of production. That is not asking a favor; it is only asking for justice.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This bill is attacked on two grounds. First, it is said that the same provision should have been made in favor of the manufacturer as that which is made in favor of the farmer.

Gentlemen do not stop to draw the distinction. The manufacturer can slow down. It is not a question with him of the products on hand, but it is a question of manufacturing products in the future, and the manufacturer is slowing down. On the other hand, with the farmer the question is one of crops which have been grown in the whole preceding year, with a past history for four or five years of large prices, but with no anticipation that the prices would decline to the extent that they have. So that there is that distinction between the manufacturer and the farmer.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What about the stock which the manufacturers have on hand? For instance, I have in my town——

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is in the same situation, but it is relatively small. The farmer has on hand practically the entire product for a year, while the manufacturer has the product probably of 20 or 30 or 40 days.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have only five minutes. The next question is this: Why do you not give the manufacturer the same protection, aside from what I have already said? For the very good reason that you have not the time in which to arrange the schedules. Next, they say, Why do we not protect the farmers of the State of New York? The farmer of the State of New York needs protection; I admit that very frankly; but his product has protection, though it is relatively low. Dairy products are not relatively as low as some other farm products—for instance, fruit, which is raised in my section, or as wheat.

Dairy products have, too, what very few products have in this bill, some measure of protection. Butter is protected to-day, and as I understand it nothing in this bill is protected with the exception of wool, until it gets protection by this measure. I am in favor of the protection of dairy products and will fight for it when a general tariff measure is framed by the next Congress, but it is impossible under the rules of the House to add them to this measure and I can not oppose it on that account.

Some gentlemen say, also, that we are framing this bill to please the South, and that we will lose the South next time. I say they are wrong. The South has agricultural products. The South has had only agricultural products in the past, and we are getting the South, with such distinguished company as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], because of the fact that we are protecting agricultural interests. But the South has ceased to be agricultural alone. The South manufactures as we do now, and when the time comes, as it will, when we will present a general bill in the next Congress, gentlemen from the South will find themselves in the same attitude that the gentleman from Texas finds himself to-day, and they will find their constituents saying to them that they must support the manufacturers' schedule just as to-day they find their constituents saying they must support the agricultural schedules. And let me say to you that the Democratic Party of the future is not going to adopt the narrow platform of saying that a tariff should be levied for revenue only. On the contrary they are going to say that while they are glad to get the revenue, the basis and the true basis and the only basis of a measure levying import duties is to protect the manufacturers and the farmers and the laborers in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan rose.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not know that I shall get a great deal of credit for voting for this bill, although I am very much in favor of it. It does not take a great deal of courage for a Republican to vote for a protective measure. I am reminded now of my first vote in Congress 10 years ago. It was at the time the bill for reciprocity with Canada was considered by the Congress. I voted against that measure, and I did it because it was a free-trade measure. I know something of the feeling of you gentlemen on my right when we ask you to support this bill. I may say to you that there is a great deal of difference between the conditions that exist now and the conditions that existed then. This is an emergency measure. I do not believe our country ought to be made the dumping ground for the products of foreign nations. I understand that some of our allies have passed measures similar to this, and we are presenting this measure to you now as a measure for the protection of the farm markets of the United States. You heard the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] state how valuable those markets are. He says that if we are to lose the $10,000,000,000 that our allies owe us or our American markets, that we had better release our indebtedness and preserve our American markets. This bill is to relieve a class that is the very foundation of our institutions, and in considering it I can not but think of the lines of Goldsmith:

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates, and men decay,
> Princes and lords may flourish or may fade;
> A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
> But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
> When once destroyed, can never be supplied.

There are 16 items included in this bill, 9 of which directly concern the district which I have the honor to represent. We are the largest bean producing district in the United States. We are vitally interested in wool, wheat, onions, potatoes, cattle, sheep, and in live stock. You can not injure the business of the farmers without injuring all the other industries in the United States.

Wool is piled up in many warehouses in Michigan and there is absolutely no market for it. This bill will relieve that condition, or at least it will prevent other countries, such as Argentina and Australia, from filling our country with wool in competition with our farmers. The farmers all along have been encouraged to produce, and prices have been stabilized, until they find themselves to-day with no market for their product. I consider this bill we are considering to be proper legislation. We can not now pass a bill for general revision. It is properly named emergency legislation, and I shall heartily support it. I was much in hopes that it might include a duty on dairy products, but under the parliamentary situation no amendments are admissible, and many important farm products must be omitted.

The legislation herein recommended provides for the following rates of duty:

Wheat flour, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Corn or maize, 15 cents per bushel.
Beans, 2 cents per pound.
Peanuts, 3 cents per pound.
Potatoes, 25 cents per bushel.
Onions, 40 cents per bushel.
Rice, uncleaned, 1½ cents per pound; cleaned, 2 cents per pound.
Lemons, 1½ cents per pound.
Peanut oil, 26 cents per gallon.
Cottonseed, coconut, and soya bean oil, 20 cents per gallon.
Cattle, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Sheep, 1 year old, $2 per head; less than 1 year old, $1 per head.
Fresh mutton and lamb, 2½ cents per pound.
Long staple cotton, 7 cents per pound, with a compensatory duty of 7 cents per pound in addition to existing rates upon the manufactures thereof.
Unwashed wool, 15 cents per pound.
Washed wool, 30 cents per pound.
Scoured wool, 45 cents per pound, with a compensatory duty of 45 cents per pound in addition to existing duties upon the manufactures of wool.

The life of this act is limited to a period of 10 months, and it is estimated that the imports under this bill will produce $130,395,586.50.

The following excerpt is taken from the report of the Committee on Ways and Means reporting the bill and shows the increase in importations of some of the items covered by the bill:

The present serious conditions are attributed in a large degree to importations from abroad. During the month of October, 1919, imports of wheat amounted to 564,756 bushels, and in October of this year imports were 9,802,103 bushels. It is reported that since December 356,000,000 bushels of foreign wheat have been received at two Lake Superior ports.

In the month of October, 1919, 1,044,719 pounds of mutton and lamb were imported, compared with 27,024,972 pounds in October, 1920.

There is approximately 600,000,000 pounds of wool in storage in the United States, not including the spring clip which begins two months hence. This quantity of wool alone is adequate to supply the wool consumption of the United States for a period of one year.

The potato market of New England is flooded with importations from Canada.

The peanut industry of the South reports that it faces destruction on account of increased importations. During a 10 months' period ending October, 1919, 23,138,696 pounds were imported, compared with 110,788,209 during the corresponding 10 months of this year.

The importations of onions during the past 10 months show an increase of some 300 per cent over the corresponding period of last year.

I do not harbor the belief that we are bordering on the abyss of financial despair, and have asked for these few minutes to give some of the reasons that lead me to that opinion.

That the prices of most commodities have come down no one will deny. That the decline has either affected or will affect all commodities is self-apparent. So far, from observation and statistics, farm products have made the greatest drop, while merchandise shows the least reduction. The decline in agricultural products has been so great that it presents a question of national scope for solution. In looking around for a remedy it is of first importance to determine the cause for the decline.

In the first place, high prices were directly caused by the war. When the war ended there was a universal demand that prices be lowered. This demand was followed by a campaign to purchase only necessaries, and has had its effect, until now we only pay 10 cents for sugar that formerly cost 30 cents; $10 for a barrel of flour that formerly cost $18; $8 for a pair of shoes that formerly cost $12 and $15; $40 for a suit of clothes that formerly cost $75. Indeed, many of the merchants advertise general reduction of as much as 20 to 25 per cent on all sales, while special reductions of 50 and 100 per cent are advertised in some newspapers. Some merchants are advertising prewar prices, and a survey of the retail trade shows a general reduction in most lines of merchandise. We are gradually working back to normal. That is what we all desired when prices were mounting. We ought not now to complain too bitterly when the thing happens that we were all contending for.

But the farmer has been hit the hardest. For some time after the war there was a great question as to what prices and what classes should come down first. I heard it said that we could not have cheap commodities and low prices until labor came down. I also heard it contended that labor could not come down while the high cost of living existed. Both possibly were right, and again maybe neither were right as measured by the law of supply and demand. Now, both labor and commodities are coming down without waiting one for the other. But I want to say something about the reduction in farm products. When the farmers are depressed, business is depressed. When farming is unprofitable, business of all kinds is in a hole. The merchant, the laborer, the manufacturer, the banker, the transporter, all are at an ebb. As far as the farmer of to-day is concerned, he himself has plenty and to spare. Wool, cotton, live stock, wheat, corn, oats, potatoes, beans, and fruits in abundance. There is plenty of money in the land and the circulation was never more than it is to-day. The per capita of circulation is as much to-day as ever, but in the midst of plenty there is no market for much of the farm products. It is not a question of production. It is a question of markets. Our warehouses are full with wool, cotton, and grain. Wheat is coming in by the million bushels from Canada. Mutton by the million pounds from New Zealand. Live stock from neighboring foreign countries is flooding the market. The foreigner is supplying the market that by right belongs to the American farmer. When the farmer can find no market for his wool, his cotton, his live stock, and his grain, he certainly has the undoubted right to say that we shall not become the dumping ground for products of foreign countries, and this bill will help that condition. For that reason I shall support it willingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. Beans, provided for in paragraph 197 of the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, several Democrats in speaking for this bill this afternoon have taken particular pains to emphasize that they do not subscribe to the doctrine of free raw material. Neither do I. I agree with them that the historic policy of the Democratic Party has been in favor of collecting a substantial portion of the expenses of the Government at the custom house, and I agree also that our doctrine has been that the duties on imports should be reasonable in amount and based upon the idea of raising revenue and not of emphasizing the doctrine of protection. It also goes without saying that in the application of this principle farm products should be included, just as well as manufactured products. I do not believe there would be any better reason that we should have a long free list of farm products than that we should have a long free list of manufactured articles. Up to that point there is no difference between us, but does this bill meet the test of that Democratic principle?

It seems to me that any Democrat who thinks it does is very easily satisfied.

Any Member who can read the schedule in this bill applying to clothing wools, which is more than twice as high as the rates provided in the often-denounced Schedule K of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, and then claim that such rates are designed with the idea of raising revenue rather than to act as an embargo statute, is a Member gifted with such an imagination that he could easily work himself up to the point where he would believe that the darkness of midnight is the flaming light of day and that the odor of the swamp is the perfume of roses and violets. Perhaps it is good fortune to be gifted with so fertile an imagination as that, and if so, these gentlemen are rich beyond the dreams of avarice.

I have always made it plain to the people I represent that I am not in favor of the so-called free list of farm products; that I favored a reasonable duty on raw material the same as I do on manufactured products; but I have also made it plain to them that I would not at any time support a bill where the rates were so high that they were manifestly intended to take the place of an embargo act rather than as a revenue measure. Now, I have undertaken to examine this bill with care. I have compared its rates, each and every one of them, with the rates of the present Underwood tariff law. I have compared them with the Payne-Aldrich bill, and I find some of the rates reasonable enough and which I would gladly support if they stood alone, and I find others that are entirely too high and can have but one effect, and that will be to impose an embargo; therefore I can not support the bill.

Gentlemen have stated on the floor—for example, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. SMITH, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. FORDNEY—that they did not want any dumping of foreign products on our markets. Now, which of these gentlemen this afternoon has pointed to a single nation but that the balance of trade is in our favor, and until we are importing a larger amount of goods than we are exporting to a particular nation how can we say that we are being made the dumping ground? Now, I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that there is hardly a nation with whom we are now doing business but that the American dollar is at a premium and exchange has greatly depreciated. Now, why is that? It is because we are selling them more products than we are buying? Now, the advocates of this bill come to us who are from the cotton States and say, "We will help you out by giving you a tariff of 7 cents a pound on staple cotton of 1⅛ inches." I do not suppose that 3 per cent of the American cotton crop is of as much length as 1⅛ inches in staple. So how much help would that be to the cotton farmer? Now, Mr. Chairman, if the estimates of the Department of Agriculture are correct, we have raised about 13,000,000 bales of cotton in the South this year, and the American home market can only consume about 6,000,000 bales, and we must of necessity find a market for the rest of it elsewhere, if we are to escape bankruptcy and ruin. It is not a holding movement that we need. We have lots of cotton in storage now. It is a "moving movement" that we require. In other words, a market for our surplus products. Will we help find that market by making our customers less able to buy through shutting off their imports?

The United States is a great producer of raw material, and one of the principal of these is cotton, and our prosperity as a nation depends upon a free and open market for the surplus of these raw products, and I do not see how we can consistently start out on a program of embargo on imports when it is our policy to demand in every way we can a free and open market for our exports.

The development of foreign trade is one of the surest ways to insure the future prosperity of the people of the United States, and none more so than our farmers. The only way we can promote it is by an exchange of commodities, and it would be a very shortsighted policy which would start us out on a program of closing our country to importations at the very time we need most of all to be exporting our raw materials.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I will be very brief in replying to the gentleman, but let me say to the committee, for the benefit of the Members present, that when the Payne-Aldrich tariff law was adopted and 45 cents a bushel import duty placed upon beans, our competition was from Europe. To-day, because of the war, the competition on beans in the world has been transferred from Europe to China, Japan, and Manchuria, where the cheapest labor in the world is found, where people employed work for 12 hours for 12 and 15 cents a day, and last year there came into this country, from the Orient chiefly, 3,500,000 bushels of beans and we exported less than 2,000,000 bushels of beans. Therefore, we have had a balance of trade against us between this country and Japan and China of more than $150,000,000 in the last 12 months, and we have shipped to those countries more than $100,000,000 in gold more than we brought from those countries, and the rates fixed in this bill are not adequate protection to our bean growers in this country as was the rate in the Payne tariff law, the condition then being taken into consideration.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from Texas who last spoke said that he examined the schedules of the Payne-Aldrich bill carefully but he did not say he had examined the schedules of articles in this bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. No, he did not. I have explained that our competition is now from the Orient and there is to-day no market for the American-grown beans because of the fact that our markets are flooded with oriental beans. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. McFADDEN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will withhold my motion a minute and let the gentleman offer his amendment if it is to this paragraph.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

Mr. FORDNEY. If gentlemen are going to talk all night we can not get this bill through; and we are going to stay here until we pass this bill. The gentleman can talk on some other item, but let us get along.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I desire to offer it to this particular item.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state there is an amendment pending.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I am going to be heard on this bill and offer this amendment or the gentleman will not get it through to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-three gentlemen are present, a quorum. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 96, noes 33.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded.

Mr. RAKER. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. There is no amendment pending. It is a motion to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; a motion to close debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto. The Chair will count. Those in favor of taking the vote by tellers on the motion will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] A sufficient number have risen. Tellers are ordered, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] will please take their places and act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 24.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY: Page 2, strike out paragraph 4, and insert: "Beans, 45 cents per bushel of 60 pounds."

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the rate I propose is the Payne-Aldrich rate. The rate in this bill is 200 per cent more than the Payne-Aldrich rate.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] ought not to object to my speaking about this paragraph of this bill, because I want to compliment him and say that the eighth district of Michigan is represented here by a man who takes good care of the interests of his people. There are 60,000 growers of edible beans in the United States, and 15,000 of them live in the district of the gentleman from Michigan. The district of the gentleman from Michigan is a great bean-producing district. Therefore that district and the bean growers, who never even dreamed of getting this sort of protection, who never ever dreamed of the riches that await them in the near future, are to be handed by their Representative in Congress a Christmas gift of 200 per cent more than they have ever received for their beans before. The eighth district of Michigan is well represented, and I hope it will keep on sending the gentleman from Saginaw here indefinitely in the future. They will never find a man who can do more for them than this.

But I commiserate those gentlemen who represent here districts in New England, especially the Boston districts, which consume the beans produced by the bean growers in the district represented by the gentleman from Michigan. After this bill passes and the gentleman's constituents have received at his hands this magnificent Christmas gift, I would not advise the gentleman from Michigan to put in much time in the city of Boston, and I would like to know just how many votes he would get for Congress if he were running there in the average Boston district. I am wondering how these gentlemen from Boston, who represent bean-consuming constituencies, are going to defend their votes on this bill when they take away money from their bean-consuming constituents and hand it in Christmas gifts to the bean producers of the district represented by the gentleman from Saginaw, Mich. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired on this paragraph. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

5. Peanuts or ground beans, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the bean item just passed is right. I shall vote for this bill for good reasons, without recapitulating them as well as my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has done.

I just want to say one word in regard to the bean question. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] explained it partially, but did not go into details as it affects the West. Shipments of beans have been coming from the Orient into the West and have practically ruined our bean industry in the West.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I regret I can not yield. I want to say that on December 6, 1920, my colleague, Mr. RANDALL, of southern California, introduced the bill H. R. 14471, which, among other things, provides that there shall be a duty on lemons of 1½ cents a pound. The committee has practically adopted my colleague's amendment, making it 1½ cents a pound. I want to commend my colleague on his introducing that amendment and compliment him on his ability in getting the Committee on Ways and Means to place it on this emergency measure, inasmuch as the industry in California and the people of the West deserve it.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Does not the gentleman think the committee should have made the rate the same as in the Payne-Aldrich bill, namely, 1½ cents?

Mr. RAKER. The Payne-Aldrich bill is deceased, and the people who enacted it are deceased, and we are now confronting new situations. I do not care to rehash a dead matter all the time. Let us dwell on things as they now exist. The present conditions of the country are such that we ought now to face them, and vote as they require. This is a matter that will relieve the people of the State of California, and I want to commend my distinguished colleague from California, Mr. RANDALL, for having acted so early in introducing his bill and on getting the Committee on Ways and Means to place it in the present emergency tariff measure.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. KAHN. Is it not a fact that since the Payne-Aldrich bill was repealed the Japanese have gone into the culture of beans in Korea and Manchuria, that they bring them to California with everything in the way of cost paid, freight paid, and lay them on the wharf at San Francisco for 3 cents a pound?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Whereas the California raisers can not possibly produce them under 5 cents a pound?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. There is another item that the committee ought to have included in this bill, and that is eggs. The orientals are sending them over by the shipload, not only to my State but to the State of Washington and the State of Oregon, and they can deliver them on the western coast for one-third of what it costs to produce them there. The time will come when Congress will place a reasonable tariff on eggs—that will produce revenue. That is the reason I am speaking for it—to help maintain this Government. It is ordinary business; it is ordinary sense. There is no politics in it. Wherever you can charge an import duty upon articles that come into this country under such conditions as this, and at the same time raise revenue to help maintain the Government, it is good American doctrine and it ought to be carried out. [Applause.] That is what I have always stood for and shall continue to stand for. That is what I am in Congress for, to protect my district and my State and this country. I will do that wherever the opportunity presents itself. At the same time I am opposed to placing upon any article a duty so burdensome that it prohibits the importation entirely.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman have any peanuts in his district?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, the gentleman is in on the peanut proposition?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. We raise cattle; we raise horses; we produce wool; we produce lambs; we produce rice. The greatest rice-producing State in this country to-day is the State of California; and on those things which the State produces, and brings them cheaper and better to the American people, and on which at the same time a duty can be imposed which will raise revenue, let us look after the interests of the United States.

Mr. FORDNEY. I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Michigan will pass between the tellers.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Who are the tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] to act in my place.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 27.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, is it not in order for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY: Page 2, line 9, strike out "3 cents per pound" and insert "one-half of 1 cent per pound; shelled, 1 cent per pound."

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Have I the right to debate that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto have been closed.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman from Illinois is the ranking Democratic member of the Committee on Ways and Means. I ask that he be given five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] be permitted to debate his amendment for five minutes, notwithstanding the order of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I propose restores the Payne-Aldrich rate, one-half of 1 cent per pound, and on shelled peanuts 1 cent per pound.

This paragraph of the bill, which gentlemen on the majority side admit is for the purpose of obtaining southern votes for the bill, has the effect of raising the tariff 600 per cent over the old Payne-Aldrich rate and 700 per cent over the rate in existing law, and this is the bait which the majority side of this House, for political purposes, hold out to Members from Southern States in their effort to entice them away from the Democratic Party and from the propositions for which they have heretofore stood. This is a peanut bill in every sense of the term. [Laughter.] I want to show how this kind of politics will affect the State of California when it goes through. Ninety per cent of the unshelled peanuts which are imported come from Japan, and are absorbed in California and on the Pacific coast. Of course, this item, so far as it pertains to peanuts, operates as a complete embargo. A 700 per cent increase to consumers in the price of this commodity is what is here proposed. This is an important food commodity. This product is manufactured into oil, into peanut butter, and sold on the market for various food purposes. You propose this increase in order to be able to go to your constituents and say that the solid South is crumbling on these questions. In order to entice some of the Members from that part of the country away from us, you place upon your own constituencies this enormous burden. I am wondering if you can go home and defend your action before your constituents.

And now I want to say to my colleagues from Southern States that already in Canada they are talking about embargoes against the importation of goods from the United States.

We place an embargo on their wheat, we place an embargo on their feeding cattle by this bill, we place an embargo on their breeding stock. How can they retaliate? There is no easier way than to retaliate by placing an embargo on peanuts. Peanuts raised in the South are exported to Canada. Ten million bushels of peanuts, almost the entire output of the South for exportation purposes, goes each year to Canada. Now, when Canada retaliates, as she will, the easiest way to do it will be to impose an embargo upon peanuts from the South, and my friends from the South, in whose judgment I have so much confidence, and for whom I entertain an affectionate regard, will find themselves two years from now trying to explain the situation to their peanut-growing constituencies.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

6. Potatoes, 25 cents per bushel of 60 pounds.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 2, line 10, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, this rate is the Payne-Aldrich rate on potatoes that come in and interfere with New England grown potatoes and Michigan-grown potatoes coming in from Canada. A while ago we increased the tariff on wheat 5 cents a bushel over the Payne-Aldrich rate, the explanation made by the chairman of the committee being that it was done in order to overcome the difference in exchange, which is greater now than it was when the Payne-Aldrich rates were adopted.

Now, if the gentleman's position was tenable at that time when he argued that matter, if it is tenable as to wheat, why is it not tenable as to potatoes, and why does not some gentleman on the other side from the potato-growing sections get up here and insist that they ought to have the same increase over the Payne-Aldrich rate that the wheat growers of the Northwest got over the Payne-Aldrich rates?

I can not defeat this bill; I know that; but I propose to discuss the paragraphs as we reach them and show what a badly balanced bill it is, and to show that it was made without any consideration, that it has been without any hearings. Nobody has asked for rates on beans or potatoes. I can not defeat this bill, but I am going to do what I can to defeat the party that is responsible for it two years from now. I will put the facts in the RECORD as we proceed with the bill. I understand the rules, and I can not be prevented from doing that.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, this is an emergency measure to meet a national crisis. It provides, among other things, that after the day of its passage and for a period of 10 months thereafter certain high tariffs, which are set forth in detail in the bill, shall be imposed upon wheat, flour, corn, beans, peanuts, potatoes, onions, rice, lemons, oils, cattle, sheep, mutton, cotton, and wool when imported from any foreign country into the United States.

THE PURPOSE OF THE BILL.

The main purpose of the bill is to provide protection to the American farmer for his products, although the Ways and Means Committee claim that for the 10 months it will yield about $130,000,000 revenue to the Government.

THE UNDERWOOD BILL A NATIONAL DISASTER.

The Democratic Underwood free trade bill placed all these articles upon the free list, and for 10 months following the enactment of this bill, in 1913, the producers of this Nation faced bankruptcy by reason of the vast importations of pauper-labor-made goods from foreign countries and the dumping upon our shores and borders the agricultural products of other lands. Then the Great War came and temporarily gave us high protection and saved our markets until after the war.

OUR FARMS AND INDUSTRIES ARE NOW ABOUT TO BE DESTROYED BY FOREIGN IMPORTATIONS.

It is now over two years since the armistice, and the committee reporting this bill say:

Information has been received by the committee from many sources of the serious condition confronting agriculturists in general on account of the rapid decline in value of farm products.

Prevailing prices in many instances are far below the farmers' production costs. Your committee has been advised that in many instances the borrowed money secured by live stock far exceeds the value of such live stock in the Chicago markets.

The present serious conditions are attributed in a large degree to importations from abroad. During the month of October, 1919, imports of wheat amounted to 564,756 bushels, and in October of this year imports were 9,802,103 bushels. It is reported that since December 3, 56,000,000 bushels of foreign wheat has been received at two Lake Superior ports.

In the month of October, 1919, 1,044,719 pounds of mutton and lamb were imported, compared with 27,024,972 pounds in October, 1920.

There is approximately 600,000,000 pounds of wool in storage in the United States, not including the spring clip, which begins two months hence. This quantity of wool alone is adequate to supply the wool consumption of the United States for a period of one year.

The potato market of New England is flooded with importations from Canada.

The peanut industry of the South reports that it faces destruction on account of increased importations. During a 10-months' period ending October, 1919, 23,138,696 pounds were imported, compared with 110,788,209 during the corresponding 10 months of this year.

The importations of onions during the past 10 months show an increase of some 300 per cent over the corresponding period of last year.

The committee was furnished information concerning one consignment of lambs to the market which, after deducting freight, commissions, and other charges, netted the raisers but 33 cents per head.

Conditions are steadily growing worse, and unless remedial legislation is enacted at an early date the inevitable result will be the abandonment of many farms and the slaughtering of the live stock thereon and irreparable injury to the agricultural resources of the country.

The Tariff Commission has presented figures showing the freshet of imports poured into this country during the four months of July, August, September, and October.

According to the commission's report, which is compiled from the official figures of the Department of Commerce, we imported during the four months in question over 12,000,000 bushels of wheat, 222,000 barrels of wheat flour, 5,317,000 bushels of corn, 43,000,000 pounds of cotton, 44,435,000 pounds of wool, 84,000,000 pounds of fresh beef, veal, mutton, and lamb, 142,000 head of cattle, 95,000 head of sheep, 147,000,000 pounds of hides, and 129,000,000 pounds of oil cake.

All the above items mentioned by the Tariff Commission are on the free list and their importation has not lowered the high cost of living to the consumer.

Congressman GREEN of Iowa, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, further reports that the depreciation in the value of our crops last year and this amounts to five billions of dollars.

Before the war our imports for the year ending June 30, 1914, amounted to $1,906,000,000. For the year ending June 30, 1920, they amounted to the enormous sum of $5,238,000,000.

The gentleman from Michigan, Mr. FORDNEY, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, says that the annual import of wool from New Zealand and Australia alone amounts to 700,000,000 pounds, and that unless restricted by this bill Canada will at once send us 200,000,000 bushels of wheat.

THE FARMER MUST HAVE A FAIR RETURN FOR HIS LABOR.

Secretary of Agriculture Meredith in a recent report says:

The farmer must have, under ordinary conditions, a reasonable prospect of a fair return for his labor and the use of his capital. The science, the art, and the business of agriculture can not thrive unless he is suitably and profitably paid for the products of his farm; unless he receives compensation sufficient to enable him to continue to produce and to maintain for himself and his family satisfactory standards of living.

The matter is of such tremendous importance to our entire population that it should be recognized everywhere as a national problem and dealt with as such. Everything possible must be done to prevent or, at least, to lessen the effect of the recurrence of conditions under which large numbers of farmers conduct their operations at a loss.

JAPAN IS PREPARED TO DESTROY THE COTTON INDUSTRY OF THE SOUTH.

Japan is making a desperate attempt to capture the markets of the United States. A late issue of the Wolfeboro (N. H.) Granite State News says:

Japan has hit upon a policy with respect to cotton manufacture which may well cause anxiety in the minds of our own cotton manufacturers who are not afflicted with war order astigmatism. Japanese investors are beginning to realize that the burden of expense in transporting raw cotton from China to Japan and carrying back the finished yarn or woven fabrics to China is coming to be too heavy to meet the competition of Chinese mills. Therefore they are investing their money in the construction of mills in China with a view to escaping these transportation charges and at the same time availing themselves of Chinese labor, the cheapest in the world.

A Texas cotton expert recently employed by the Chinese Government to report on cotton-growing possibilities in that country declares that China can readily raise twice as much cotton, of excellent quality, as can the State of Texas, where the average runs from 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 bales. And they can do it at one-tenth the labor cost. With Japan taking advantage of this cheaper raw material and far cheaper mill labor, American operators have good reason to anticipate competition of the most vicious sort right in our home market unless steps are taken to ward it off. This prospect alone will strengthen the adherence of cotton manufacturers, both North and South, to the Republican Party and its policy of protection to home industries.

In one of the articles on Japan contributed by Mr. S. S. McClure to the New York Evening Mail the writer states—that he saw girls 10 years old working at filling match boxes and earning 5 cents a day! At this rate of wages it was found cheaper to employ hand labor than to fill the boxes by machinery. In the same article Mr. McClure tells of the enormous increase of female workers of all ages in the Japanese factories. Additional workers are recruited from the ranks of women and girls at the rate of 200,000 a year, and their wages range from 5 cents to 20 cents a day of 14 to 16 hours.

In view of these conditions it is easy to see how Japan is rapidly increasing her exportation of manufactured articles to the United States, and how it has become necessary to ship to Japan many millions of American gold with which to pay for the excess of our imports from over our exports to that country.

CANADA IS PREPARED TO DESTROY THE POTATO INDUSTRY OF THE NORTH.

The potato crop of the United States for this season is 421,000,000 bushels. My home county contributed 16,000,000 bushels. There are 3,000 miles of the northern border of the United States lying alongside of Canada with the same kind of crops, climate, and soil on both sides of the line. Canada has cheaper farm labor than the United States. Her immigration laws are very liberal, and she takes advantage of this to obtain cheap labor upon her farms.

A dollar of our money in Canada is worth $1.16. The Canadian farmer brings his produce to our market, takes back our money, and has this advantage at least over the United States. He is to-day flooding our markets with all kinds of agricultural products, and this emergency bill is earnestly demanded by the American farmers along the Canadian border to save their markets.

THE GRANGE DEMANDS THIS EMERGENCY LEGISLATION.

The Maine State Grange, now in session, has passed unanimously the following resolution:

Whereas the potato growers of our State are facing the most serious situation in their history owing to the large crop in our own country, which has forced the price down to a point less than one-half the cost of production; and

Whereas the situation is still further aggravated by large shipments of foreign potatoes which come in duty free and at a low rate of freight: be it

Resolved, That this Maine State Grange, as a representative body of the 60,000 members in our State, believes the principle of the American market for the American farmer is only a square deal to our members, and we still further believe this question, on account of its far-reaching importance, far transcends any consideration of partisan politics, being one which concerns the very existence of the industry of agriculture.

We appreciate the fact that a renewal of the rates in the Payne-Aldrich bill would be entirely inadequate, owing to the advantage the foreign shipper has in the difference in exchange and his low rate of freight. An absolute embargo is the only solution. To this end be it

Resolved, That we urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use every endeavor to have an immediate embargo placed on all foreign shipments of potatoes for a period of one year; be it further

Resolved, That we communicate this action of the Maine State Grange, now held at Lewiston, Me., to our Senators and Congressmen in Washington.

CANADA HAS NO MARKET FOR ITS POTATOES BUT THE UNITED STATES.

The St. John Standard, a leading newspaper of Canada, said a few days ago:

The embargo on Canadian potatoes, proposed in the United States House of Representatives by Hon. IRA G. HERSEY, of Houlton, Representative from the fourth congressional district of Maine, and agreed to by the leaders of both parties in Congress, will be a heavy blow to the agricultural interests of New Brunswick. Mr. W. W. Boyce, Fredericton, one of the leading shippers of farm produce in the Province, informs the Standard that the placing of the embargo, which gives every evidence of becoming effective very soon, will cause a very heavy loss to farmers, and in many cases their ruination. He says it will put the potato business out of existence, as there is no market for our potatoes except in the States. There was a time, he says, when the most of the New Brunswick potatoes went to Ontario, but that Province is now self-sustaining and there is no market left except in the United States. It is his opinion that there are in storage to-day in this Province more marketable potatoes than were shipped out last year.

When informed that cattle, live stock of all winds, and grain were to be added to the embargo list, Mr. Boyce gasped for breath, and expressed the opinion that those engaged in handling produce of the farm were hit as hard as the farmers.

"What does it all mean to New Brunswick?" he was asked.

"It means," he replied, "there will be another exodus of New Brunswick farmers to Maine, similar to that which took place some dozen years ago, to take up farms where they can enjoy the benefit of American markets."

Also the following dispatch from Ottawa under date of December 18, 1920, will be of interest at this time:

CANADIANS SEE BLOW IN NEW UNITED STATES TARIFF—PROPOSED REPUBLICAN LEGISLATION WIDELY COMMENTED ON—RUSH GRAIN OVER BORDER.

[Special dispatch to the Star.]

OTTAWA, December 18.

The proposal of the newly elected Republican administration at Washington to rush into effect a tariff of protective duties on agricultural products is being widely commented on throughout Canada. Particularly has it drawn comments from the United Farmers of Ontario, who held a big convention at Toronto this week and are planning at the next Dominion election to elect a farmers' government for the whole of Canada.

While they have so far issued nothing official, members of the association claim it will hit the live-stock business of the Canadian West on the head. One of the prominent members said:

"It will mean decreased production, because Canadian farmers will have to limit their output to the demands of the Canadian market. If the United States tariff is made high enough to prohibit shipment of our cattle across the line, it will hurt our live-stock business. I fear it may mean excluding Canadians from the greatest live-stock market in the world at Chicago."

With respect to the proposed boost in the tariff on wheat, wheat shippers are rushing their product across the line. A marked indication of what is going on prior to the expected Washington boost in tariff becoming effective comes from Brockville, Canada, in this announcement: "It is stated by the Grand Trunk that 22,000 cars have been handled in the past 10 days here, which constitutes a Brockville record."

GERMANY, DENMARK, AND OTHER COUNTRIES OF EUROPE PREPARE TO DUMP FARM PRODUCTS ON OUR MARKETS.

Germany is shipping large quantities of potatoes to England and is looking for a market soon upon this side of the water. The New York Produce News, under date of December 10, 1920, has the following to say about foreign importations from Europe of potatoes:

POTATOES FROM DENMARK.

NEW YORK, December 10.

A cargo of Danish potatoes is on its way here on the steamship Palladin, which left Copenhagen November 28. The boat is due some time next week. It has been impossible to ascertain how many bags there are on this boat as the importers are unwilling to give any information. One firm says it has 5,000 bags on consignment in this shipment, and it is known that there are other lots, probably equally as large, coming to other firms.

If there is any possible chance of making a profit on Danish potatoes this season a large quantity will probably be sent to this country. Denmark has a big crop and is anxious to ship to the United States. A letter received this morning from one of the large exporting firms gives assurance that the condition and quality of the Danish potatoes will be much superior to ordinary seasons. This firm says the stock will be shipped in better condition then last year, as the shippers have gained much experience in packing, loading, and ventilation.

This firm's potatoes will be shipped in heavy blue striped bags and screened down to 1⅞ Danish inches. The inspection at loading point will be much more severe than usual, and this shipper promises that stock from that country will be superior to past seasons. He says there is no reason why the potatoes should not reach here in good condition.

DEFEATED FREE TRADERS WILL OPPOSE THIS BILL WHICH IS DESIGNED TO SAVE THE FARMER.

This House will overwhelmingly pass this emergency bill. It is not possible, of course, to enact an embargo at this time. This bill will go to the Senate, where it will meet with violent opposition from the Democrats, who will filibuster and delay the measure, especially those Democrats who have been rebuked and defeated by the people in the last election.

I note the opposition in the House comes largely from those Members who were defeated in the late election by the people, who do not favor giving our markets to the foreigner at the expense of the American farmer and producer.

A PRESIDENTIAL VETO OF THIS BILL WILL BE A SEVERE BLOW TO THE PRODUCER.

There is also a feeling here at the Capitol that this measure will receive a veto at the White House. If such a disaster is visited upon our people, then the present crop of agricultural products, cotton and wool, must be sold at a loss, and this will greatly lessen production and bring us a very small crop from our farms for the coming season.

The farmer will under these circumstances restrict his operations to producing just sufficient for his own use. The consumer will be at the mercy of the foreign importer, who will raise his prices as soon as he has destroyed the market for the American producer. There will be no inducement for the unemployed in the cities to go to the farms, and ruin must come to the country until relieved by future legislation after the 4th of next March.

THE PEOPLE DEMANDED A HIGH TARIFF AT LAST ELECTION.

The whole Nation is interested in a high tariff and absolute protection to the American market. The people of nearly every State indorsed the position of President-elect HARDING, whose views upon the tariff during the last campaign were expressed as follows:

Let me say to you men that I want to bring to you the readjustment after the World War which will maintain for the millions of American wage earners the high standard of pay which is theirs now. I caution you men that that can never happen under the policy of a party which believes in opening the doors of America to foreign-made products.

And if I am elected President, as I expect to be, I am going to stand for the policy that furnishes American markets first for American products.

We can not maintain American production at home if we buy our goods abroad, and that applies to farm products as well as to all others. If we are to build up a self-sustaining agriculture here at home the farmer must be protected from unfair competition from those countries where agriculture is still being exploited and where the standards of living on the farm are much lower than here. We have asked for higher American standards; let us maintain them.

A long list of our farm products will require a Republican protective tariff policy. There is an increasing menace to our production of a number of farm products in the opening of those countries which can produce under intensive methods with labor cheaper than our own.

If we buy abroad we will slacken production at home, and slackened production means diminished employment and growing idleness and all attending disappointments. I want to cheapen the cost of living as much as anyone in all the land, but I do not wish it cheapened by the processes of unemployment and lowered standards of American labor.

So long as America can produce the foods we need I am in favor of buying from America first. It is this very preference which impels development and improvement.

American markets can not be surrendered to foreign producers, however kindly we may feel toward our allies.

THE "SOLID SOUTH" IS NOW FOR PROTECTION.

The operation of the Underwood free-trade tariff has resulted in demolishing forever the fallacy of the Democratic Party that free trade can benefit the American people. Everywhere, in the North and West, Democrats forsook their party at the last election and voted the Republican ticket to obtain protection to their farms, shops, and manufactories. Even the "solid South," known in the past as the great stronghold of free trade, has of late found it necessary to demand a high protective tariff to save its farms, manufactories, and markets.

Mr. S. Davies Warfield, chairman of the board of directors of the Seaboard Air Line Railway Co. and president of the Continental Trust Co., of Baltimore, says:

"I am a Democrat; I was brought up in the free-trade school, but the time has come when the Democratic Party, if it wishes to live, must adjust its doctrines to changing conditions. The day has passed for a tariff for revenue only. We must have a tariff for the benefit of our industries—we will call it 'benefit' if you do not like the word 'protection.' * * * The Democratic Party can give the South—call it what you may, high tariff or protection—that which, in my opinion, is essential to its more rapid advancement and to the fulfillment of its greatest hopes."

Senator SMITH, Democrat, of South Carolina, in a recent speech in the Senate said:

It is not very greatly to the credit of America that in spite of her monopoly of the production of the raw material of cotton, two-thirds of the raw materials converted into the finished product abroad and sold in disastrous competition with the production of our mills in every country in the world.

Representative MARTIN, Democrat, from Louisiana, is quoted as saying:

We of the South who have interests that must perish unless an adequate tariff policy is maintained, have learned from the hard lesson of experience to appreciate this fact. And yet, because of the peculiar conditions prevailing there, the South as a whole has been slow to embrace a policy which must of necessity be the handmaiden of any economic development.

DEBATE UPON THIS BILL HAS GIVEN US MANY HIGH-TARIFF DEMOCRATS.

This debate has disclosed the utter inability of the Democratic Party to longer hold the "solid South" for free trade. Scores of Democrats have broken away from their party and announced themselves for high protection. Texas, a great agricultural State, has forced its Representatives in Congress to change their policy of obstructing Republican tariff legislation. I have only this opportunity to quote from this debate a few statements of those who have come to indorse the Republican doctrine of protection to American interests against the world.

TEXAS NO LONGER FOR FREE TRADE.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], Democrat, in the course of this debate said:

Mr. Chairman, I offer no apology for supporting this bill. Every item of duty in it is levied upon foreign products annually imported into the United States in competition with the products of our farms and ranches. It is to save our farmers and stock raisers from bankruptcy that this bill is designed. It is true that it does not go far enough, but as far as it does go it is all right.

Time has proven that free raw material is not a fundamental of true democracy. It has been a fatal policy and constitutes one of our gravest mistakes. It has almost bankrupted some of our southern producers who by law have been forced to purchase everything they have to buy in a protected market and then sell all of their raised products in a free one, where the whole world, dissimilar as it is, competes on an equal footing. The illusive, seductive doctrine of permitting raw materials from every foreign country of the world to enter the United States absolutely free of duty has taken away from our home producers their home market and is largely responsible for our southern planters now being forced to sell their cotton, which means their living for a whole year, for less than they paid out to have it picked and ginned; for the Chamber of Commerce in Ranger, Tex., now offering some of the splendid farms of Eastland County rent free to any farmers who will agree to cultivate them next year; for our warehouses now bulging out with both the spring and fall clips of domestic wool which can not now be sold for its cost of production; for the crippling of our great peanut industry; for stagnating our important stock-raising and dairy interests; and for swiftly depopulating our farms and ranches. Our farmers and stockmen of the United States, sturdy producers who yearly feed and clothe our 105,000,000 people, are now with their backs to the wall facing a most serious crisis.

In Mexico, South America, Australia, Europe, Asia, and Africa there exists an entirely different state of conditions, a different standard of living, a different standard of working hours, a different standard of wages, a different standard of necessities, morals, intelligence, hopes, ambitions, and aspirations. Mexican peons are content to work for a miserable existence. Chinese and Japanese laborers are perfectly satisfied to work from 10 to 14 hours each day for less than 20 cents' pay, to live on rice, to go almost naked, and to let the future take care of itself. Must our intelligent, ambitious, deserving men and women on the farms and ranches of the United States be longer placed on the same level by being forced to compete directly with the peons and slaves of the universe? I am one loyal Democrat who is not in favor of it. * * *

* * * Will any sensible statesman contend that when hundreds of millions of pounds of farm products are permitted to be imported from foreign countries absolutely free and dumped into the markets of the United States, where when sold at a profit they are sold at prices far less than the cost of production in this country, that they do not affect and lower the price of every product of every farm in the United States?

Ask our farmers what they are getting for their cotton. You will find that they can not sell it for what they have paid out to have it picked and ginned. Ask them if they want us to permit this 345,314,126 pounds of foreign cotton to be imported into the United States absolutely free of duty to compete with their products. Ask our sheep and mohair men, whose wool has gone down from 72 to 15 cents per pound, if they want us to continue to permit 427,578,038 pounds of foreign wool to be imported into the United States each year absolutely free of duty, and for us to continue to permit 64,623,776 pounds of foreign mutton and lamb to be imported here in four months duty free, as was done in July, August, September, and October, 1920.

I am afraid that it has been the clamoring of these millions of city consumers, whose votes are very much desired, which has caused free raw materials to be written into Democratic platforms. Much too long have we Democrats permitted rest-needing politicians to entwine into our platforms and policies some city-vote-catching slogan to the detriment of our producers.

LOUISIANA STANDS FOR HIGH PROTECTION.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO], Democrat, representing a Democratic constituency, has favored Republican protection in this debate. He said:

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this farmers' emergency tariff bill on the ground that it is better to get half a loaf than none at all. I would like to see the bill contain more duty on certain articles, say, rice, for instance. I would also like to see the bill include some other articles, for instance, sugar, and others. But the Committee on Ways and Means tell us that this is the only farmers' emergency tariff bill they can submit and pass at this time. However, they promise us that they will begin hearings soon, with the view of bringing in a permanent and scientific tariff bill for consideration in the near future.

The last war has demonstrated to all the necessity of our country having its own vital industries at home and of not depending on foreign countries in time of emergency. The only way to have our industries going at home in time of emergency is to protect and develop them in time of peace.

Protection should be given our agricultural products in proportion to the protection given the manufactured products. The producers of the agricultural sections can no longer survive under a policy that compels them to buy in a protected market and sell in a free market. In other words, this Nation can not prosper as a whole and permanently half protected and half free. There is a general awakening throughout the agricultural sections of the United States on the importance of revising our tariff laws, and keen interest is being taken in our treaty relations with foreign countries affecting commerce and trade. Our farmers can no longer compete with those of foreign countries, for instance, in Asia, where they wear very little clothing and live on practically nothing, without sinking to their level or go broke.

Labor is organized, capital is organized, industry is organized, and the farmers are unorganized. Farmers are leaving the farm to migrate to the cities because they can no longer afford to pay for the present high cost of labor, implements, and fertilizers to raise corn, cotton, rice, cane, peanuts, and other commodities at the prices they are selling for. We must equalize the cost of production in this country with that of foreign countries, so far as may be consistent with the public welfare, such schedules to be so placed as to fairly distribute the burdens and benefits among all industries, without discriminating against any section, class, or product, to the end that there may be maintained American standards of living in every line of effort.

It should be plain to any thinking man that free trade can never be successfully approached until all the people of the world shall have developed to an equal degree. Not until their education, methods of living, morals, and ideals become the same could we begin to think of free trade, and when that is reached there will always remain the great natural difference of soil and climate and the nearness to the great markets of the world. Let me call the attention of my southern friends who are interested in the cotton industry and whose constituents are sacrificing their cotton seed for almost nothing to the fact that we have imported during the last fiscal year 539,326,000 pounds of oil from foreign lands, as follows:

	Pounds.
Coconut oil	269,226,000
Cottonseed oil	24,164,000
Palm oil	50,162,000
Soy-bean oil	195,326,000

to which we must add 33,906,000 gallons of Chinese nuts, peanuts, etc., in the crude state. This should appeal to the peanut growers' Representatives also.

We imported, mostly from Egypt, 690,000 bales of cotton, valued at $159,918,000, during the last fiscal year. This was principally long staple, which competes with our long-staple varieties, produced by very high-priced labor, as against the cheap labor of Egypt and India.

Then, too, let us consider for a moment the rice industry. Our people were appealed to to produce more. They have bought land and implements at high prices; they have bored wells for irrigation; and they have paid labor high to make the largest crop they ever produced, and to-day not only that rice is selling away below the cost of production but there are practically no markets. And yet rice is being imported from Asiatic countries, where they produce it for practically nothing.

As a foundation to any stability of values in the live-stock industry we must have protection against cattle raising in South America and the mutton raisers of Australia and New Zealand. Due to cheap land, cheap labor, tropical climate, luxuriant grass, and the fact that they have a larger percentage of calves and no winter season in South America, meat can be produced in those countries for much less per pound than in the United States. All of the big American packers have plants in South America, some of them larger than anything they have in the United States. As matters now stand, they can put us out of business with cheap foreign meat, or put the price up on the consumer, as they choose.

While we wish to assist other countries all we can, our first duty is to America. If something is not done immediately for the relief of the farmers to enable them to meet their obligations and plant a crop next year, there will be the shortest food crop in the history of the country in 1921. This will not only cause nonemployment, hunger, and suffering, but higher prices to their consumers. Let me also call their attention to the fact that when the purchasing power of the farmers is destroyed their manufactures will be paralyzed. They should also understand that it is not the price of our raw agricultural products that cause the high cost of living. The high cost of living during normal times is mainly due to a faulty system of distribution and marketing, which lets in too many middlemen, who profit at the expense of both the producers and the consumers. [Applause.]

FLORIDA NOT AFRAID OF PROTECTION.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], long a distinguished Democrat, cut loose from his party in this debate and said:

The people of my district are Democrats, but they are not free-trade Democrats. [Applause.] When it comes to placing a duty upon the raw material in which the farmer is interested then the question is raised that we are about to be seduced by a Republican tariff bill. [Applause on the Republican side.] The truth has been—and this is one of the causes of the condition in which the Democratic Party finds itself to-day—the truth has been that we have been verging too closely onto the doctrine of free trade. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I am for building up this Nation. Building up the South, the North, the East, and the West, all of it, because I am an American citizen, and I believe in an American policy, and an American policy does not advocate hothouse institutions. I do not believe in that; but let me tell you this: You can not levy a duty—it is an economic principle that you can not get away from—you can not levy a duty upon any article imported into this country the like of which is produced here except you incidentally protect the domestic article. [Applause.] And yet I am not afraid of protection. If it comes, let it come. [Laughter and applause.]

THE COUNTRY MUST RETURN TO HIGH PROTECTION TO RECOVER ITS OLD-TIME PROSPERITY.

While the Democratic Party to-day is divided upon a tariff between free trade and protection the Republican Party is a unit for the tariff that built up this Nation and made this country the grandest under the stars. The hour has come when politics and sectionalism must be forgotten and Congress must unite regardless of party to save the markets of this Nation from the pauper labor of Europe. We can in this land of ours, from the frozen North to the tropical South, and from the cold Atlantic to the peaceful and warm Pacific, produce all kinds of products and goods grown or manufactured in any land in the world much cheaper and better than can be bought from the importer. Time has demonstrated that free trade is not even for the benefit of the consumer.

As soon as free-trade importations have destroyed our markets the foreign importer has us at his mercy and puts up his price. When American labor has been ruined and our farms and shops abandoned the Nation will be in the hands of foreigners. Such a disaster now faces us unless we can return to the Government of our fathers and stand for America first. Old free-trade ideas have gone. Partisan lines have melted away, and we are rapidly becoming a united people, all imbued with the idea that there is no North, no South, no East, no West, but one country, with one object, one purpose, and one destiny, and that is the glory and grandeur of America.

A HIGH TARIFF THE OPPORTUNITY OF THE SOUTH.

Albert Green Duncan, speaking to the South Carolina Cotton Manufacturers' Association at Greenville, S. C., October 19, 1920, said:

The Mason and Dixon line is but a historical memory. Highways of steel and improved roads for the interchange of commerce have wiped it out, never to return. The South's commerce is American commerce; its industry is American industry; its farm products are essential to the people not only of the South but of the whole country, and the same policy of protecting wheat and wool of the North and West should protect the cotton seed and cotton goods of the South. Southern factories as well as northern factories should sell to America first, and the same protective policy which has made this country as a whole one of the richest and most prosperous of any nation on earth should have the support of all citizens no matter what section of our common country they call their home land.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

7. Onions, 40 cents per bushel of 57 pounds.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am not gravely concerned as to what happens to this bill in this body, nor am I worried about the manner in which I shall vote upon it. I have entire confidence in the intelligence of that constituency which has honored me, and I know that they will ascertain the fact that this bill will not do that which the proponents insist that it will do.

But I am somewhat concerned, Mr. Chairman, about the attitude which gentlemen on the Democratic side of this Chamber shall assume on this bill. I thought during last session of the present Congress that our Republican friends had lost something of their cunning, but I am prepared now to believe that I was mistaken. I do not recall within my experience in this Congress a more ingenious political move than the presenting of this bill under the conditions here presented and at the time it is presented. [Laughter and applause.] These gentlemen know full well that in the next Congress they are to be called upon to deal with the tariff question under conditions, as pointed out by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] in his very able speech yesterday, differing entirely from any that has prevailed before in this Republic. They realize, of course, that there are to be schisms and divisions in their own party which will seriously trouble them if they undertake to place upon the people of this country—as a large element of that party will desire to do—a tariff which upon many things will be absolutely prohibitive. They have adroitly and ingeniously seized on the conditions now existing in this country in an endeavor to place Democrats on record in favor of a tariff which they themselves say is absolutely prohibitive and cause Democrats to turn their backs upon every principle of taxation for which their party has stood throughout its history. [Applause.] I can not do that. Mr. Chairman, this bill represents a theory of taxation and of government against which my party as a party has always stood.

Again, can gentlemen say, "We will vote for it as an emergency proposition," and then deny that if it shall be voted for to cure an emergency it will not be necessary to vote for it to prevent an emergency? Gentlemen upon the Republican side are not embarrassed. They believe in the principle of protection.

Here is the seriousness of this situation: This bill in effect is a relatively unimportant bill. It is not going to do the thing that gentlemen assume or claim to assume it is going to do. It is not going to bring the relief that is promised. What it is going to do is to place many Democrats in a position where in the next Congress, when the Republicans bring forth a measure that will be based in its compensatory duties upon duties laid down here——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. Its effect will be to place Democrats who vote for it now in a position where they can not complain when a bill is brought in in the next Congress that will take these rates as a basis and will fix the compensatory duties upon the manufactured products upon the basis fixed in this bill. That is a serious proposition, Mr. Chairman, because if Democrats now divide and many place themselves in the embarrassing situation of voting for this bill, there will not then be a strong, vigorous minority party to exercise that function which a minority party ought to exercise, of criticizing, of examining, and to the extent of their ability restraining the excesses which every one of us here knows will be a tendency on the part of many of those who believe in the principle of protection. This is not a matter alone of individual effort. It is also a matter of maintaining a cohesive, a vigorous, a critical minority, to the end that we shall be able consistently to take under careful scrutiny the great tariff measures that are to come in the next Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Adverting to a suggestion that the gentleman made at the outset, does he think there is the slightest possibility that this bill will ever become a law in view of the fact that the tariff bills that have been passed heretofore during the last several months have all failed of enactment, and likewise the antidumping bill that was passed in this House a good many months ago?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not believe it will. I do not believe it is seriously thought by its proponents that it will become a law. I can not escape that conclusion.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] said that before they would bring it in they desired to have, as nearly as they could, the assurance that they would be enabled to pass it over the veto of the President, if it should ever reach the President. It is designed, sir, to split the Democratic Party. It is designed to get rid of the embarrassing condition which will confront the Republican Party in the next Congress. It may succeed—I do not know—but I at least hope that there will be Democratic seed left in the House and in the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I desire five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to have five minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will make the motion 10 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to talk on the bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. I suggest the gentleman have his time on some other paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY: Page 2, line 11, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, this is the paragraph having reference to onions. It is proposed here to restore the Payne-Aldrich rates and no more than that. Under the present Underwood rates, the low rates of the Underwood bill, the production of onions in the United States has doubled. If tariffs are for the purpose of increasing production and building up an industry, how could a tariff which has doubled the output of an industry in the United States be considered as other than the proper rate to impose? Again, if the Payne-Aldrich rates are proper for onions, why were they not proper for wheat and for these other items in which the rate has been raised beyond the Payne-Aldrich rate, upon the theory, the untenable theory, that there is a difference in exchange? I know this paragraph will be adopted just as it is, but I want to say that I regret the attitude of some of my Democratic friends on this side. For a long time they have fought for the taxing principles for which the Democratic Party stands, and now that we have become a creditor nation, now that we can not exist as a creditor nation under the protective tariff system, we find them one by one, under the seductive influence of peanut subsidies and other proposed subsidies, dropping away on this bill from the party to which they owe their allegiance.

What they do will not affect economic results. I ought not to say what I have just said, because their responsibility is to their constituencies. I simply regret that in view of the sense of responsibility to their constituencies they can not stay with Democratic platforms and Democratic theories. I know that the time is coming when you can not run this Government with a protective tariff system. I know that you have got to encourage imports, if these raw materials for foodstuffs are to be exported. If we are to continue as an exporting nation, we must be paid for our exports, and we can not be paid for our exports unless we encourage imports; and by this bill we propose to discourage imports just as much as we can. Two years from now, if any section of the country, upon these economic issues, leaves us, no matter where it is, we will make good the loss in other sections of the country, because if we are to continue as a creditor nation, if we are to collect the debts they owe us abroad, if we are to continue selling abroad, we must encourage imports, we must encourage barter, and we must import in the future more than we export, and more and more our exportations must be confined largely to the raw materials of which this bill treats and to which it relates.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman [applause], I was elected to Congress 16 years ago, and one of the planks in the platform upon which I made my initial race for Congress was the proposition that I should advocate, if I came to this body, a duty on Egyptian or long-staple cotton. [Applause.] I have been elected to Congress nine times upon that proposition. The people of my district are Democrats, but they are not free-trade Democrats. [Applause.] And these gentlemen who have sought to lecture me and talk about my being seduced and other Members from the South being seduced in this bill can not put their fingers upon a single line in a single national Democratic platform that ever declared for free trade, and I have not heard these gentlemen complain very much about the duties on manufactured articles; but when it comes to placing a duty upon the raw material in which the farmer is interested then the question is raised that we are about to be seduced by a Republican tariff bill. [Applause on the Republican side.] The truth has been—and this is one of the causes of the condition in which the Democratic Party finds itself to-day—the truth has been that we have been verging too closely onto the doctrine of free trade. [Applause on the Republican side.] This is not a free-trade country, and I do not belong to a free-trade party, and I said 10 years ago on the floor of this House that whenever the Democratic Party did declare for free trade that I parted company with it. [Applause.] It has not done it yet, and I do not think it will do it, because I can not believe the Democratic Party is willing to hang onto a leadership that makes the speeches that I have heard here this afternoon. [Applause on the Republican side.] The South will take care of itself. These gentlemen need not be lecturing us upon the lines we will pursue. We have held the banner of the Democratic Party aloft through all of its troubles and all of its trials, and she has had a greater trial in the past than she had in this year of 1920. I am for building up this Nation. [Applause.] I am for building up the South, the North, the East, and the West, all of it, because I am an American citizen, and I believe in an American policy, and an American policy does not advocate hothouse institutions. I do not believe in that; but let me tell you this: You can not levy a duty—it is an economic principle that you can not get away from—you can not levy a duty upon any article imported into this country the like of which is produced here except you incidentally protect the domestic article. [Applause.] And yet I am not afraid of protection. If it comes, let it come. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Give me two minutes more—I ask unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am going to vote for this bill and I am as good a Democrat as there is in this House, I do not care whether he comes from Illinois, Tennessee, or anywhere else. Peanuts are produced in my district in large numbers. [Laughter.] Sea-island cotton is grown there in large quantities, and various others of these articles are grown there, and it is going to benefit the farmer, and I am voting for this bill, not because I think it is going to do very much of itself but it is going to get our friends over here in the habit of doing something for the farmer when they go to create their bill. [Applause.] And I want them to get in the habit of trying to help the farmer. Now, let me say, my friends, that my friend from Tennessee said that this bill was very ingenious and seducing and was going to get all of us into serious trouble, and all that sort of thing. Why, these fellows have got all the people they want to pass any tariff bill they please in the next Congress and we can not prevent them from passing anything they want to pass, so why should they resort to subterfuge or why should they practice ingenuity to beguile a few of us from the path of Democratic virtue.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Florida has forgotten everything that Maryland, on the division line between the North and South, stood for. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Maryland stood for the Republican Party in the last election [laughter and applause] and Florida did not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

8. Rice, cleaned, 2 cents per pound; uncleaned rice, or rice free of the outer hull and still having the inner cuticle on, 1½ cents per pound; rice flour, and rice meal and rice broken which will pass through a No. 12 wire sieve of a kind prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound; paddy, or rice having the outer hull on, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, strike out all of lines 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph in this bill increases the present rate 100 per cent. Why, I do not know. Under the Underwood rate the industry of growing rice in this country——

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman is mistaken. Broken rice is the same in the Underwood bill as in the old Republican bill, one-quarter of a cent.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. The other items were much less.

Mr. LAZARO. I know; but I want the record to be accurate.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. The effect of the whole paragraph is to double the Underwood rate. I do not know what the demand for broken rice is.

Mr. LAZARO. It is the same as in the old tariff bill, one-quarter of a cent a pound.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. No hearings were held on this item of this bill. We are absolutely without information. No rice grower in the country has appeared before the committee asking for this increase on the whole rice of 100 per cent. It is done without information; it is done without any request ever being made for that purpose from any section of this country. There is no evidence before the committee as to the visible supply of this important foodstuff in this country. It is one of the items which the North really does not stand for, but it is put in here for the purpose of obtaining support in other sections of the country which have not always supported the theories of tariff revision presented by the other side.

Now, I agree with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] as to his democracy. I have served with him here in the House of Representatives during the entire period of his service, and no man has a higher regard for his ability and his integrity and his honesty of purpose than I. I only regret that conditions are such in his district that he is compelled to support this measure. I do not remember how he voted on the Payne-Aldrich bill. I do not know how he will vote on the bill which they propose to bring during the special session which is to follow this session. But I take it from the argument he presents that it will be necessary for him, if the products of his district are amply protected from the protective standpoint, to vote for any bill hereafter which contains that kind of protection. I regret that my friend feels this way about it. I regret that conditions in his district are such that he is compelled to take that position. I regret that upon this great question I can not from my viewpoint fight with him shoulder to shoulder. He would be a powerful ally of the principle of taxation for which I stand and for which I think heretofore the Democratic Party has stood. It is an easy answer to make to any man who stands for the Democratic position of a tariff for revenue only to say to him, "I am a Democrat, but do not stand for free trade." What Democrat ever stood for free trade in this country? What nation in the world ever stood for free trade? What nation in the world ever adopted a free-trade policy? I know of none. Every nation imposes tariffs; tariffs for revenue, tariffs upon noncompetitive articles. One nation which is referred to as a free-trade nation raises more money per year out of tariffs than we ever raised by a protective tariff.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McFADDEN rose.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I addressed the Chair first.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when I heard of this bill being reported out by the Committee on Ways and Means the other night, two nights ago, when the chairman of the committee came into this House and asked leave to print his report, I asked him whether it would be possible to include in this emergency bill the products of the dairy farmers of New York, Pennsylvania, and New England. I was told that there would be no opportunity; that this was a revenue bill, and it was not possible to protect the great farming interests in my State in this particular. I have been trying this afternoon to get an opportunity to present such an amendment, notwithstanding that fact, but the opportunity has not been presented, and I am now taking this opportunity at this time to speak for 87,000 farmers in the State of Pennsylvania, New York, and New England, who claim an equal right with the farmers from the South and the West to protection of the products of their farms, dairy products.

There is coming into this country from abroad, chiefly from Denmark, 30 times the amount of butter that came in during the year 1917. There are other milk products that are coming in here, and the great creameries and condensories and milk plants of the State of Pennsylvania are being deprived of their market. It is just as serious a proposition as that which confronts the farmers from the South or the West or any other part of the United States, and to-day I want to suggest to the members of the House committee an amendment which should be placed in this bill, which is as follows: "A tariff duty upon butter of 10 cents per pound; cheese, 8 cents per pound; milk, 6 cents per gallon; cream, 20 per cent ad valorem; condensed milk, 4 cents per pound; evaporated milk, 3 cents per pound; milk powder, 5 cents per pound."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman going to offer his amendment?

Mr. McFADDEN. I understand from the chairman that the parliamentary situation is such that it can not be offered.

Mr. BUTLER. No objection will be made to it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will state that I will object to that or any other amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. That answers your question. I am in receipt of the following communication from the Dairymen's League, an organization of farmers in the East, largely from New York, Pennsylvania, and New England, which is as follows:

> We urge that milk and all dairy products be included in the temporary tariff bill.

That is signed by R. D. Cooper, president.

I am going to read also an additional telegram which came to me this morning from the same source:

> We suggest a tariff duty on butter of 10 cents per pound; cheese, 8 cents per pound; milk, 6 cents per gallon; cream, 20 per cent ad valorem; condensed milk, 4 cents per pound; evaporated milk, 3 cents per pound; milk powder, 5 cents per pound.

That is the same resolution as that which I would inject into this bill if it were possible to do so. I realize as a matter of fact that this is not a tariff bill. It is simply the furnishing by this House of a measure that will slumber in the Finance Committee of another body. There is no more chance of this measure passing at this session of Congress than anything. I am of the opinion that unless the Senate Finance Committee does protect the great dairy interests of New York, Pennsylvania, and New England, the Senate will defeat this measure. They have an equal right, and I believe there are men in the Senate and on the Finance Committee of the Senate who are fair enough to include this amendment of mine in any bill that may be reported out protecting farmers of the West and South——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I represent the largest rice-producing district in this country, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, notwithstanding the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, notwithstanding the rule. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] says that he can not understand why we should ask for this increased rate on rice. I want to say to the gentleman that I have the honor to represent the largest rice-producing district in the United States. We were appealed to to increase our production. Our people have gone to work and bought more land at a high price. They have bought implements and fertilizers at high prices. They have bored deep wells for the purpose of irrigation, and this year they have made the largest rice crop they ever produced in the history of the country. Now, not only is rice quoted below the cost of production, but we have practically no market for our rice. Not only that, but Asiatic rice is being imported, and unless something is done to protect our farmers the majority of them will go into bankruptcy.

I stated this morning that I had always contended that agricultural products should receive protection in proportion to manufactured products. I have always been consistent on that. I voted against this reduction in the Underwood tariff bill, and I know that I was right, because following the passage of that bill the importations of rice jumped up to about four times what they were before, and those importations have increased very much since. I repeat that our people are entitled to this protection, and the gentleman's amendment should be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

> 10. Oils: Peanut, 26 cents per gallon; cottonseed, coconut, and soya bean, 20 cents per gallon.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that this tariff proposes these very high rates on peanut oil, which, of course, comes from the peanuts produced in one section of this country; upon cottonseed oil, coconut oil, and soya-bean oil.

There are other vegetable oils, many of which can take the places of these oils on the market.

In this badly balanced bill no provision is made for almond oil, or Chinese nut oil, or cod-liver oil, or fish oils of various kinds, or for flaxseed oil, or linseed oil, or lemon oil, or olive oil, or rapeseed oil, and a number of other oils to which I might call attention.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the oils he has just mentioned do not come in competition with cottonseed oil, for the reason that they are not used in the manufacture of soap, as are the oils that are mentioned in this bill.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. No; the oils which I have mentioned are not produced in a certain section of this country, and that is the reason you do not include them; but they can come in here and be sold on the market and become substitutes for the oils that are produced here, and some of them can be used in the manufacture of soap. If you want to make a well-balanced bill, if you really want to protect cottonseed oil, the way to do it is to include these other oils; because if substitutes can be imported under the old rates, then the rates you impose will absolutely fail of their purpose, even as a political argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] to strike out the paragraph.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 2, line 21, after paragraph 10, add a new paragraph as follows:
10½. Oil cake, 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I raise the point of order that the amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair hear me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman very briefly.

Mr. BLANTON. Clearly, Mr. Chairman, this comes within the provision of the rule. It is germane to the item. It is right in connection with the subject of oil, in the same paragraph where cotton seed is mentioned. Oil cake is a product of cotton seed and has some oil in it. Clearly it comes within the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the rule as interpreted by the Speaker and by Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole in the past precludes an amendment which introduces a new subject matter into the bill. The Chair thinks that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas introduces new subject matter, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment to paragraph 10, line 20, page 2, to strike out the figures "26" cents per gallon on peanut oil and to substitute ".10"; and in line 21, cottonseed, cocoanut and soya bean oil, to strike out "20" and substitute "6."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: Page 2, line 20, strike out "26" and insert in lieu thereof "10," and line 21, strike out "20" and insert in lieu thereof "6."

Mr. MILLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe there is at present 6 cents a gallon on peanut oil.

Mr. FORDNEY. And no duty at all on the other three.

Mr. MILLER. We are presented with this spectacle, that without a hearing, without a word of testimony before the Ways and Means Committee, that committee arbitrarily placed a duty on these oils, and one of the greatest industries on the Pacific coast, in the importation of oils, without a hearing will be absolutely crushed. I have the honor to represent the city that is the center of the oil-importing industry, and we have invested millions of dollars in that industry.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. From what country comes the importation of these oils?

Mr. MILLER. Mainly from Manchuria.

Mr. CRISP. Japan and China.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; there is nothing new about that, the gentleman must certainly know that.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Will the gentleman read in his time the protest of the Foreign Commerce Association of the Pacific coast?

Mr. MILLER. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read in my time certain telegrams from the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, the Exporters' Association of Seattle, and others. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. Reserving the right to object, how many telegrams does the gentleman intend to insert?

Mr. MILLER. I have six.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The telegrams are as follows:

Congressman JOHN F. MILLER,
Washington:

Representative delegation importers has appeared before this chamber to emphasize importance of vegetable-oil traffic to commerce and industry of Pacific coast and entire country and to protest against proposed prohibitive duty in emergency tariff bill on soya, peanut, and other vegetable oils. We respectfully join in appeal that Pacific coast importers be given hearing and full opportunity to present vital facts before action is taken on this item. Washington lime manufacturers need protection against Canadian competition.

SEATTLE, WASH., December 21.

Hon. JOHN F. MILLER,
Representative, Washington, D. C.:

Understand proposed placing prohibitive tariff on imported rice, beans, peanuts, and similar foodstuffs and vegetable oils. We respectfully protest any summary action in this regard and request you use your influence with committee in charge, defer action until all interests can be heard. If reported correctly, proposed tariffs on peanut, soya bean, and other vegetable oils, also peanuts, rice, beans, etc., will not operate to secure expected revenue, as will rather act to prevent any importation these articles. Restriction of importation will also act to curtail our ability to export, thus working great hardship on labor through closing of factories; also, if imports and exports curtailed, our merchant marine will materially suffer by being deprived of tonnage necessary for its successful operation. We also strongly consider restriction importation will act as bar to reducing present high cost of living to great body consumers. The use of imported oils in the paint and varnish trade has materially reduced cost of manufacture. View large amount building likely develop, consider it detrimental to best interests country. Practically prohibit use these oils this trade. View above mentioned facts, we feel account large interests vitally affected by proposed action that in any event we entitled to full hearing prior to any legislation as extensive in its results as that proposed.

IMPORTERS' AND EXPORTERS' ASSOCIATION OF SEATTLE.

JOHN F. MILLER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MILLER: Today's press dispatches report introduction for action to-morrow special tariff bill providing, in part, prohibitive duties on rice, beans, peanuts, soya-bean oil, and peanut oil. Such drastic measure will, in my opinion, based on personal experience as a custom-house broker during operation of Dingley tariff of 1897, entirely eliminate such trade to this coast, except inconsequential shipments for local Japanese and Chinese consumption. The attitude of my firm can hardly be considered as selfish when the question involves one where Seattle's fine terminals and storage facilities are likely to be empty. To-day six American ocean-going steamers are tied up in Smiths cove for lack of either outward or inward cargoes, and the question of whether special tariff legislation is going to improve certain difficult conditions prevailing at this time is too doubtful and important to pass without exhaustive hearings from both sides to show that the cottonseed people of the South and the rice, beans, and peanut people are not making a reasonable profit. The northwest corner of the United States is so sparsely populated that our future depends upon water-borne trade, and I trust that you will be able to use your good influences along the lines suggested to you by to-day's telegram from the Pacific Coast Foreign Commerce Association.

B. ROY ANDERSON.

SEATTLE, WASH., December 21, 1920.

JOHN F. MILLER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Proposed tariff on oriental products exciting much protest along Pacific coast. Conditions apparently warrant careful consideration, and trust you will arrange proper hearings on subject.

CHINA CLUB OF SEATTLE,
CLANCEY M. LEWIS, President.

SEATTLE, WASH., December 21, 1920.

Hon. JOHN F. MILLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We understand some action is to be taken to-morrow on Fordney tariff bill. We respectfully protest against what we consider a prohibitory duty proposed on rice, peanuts, beans, soya-bean oil, and peanut oil, and other imported foodstuffs. Such prohibitory duty will primarily increase cost of living, as all these commodities directly affect the average man's food. Such prohibitory duty will destroy enormous investment in ships, docks, warehouses, tanks, refineries, and affiliated interests. Our import oil industry particularly deserves fair treatment. This new industry, wrested from Germany during the war, employs thousands in transportation, manufacturing, selling, etc., and is a tremendous influence in reducing cost of living. Proposed duties would wipe out, with tremendous losses. Such prohibitory duty will also seriously hinder our entire export trade, because in order to balance trade we must import if we also export. There are a number of American steamships now idle in Seattle harbor for want of inbound cargo. Such prohibitory tariff will tie up still more. We respectfully urge you to cooperate in securing an equitable adjustment of tariff which will not entirely annihilate Pacific coast foreign traders and allied industries. We urge you to use your influence to postpone definite action of committee until Pacific coast interests can be given full hearing.

FOREIGN COMMERCE ASSOCIATION OF THE PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in three minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Seattle that the people of Seattle are much interested in the exclusion of the Japanese, but the products this gentleman is now asking to be imported are products produced by the Japanese abroad and come in competition with the products of American labor. A year ago 500,000 tons of vegetable oils came into this country from Japan and China through the ports of San Francisco and Seattle. I have been covered up by telegrams, and the Seattle Chamber of Commerce sent a man here to see me to induce me to withdraw my objection to these oils coming into this country so that the docks of Seattle and the men who have money invested in those docks can make money out of the foreign importations coming into the country to destroy American capital and American labor. [Applause.] There is nothing to the proposition beyond that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

11. Cattle, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, the way to protect the cattle industry in this country, if there is a way by imposing tariffs, is to put a prohibitive tariff on the importation of beef. It is not the intention of those who stand for this bill on the other side of the House to interfere in the least with the profits of the Chicago packers. Cattle are not brought into this country for consumption purposes. It is proposed that carcasses of cattle coming here from the great plants of the Chicago packers in the Argentine and other section of the world may continue to come. Frozen carcasses imported come into competition with cattle produced in this country in the markets, and if there is any influence exercised here by importations to keep down the price of cattle on the ranges of the West, this is the influence which does it. But they have dealt tenderly with the packers and their unconscionable profits and they have left out of this bill the frozen carcasses of beef which the packers want to put on this American market, and the Republican Party does not propose to object to it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is it not a fact that the American packers are largely operating in Argentina and Canada?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is it not a fact that they are importing frozen beef and veal into this country?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes; and mutton also.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is it not a fact that the omission of frozen beef and veal from this bill is in deference to the American packing interests?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Absolutely, and I thank the gentleman for his contribution to my speech. We have brought in 100,000 less cattle this year than in the 10 months of last year. We do not bring in over 350,000 from all sections of the world outside of the United States. We bring in forty or fifty thousand from Mexico and the rest of the 350,000 comes from Canada.

We do not bring in fat cattle ready for the market. We bring in feeders.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Not now. I have not the time. We bring in feeders from Canada and feeders from Mexico to consume the corn in the corn belt of this country and to help keep up the price of corn on American farms, and those feeders go to markets in Chicago and Kansas City and East St. Louis. A small number of cattle we bring in are brought in for breeding purposes, to improve our herds. None of those come from Mexico. They come from Canada, where, in some breeds, they have better cattle than we have here. They come in to improve our herds, and the contention is the argument used before our committee—and there were hearings on the subject of cattle and of sheep—that we want legislation to preserve the breeding cattle of the country. How can we preserve the breeding cattle of this country by this legislation, which keeps breeding cattle out? How we are going to add to the number of breeding cattle in this country by imposing a prohibitive tariff, which affects feeders principally, but which keeps out principally breeding cattle, is more than I can understand. Perhaps these gentleman who stand for this bill can furnish the argument that will sustain such a position as that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will first be taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 2, line 22, after the word "valorem," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "Cattle hides, 3 cents per pound; fresh beef and veal, 5 cents per pound; frozen beef and veal in cold storage at the time this bill shall become a law, 5 cents."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman violates paragraph 3 of Rule XXI, introducing new subject matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas seeks to introduce hides, fresh beef and veal, and frozen beef and veal, and the Chair thinks it is an effort to introduce a new subject matter, which would be in violation of paragraph 3 of Rule XXI.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me for a minute?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Are not beef and veal and hides all part of the term "cattle"?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that hides are different from cattle, and a proposal to insert hides in the bill is a proposal to insert an item on a different subject than that provided in the bill. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD: Page 2, line 22, after the words "ad valorem," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the words "frozen beef, 2½ cents per pound."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

13. Fresh mutton and lamb, 2½ cents per pound.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 2, line 25, after the word "lamb," strike out the figures "2½" and insert "5"; and after the word "pound," strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "Imported fresh mutton and lamb in cold storage at the time this bill shall become a law, 5 cents."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman. The Chair thinks the amendment is possibly not in the best form, but the Chair does not think that it is not in order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this amendment undertakes to place a tax on cold-storage mutton, whereas this bill is entirely concerned with tariff duties. Surely that half of the amendment can not be in order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this would come under the ruling of the Chair as applied to the first amendment offered to wheat, making a different method of administration.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the words "per pound" be added at the end of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDSPETH: Page 2, line 25, after the word "lamb," strike out the figures "2½" and insert the figure "3."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON as a substitute to the amendment offered by Mr. HUDSPETH: Page 2, line 25, after the word "lamb," strike out "2½" and insert "5," and after the word "pound" strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "imported fresh mutton and lamb in cold storage at the time this bill shall become a law, 5 cents per pound."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is not a substitute.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed, and I ask that the amendment be voted down.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, let us have a division and see how many Republicans will go back on their doctrine.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 27, noes 42.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will rise in his place the Chair will recognize him. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-four gentlemen are present, a quorum, so the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. YOUNG of Texas] did not have time before he left here, and I desire on his behalf to ask unanimous consent that he may extend and revise his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

14. Cotton having a staple of 1⅛ inches or more in length, 7 cents per pound.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the committee, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the chairman and of the committee seriously to this proposition. You propose to levy a duty of 7 cents a pound on cotton 1⅛ inches in length. Out of a crop this year estimated to be 13,000,000 bales, in round figures, there will be probably sixty, or at the outside seventy-five, thousand bales of cotton 1⅛ inches in length. This provision runs counter both to the Republican doctrine, as announced by Mr. LONGWORTH yesterday, and to the Democratic doctrine, as announced by Mr. GARNER to-day.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. You said there were only how many bales?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. About 60,000 or 75,000 bales of 1⅛-inch cotton raised in the United States this year.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That would give protection to that much, would it not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Out of 13,000,000 bales of cotton produced, 60,000 bales, or possibly 75,000 bales, will be produced this year of 1⅛-inch staple, or about one-half of 1 per cent of our crop. This is, then, a tariff on a noncompeting product, which, I understand, is contrary to the Republican doctrine of protection. I know of no man who can speak more authoritatively of the Republican doctrine of protection than the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

In his address yesterday he said, among other things:

It is true that it would be possible to raise very large additional revenues from the customs if we adopted the principle of imposing duties on noncompeting articles like tea and coffee, as Great Britain does, but that would be in violation of the protective principle as I understand it.

And so forth.

As only one-half of 1 per cent of the estimated cotton crop this year will be protected by a duty on cotton of 1⅛-inch staple, I think this provision comes clearly within his category of "noncompeting articles."

If the committee had in mind when it inserted this item its theory of protection, instead of limiting the duty to cotton of a staple length of 1⅛ they should have left out all limitation whatever.

If this were done it might raise a very substantial revenue or it might keep out cotton that does actually come in competition with one American industry, which, from the Republican viewpoint, is desirable. The cotton, for instance, that is imported from China is of a very short staple, perhaps one-half inch or five-eighths of an inch. It is a peculiar character of cotton—coarse, and of great resiliency—and it is used as a substitute for wool. In fact, I am told that some of our enterprising New England manufacturers make wool mattresses out of cotton imported from China. That will come in free under this bill.

There is also cotton raised in South America that has a staple of an inch, or an inch and three-sixteenths, and of the same general character as this China cotton. It, too, comes in direct competition with the wool of this country. Now, if you want to have a protective measure you ought to include cotton of that staple in this bill.

As you have written it, it amounts to nothing. Seven hundred thousand bales of cotton—about as much as the State of Mississippi will produce this year—has been imported into this country during the past 10 months, and of that number of bales possibly 200,000, probably less, will measure an inch and three-eighths, and the rest will measure much less. As to the Egyptian cotton, cotton raised in the Lower Valley of the Nile, called Sakallaredis, some of it is an inch and three-eighths and some of it is an inch and five-eighths, but there is not much of that imported. There was imported from Egypt, all told, 485,000 bales, out of our total from every shore of 700,000. The crop of the Upper Valley of the Nile runs an inch and three-sixteenths to an inch and a quarter. That will come in free under this bill.

I am one of those Democrats who believe that there ought not to be many imports coming into this country without payment of duty. I do not believe in a big free list. I think that any article that comes into this country in such quantities as that, 700,000 bales, valued at some eighty-five or ninety million dollars, ought to be halted at the customhouse and required to pay a duty. We are importing cotton from SouthAmerica and some little from Mexico and from China and some from India. Why should it be permitted to come in free? This provision can not be defended as a revenue matter, because it permits 500,000 bales to enter free, and it can not be defended as a protection matter.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Egyptian cotton is long-staple cotton.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But very little of it that comes into this country, possibly 200,000 bales out of 700,000, is 1⅛ inches, and this provision limits the duty to "cotton having a staple of 1⅛ inches and over."

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. The production of long-staple cotton has grown to be a great industry in this country, has it not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. The sea-Island cotton and the Egyptian cotton is used in this country for the manufacture of certain things because of the long staple. It is used in automobile tires and mercerized cotton. If it is imported, that cotton comes into competition with that which is raised in this country.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But this will keep it out only when it has a staple of 1⅛ inches, and a very small part of our long-staple cotton has a staple of 1⅛ inches.

Mr. FORDNEY. The imported is as long as that, and that takes the place of your long-staple cotton which is under 1⅛ inches.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. There is very little of that length imported. For instance, in August there were 23,000 bales imported, and of that amount only 12,000 bales came from Egypt. In September 20,000 bales were imported, and only 2,400 of them came from Egypt. In October 13,000 bales were imported, and only 1,200 bales came from Egypt. In November 22,000 plus, and only 2,900 from Egypt.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All the long-staple cotton does not come from Egypt.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; and not all the cotton that comes from Egypt is an inch and three-eighths. A little of it comes from Peru. Sixty-three thousand bales altogether came from Peru, but it is not of an inch and three-eighths. Most of the Peruvian cotton is from an inch and three-sixteenths to an inch and a quarter. You let that come in free.

Mr. FORDNEY. The imported long-staple cotton that we want to put a duty on is from about 40 to 50 per cent of the total imports, and 275,000,000 pounds came in last year.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What is long-staple cotton? The bill says "having a staple of 1⅜ inches or longer." This is not the proper definition of long-staple cotton. When cotton has a staple of 1⅛ inches it is long staple; so that when the gentleman says that we imported 275,000,000 pounds last year of long-staple cotton he is accurate, but only a small part of that was 1⅜-inch cotton. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] would not call 1⅛ inches long staple, because he is thinking only of sea-island cotton, but the total crop of sea-island cotton this year, I am told by the Department of Agriculture, will probably not be more than 4,000 or 5,000 bales. It is suggested that this tariff may encourage larger production of sea-island cotton in this country, but let us remember that this is merely a temporary measure, intended to meet an existing emergency, and expires by its own terms 10 months after its approval. So, out of the 700,000 bales you are permitting at least 500,000 bales still to come in and pay no duty. Now, why should cotton or anything else come into this country in such quantities without paying its toll?

Mr. FORDNEY. There has never been a duty on cotton, because we were always exporters of short-staple cotton, but not of long-staple cotton.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. You propose to protect it now, and gentlemen on this side propose to raise revenue by it.

Mr. FORDNEY. We have never exported long-staple cotton, but we have exported 60 per cent of our total production of short-staple cotton.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I saw 2,000 bales of as fine long-staple cotton as I ever laid eyes on consigned to Liverpool from my county the other day.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What was the length of it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It was what they call commercial quarters, one and three-sixteenths full, and some of it an inch and a quarter full, strict middling and good middling cotton.

I am not laboring under the delusion that this duty is going to increase the price of cotton. Some gentlemen think it may, by keeping out long-staple cotton from abroad, enable producers of that staple here to sell their cotton, which they can not do now.

The point I am trying to make is that, as written in the bill, it is not in accordance with the Republican theory of protection, and as it fails to levy any duty on the great bulk of imported cotton it does not measure up to the Democratic requirement of a tariff for revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COLLIER. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I know the chairman of the committee [Mr. FORDNEY] wants to close debate, and my friend from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has an amendment which he wishes to offer, so I do not want to take up too much of the time; but I do want the House to understand seriously that this provision in the bill will accomplish nothing. It does not protect anybody, because out of the 13,000,000 bales produced in this country only 60,000 or 75,000 are of 1⅜-inch staple; and it will not raise any revenue, because it admits the great mass of the cotton that is imported into the country which is of less than the required length of staple free.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I should like to state to the gentleman that in 1918 there were imported 92,359,000 pounds; in 1919, 125,000,000 pounds; and in 1920, 275,000,000 pounds of long-staple cotton, 1⅜ inches and over, which was brought into this country in competition with our long-staple cotton.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Oh, no. The gentleman is correct in saying that much long-staple cotton was imported, but only a small part of it was an inch and three-eighths. Anything that is over an inch and one-eighth is listed as long-staple cotton, but all of it ought to be required to pay a revenue tariff, in my opinion, regardless of length; but whether you say protection or whether you say revenue, the result is just the same. You can choose either horn of the dilemma. But in neither instance does your bill as it is written meet the situation.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman think 7 cents a pound will give us rather liberal protection?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If your cotton is an inch and three-eighths, but not otherwise.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But it will not affect cotton of shorter staple than that.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. And only one-half of 1 per cent of the American crop this year is one and three-eighths or longer.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Has the gentleman offered an amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH was recognized.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman a perfecting amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the perfecting amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that I have been recognized, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but the Chair thinks an amendment to perfect the text has precedence over a motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. It will have precedence when it comes to voting on it, but I do not understand that the gentleman has first right to the floor.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who offers a perfecting amendment is entitled to preference, and the gentleman from Arizona has offered a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that having recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts to offer his amendment, the gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to have five minutes in which to debate that amendment. The Chair regrets that that will have the effect of depriving the gentleman from Arizona of the right to debate his amendment.

Mr. WINGO. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Arizona has a right to demand the floor on his amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment, and will yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws his amendment, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAYDEN: Page 3, line 1, strike out "three-eighths" and insert in lieu thereof "one-eighth."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order against that. The gentleman undertakes by his amendment to include an entirely different article from the one mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio on the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is true the amendment applies to cotton, but there are various kinds of cotton used for entirely different purposes. The paragraph undertakes to deal with one species of cotton, and one only, used for an entirely different purpose than the one that the gentleman seeks to include. Long-staple cotton has a peculiar use. Short-staple cotton has a great variety of uses which the long-staple cotton has not. I submit that this is in effect a different item, a different subject matter than the one provided for in the bill and that the value may be entirely different and the rate of duty might be very greatly changed by the inclusion of such an amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is correct in his statement that the value and the uses of long-staple cotton are entirely different from short-staple cotton and that this paragraph deals solely with long-staple cotton. The question therefore is, What is long-staple cotton? The authority best qualified to answer is the Bureau of Crop Estimates of the Department of Agriculture, which has for years in its reports divided American-grown cotton into two classes: Cotton less than 1⅛ inches in length is classified by that bureau as short staple. All cotton 1⅛ inches or more in length is defined as long staple.

The figures which I have obtained from the bureau show that for 1919 short-staple cotton comprised 91.2 per cent of the American crop, and that cotton having a staple 1⅛ inches or longer amounted to only 8.8 per cent of the total production that year. If for no other reason, this bill should conform to the existing Government standard for long-staple cotton and thus avoid much practical difficulty for the Customs Service. Since my amendment includes nothing but a mere matter of description, it is obviously not subject to the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in drawing this provision, on inquiring of the officials of the Treasury Department we found that there seemed to be no definite standard for long-staple or sea-island cotton. The term "sea-island cotton" was not definite enough to include all long-staple cotton. At first we intended to use the words "sea-island cotton" or "long-staple cotton," but we were informed that if we did so the words would be so indefinite that it was doubtful if the duty could be enforced. So we were obliged to specify a certain length. The gentleman is correct as to the Bureau of Markets classification of long and short staple cotton, but its classification does not agree with what I found in the encyclopedias and many works on cotton. In any event, the classification we were trying to get at was a different one. We were trying to put a tariff on the imported long-staple cotton that comes in competition with sea-island cotton that is grown in the eastern part of the Southern States. The cotton to which the duty applies comes principally from Egypt, some of it from the West Indies, and a little from other countries. It constitutes about one-half of our imports of cotton. There is some upland cotton in this country that grows to a length exceeding one and a quarter inches.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Where?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, I got my information from the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], who lives in a cotton-growing district and who knows something about it, and from standard works on cotton. The real long-staple cotton is a different variety, which differs from the short staple not only in length of fiber but in many other particulars.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The whole bill applies to cotton in excess of an inch and three-eighths.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The object of the provision was to make a classification which would determine the duty on the foreign cotton.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, upon the merits of my amendment let me say that paragraph 14, which provides for a duty of 7 cents a pound on cotton having a staple of 1⅛ inches or more can not be justified either as protection or as a revenue legislation. If it is designed as a protective tariff on long-staple cotton it fails miserably, because but about 1 per cent of the cotton produced in the United States has a staple of 1⅛ inches or more. The statistics compiled by the Bureau of Crop Estimates show that 98½ per cent of the cotton grown in this country has a staple less than 1⅛ inches in length, so I am conservative in making that statement.

Those who believe in a tariff for revenue only can not support this paragraph as written, because almost half of the cotton imported from Egypt and practically all of the cotton which comes from Peru will escape the payment of any duty. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has pointed out, the cotton from upper Egypt does not have a staple as long as 1⅛ inches. Peruvian cotton varies in staple from 1⅛ to 1¼ inches, so it will come in duty free. The following figures furnished me by the Department of Commerce show the total imports of cotton into the United States for the 12 months ending July, 1920:

Countries of production.	Pounds.
Nicaragua	422
Panama	9,840
Mexico	32,671,216
British West Indies	26,126
Dominican Republic	99,824
Haiti	5,156,430
Argentina	42,570
Bolivia	267,071
Brazil	1,490,768
Ecuador	6,667
Peru	31,713,093
Venezuela	18,879
China	28,592,540
British India	7,178,898
Dutch East Indies	330,466
Japan	56
Egypt	242,501,962

If all of this 350,000,000 pounds of cotton had been taxed at the rate of 7 cents a pound, $24,500,000 in revenue would have been derived therefrom. Importations of cotton broke all records last year, and it is hardly to be expected that the same dumping process will be continued. The normal importation of long-staple cotton from Egypt is about 200,000 bales or 100,000,000 pounds. If my amendment is adopted, about $7,000,000 of much-needed revenue will be collected from that source if this bill becomes a law.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] prints as a part of his report on this bill a table prepared by the Government actuary which shows that revenue to the extent of $130,395,586.50 will be collected at the customhouses if this bill becomes a law. The actuary made the figures in his estimate close enough to include a 50-cent piece, yet nowhere in his table is any mention made of a single dollar of revenue to be derived from this duty on "cotton having a staple of 1⅛ inches or more in length." Perhaps the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means deceived themselves into believing that this provision of the bill will give the growers of long-staple cotton some relief, but they could not fool the actuary. He knew what he was doing when he made up the table that I hold in my hand, which shows no estimated revenue from this proposed duty of 7 cents a pound on imported cotton.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. Has the gentleman considered his amendment in connection with section 15?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have.

Mr. GARRETT. What does the gentleman think will be the effect under section 15?

Mr. HAYDEN. I shall consider that question when we come to it.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it not a fact that if the amendment prevails it will be a wholly unnecessary thing as far as protection is concerned, and the effect will be to increase to the consumer the cost of clothing manufactured in this country?

Mr. HAYDEN. Compensatory duties have heretofore been the means of extending so much unjustifiable protection to woolen manufacturers that I am opposed to that kind of tariff legislation on any commodity. The inherent difficulty of estimating whether long-staple cotton is the material of chief value in a manufactured product containing mixed cotton is bound to lead either to fraud or favoritism. I shall therefore vote to strike out of the bill paragraph 15, which levies a tariff of 7 cents a pound, in addition to the rates of duty imposed by existing law, on manufactures of which long-staple cotton is the principal component material. Let us avoid all such complications and permit each industry to stand on its own foundation.

Mr. Chairman, it is quite evident that I will not have another opportunity to speak on this paragraph of the bill, so I shall discuss in advance the other amendments which I shall offer to it. The first provides for a duty of 30 cents a pound on long-staple cotton, which is the same rate as provided for washed wool in paragraph 16 of this section. Obviously, that is a protective duty and will equalize the cost of production between Egypt and the United States. The Chamber of Commerce of Phoenix, Ariz., recently compiled statistics to show that the average cost of producing a pound of cotton in the Salt River Valley this year was 72 cents. Another set of figures prepared by W. H. Sexton, an expert statistician, for C. G. Jones, E. W. Hudson, and a few other experienced cotton growers of Tempe, Ariz., show that their average cost of production was 52 cents a pound for the present crop.

I have no accurate figures on the cost of producing cotton in Egypt, but I am reliably informed that prior to 1914 agricultural labor was paid 20 cents a day in that country, and that the daily wage of the fellaheen (who may be compared with the Mexican for efficiency) is not more than 40 to 50 cents at the present time. Comparing such wages with the minimum of $3.50 paid for common day labor in Arizona, it is evident that cotton can be produced in Egypt for about one-half of our costs, notwithstanding the fact that the land values and rents are about equal.

If my amendment for a duty of 30 cents per pound is defeated, I shall offer an amendment making the duty 15 cents, the same as is provided in this bill for unwashed wool. Unwashed wool can be compared to seed cotton, which is never imported; but lint cotton is on a parity with scoured wool, for which section 16 extends protection to the extent of 45 cents a pound. I am told that the cost of cleaning Pima cotton prior to spinning is negligible, so that I can safely make this statement.

In case my second amendment is rejected, I shall then offer an amendment making the duty on long-staple cotton 25 per cent ad valorem, which is strictly a tariff for revenue only. The price of Egyptian cotton before the World War was about 20 cents per pound, and it is reasonable to suppose that it will not be worth more than 40 cents per pound in the future. An ad valorem duty of 25 per cent will mean an average tax of 10 cents a pound on a class of cotton which is principally used in the manufacture of fancy dress goods, fine thread, and cord tires for automobiles. I know of no better way to obtain an equitable customs duty than by the imposition of such a tax, which will produce about $10,000,000 annually.

I have demonstrated that section 14 in its present form will produce very little revenue and is practically useless for even incidental protection. It now costs 4 cents a pound in the seed, or at least 15 cents per pound of lint, to pick Pima cotton with Mexican labor in my State. A duty of 7 cents will not equal half the expense of picking and will offer no encouragement to farmers who saw consigned cotton from Arizona sell at $1.26 a pound less than a year ago. If the majority who are in control of the House have any real desire to benefit the producers of long-staple cotton in the United States, they will abandon this camouflage provision and accept my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUMPHREYS) there were—ayes 34, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAYDEN: Page 3, line 2, strike out "7 cents" and insert "30 cents."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Page 3, line 2, strike out "7 cents" and insert "15 cents."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. OVERSTREET) there were—ayes 3, noes 44.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAYDEN: Page 3, line 2, strike out "7 cents per pound" and insert "25 per cent ad valorem."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

15. Manufactures of which cotton of the kind provided for in paragraph 14 is the component material of chief value, 7 cents per pound, in addition to the rates of duty imposed thereon by existing law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 3, lines 3 to 6, inclusive, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make this motion because I do not believe this is the time to undertake to revise or amend in any way the cotton schedule for emergency purposes. As many of you well know, the cotton industry in New England is practically at a standstill to-day. In my home city there are 25,000 employees idle. A smaller number are working only part of the time. It is my opinion, and I am advised that it is the opinion of gentlemen who are familiar with conditions there, who are interested in this great manufacturing industry, that to undertake to put this rate of duty on Egyptian cotton at this particular time will but further add to the stagnation which now exists in that industry.

Mr. BENSON rose.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield to the gentleman from Maryland. As has well been pointed out by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], the long-staple cotton to which this applies is confined principally to Egyptian cotton, which is used in the New England mills for making the finest grades of goods—the mercerized goods, the very fine yarns, and thread. It is also used in the manufacture of automobile-tire fabrics and other similar uses. You would get a duty of 7 cents a pound, under the paragraph which has just been passed, in some grades of cloth made in 21-yard lots, and in other grades a much less quantity; but in using that long-staple cotton it is used with other grades of cotton, and it would be extremely difficult to ascertain just what duty was payable upon manufactured products which have this long staple in them. Furthermore, this committee has advertised hearings, as I understand it, which will be held in January, and about the 26th or 27th it is proposed to undertake a revision of the cotton schedule. As the chairman of the committee knows, and as the other senior members of that committee know, the cotton schedule is rather a scientific proposition. I believe this might well wait until they take up this cotton schedule.

It would be better to take it up and carefully study the question at that time, rather than to put it into this emergency measure.

Unfortunately, my ideas of the methods of passing tariff legislation are not in harmony with the ideas that control on the majority side. I do not think we should undertake tariff legislation by piecemeal, but that we should, before this, have undertaken a general revision. We have a committee of experienced men, for the most part, but this particular thing, I am advised and believe, will postpone the resumption of operations in a great many of those large manufacturing plants in New England that get their supply of other grades of cotton from the southern cotton fields, particularly Mississippi. I think this paragraph should be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAYDEN) there were—ayes 42, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were—ayes 33, noes 76.

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

16. Wool, commonly known as clothing wool, including hair of the camel, angora goat, and alpaca, but not such wools as are commonly known as carpet wools: Unwashed, 15 cents per pound; washed, 30 cents per pound; scoured, 45 cents per pound. Unwashed wools shall be considered such as shall have been shorn from the animals without any cleaning; washed wools shall be considered such as have been washed with water only on the animal's back or on the skin; wools washed in any other manner than on the animal's back or on the skin shall be considered as scoured wool. On wool and hair provided for in this paragraph, which is sorted or increased in value by the rejection of any part of the original fleece, the duty shall be twice the duty to which it would otherwise be subject, but not more than 45 cents per pound.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Schedule K always is the test of whether a bill is a protective tariff bill or a bill drawn from the Democratic standpoint of a tariff for revenue only. In the old days when Mr. Whitman and the Arlington Mills and the Wool Growers' Association of the West combined in order to impose upon the country high tariffs, Schedule K was announced by the experts, who present the protection side of this question always, as the very keystone of the arch. Destroy Schedule K and protection can no longer live as a policy in the United States. This was the theory upon which the Payne-Aldrich bill was constructed, and this was the theory which was rejected overwhelmingly by the people of the United States in the congressional elections two years later. If under the Payne tariff bill a rate of 11 and 12 cents per pound on wool was a proper rate in order to maintain the very keystone of the arch of protection and make a high protective tariff bill, then what shall be denominated a section which increases the tariff on raw wool, on wool in the grease, and these other varieties from 50 per cent to 200 per cent over the Payne rates? If there is any doubt as to whether this is a protective tariff bill—and I think all Democrats will agree with me that the Democratic Party stands against protection—if a rate of from 50 to 200 per cent less than this is ideal and the very keystone of the arch of a protective tariff bill, then what do these rates mean? Under this analysis this bill can not stand a Democratic test. You gentlemen on the other side will vote for it, of course, every one of you, but with the changed position we occupy now among the nations of the world your constituencies, I predict, will not stand for a high protective tariff two years from now or four years from now. You can not do it and expect your industries to live. It is a plain economic principle. Hereafter the demand for the destruction of protection will come not from the Democrats of the solid South, but I predict that the demand for the destruction of a theory, of an economic principle which makes imports more difficult, which abandons our foreign markets, will come from the sections in the East and from the great consuming centers of this country, from the financial institutions of the country.

And the time will come then for you gentlemen who sit on the other side to determine whether you will stand for a discredited principle, a principle which is discredited and destroyed by the leaders of finance in this country with whom heretofore you have considered yourself to be in line, or the principle for which you now stand.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I predict as surely as the sun will rise to-morrow—I am unable to yield; I regret that I can not—I predict as surely as the sun will rise to-morrow the protective tariff for which you stand on this occasion in this bill will be denounced a year from now, perhaps two weeks from now, by influential constituencies in the eastern portions of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We may approach a time when there will be a realignment of parties, but so far as I am concerned, no matter whether that realignment occurs or not, I propose to stand for the principles for which my party has always stood and against this principle announced in this section which builds up a keystone for the arch of protection stronger and bigger than ever was created by any tariff bill passed by any nation in the history of the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, as I have said, this bill is intended only as a relief measure, an immediate relief measure. I hope at the extra session of Congress, which will undoubtedly be called very shortly after the 4th of March, to see the Congress substitute for this bill a relief measure to remain in effect while we are preparing and passing a scientific revision of our tariff laws—as I say, it is my hope that very shortly after the beginning of the extra session of Congress that the Congress will adopt as a relief measure to prevent great importations of foreign goods coming into this country before we can prepare a tariff bill, either the Payne or the Dingley tariff law as such relief measure. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Chairman, there are in this country 48,000,000 sheep. Only a short time ago, a few years ago, we had 60,000,000 sheep in this country. We consumed more than 500,000,000 pounds of wool annually for clothing for people of the United States. Therefore we must import—on the basis of our present number of sheep—into this country full one-half of the wool consumed by our people. During the war we learned a lesson that we should not soon forget and that is that we were lacking in many essential articles, both food articles, clothing, and war essentials.

There is exported from New Zealand and Australia annually in round numbers 700,000,000 pounds of wool, or three times as much as we need to import. The estimate of the Treasury Department is that under the provisions of this bill for a 12 months' period this bill will yield on wool $83,400,000 of revenue and $11,250,000 of revenue on manufactured woolens. Goodness knows we need the revenue badly; and if this bill will give relief to the people of this country who are raising sheep, an agricultural product of such great necessity for us all, we should at this moment, if possible, give that industry the immediate relief asked for. As I have stated, and I wish to repeat, the woolen men who appeared before our committee, the stock growers of the West, stated that all the sheep on the western ranges are to-day mortgaged for more money than they will sell for on the market. The sheep industry and the cattle industry is in a most chaotic condition financially. The committee, in fixing the rates on wool and other items in this bill, have taken into consideration the distressed condition of those people producing those articles. It is not claimed that this bill is scientific, but it is the best we could agree upon in the short time, having been urged by the people who came here to do something quickly in order to save many men engaged in this industry from bankruptcy. We have done that, and I hope that the committee will stand by the Ways and Means Committee in the rates fixed by this bill. We want to pass the bill to-night. There are many gentlemen here who are very anxious that the bill be passed and sent to the Senate as quickly as possible, that the Senate may take it up to-night, to-morrow, or the next day, or as soon as possible, and pass it, and if possible give the relief sought.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLACK: Page 3, at the beginning of line 10, strike out the figures "15" and insert the figure "8"; after the word "washed," in the same line, strike out the figures "30" and insert the figures "15"; and at the beginning of line 11, strike out the figures "45" and insert the figures "20."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the Payne-Aldrich bill classified clothing wools into three classes—class 1, class 2, and class 3. There was levied on class 1, 11 cents a pound; there was levied on class 2, 12 cents a pound; and on class 3, 4 cents a pound where the value of the wool was under 12 cents and 7 cents a pound where it exceeded 12 cents, and yet we have brought in here and advocated by Democrats as a revenue bill a tariff on clothing wool which proposes as its lowest rate 15 cents a pound, as its next rate 30 cents a pound, and as its highest rate 45 cents a pound.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. No; I can not yield. I have such a short time, and I do not desire to ask for an extension. Now, the gentleman from Michigan quotes figures from the Treasury Department as to the prospective revenue that will be yielded on the measure if this schedule becomes a law.

I was not willing to accept these figures as a guide for my judgment, and so, since the House met to-day, I called up the Statistical Bureau of the Department of Commerce and secured figures as to the amount of wool imported into the United States during the first three quarters of this year, 1920, unwashed, washed, and scoured wool.

Now, according to the figures which I have thus obtained, if the imports of wool for next year should continue at this full rate, even under the prohibitive duties provided in this bill, the amount of the revenue would be less than $45,000,000. The gentleman from Michigan in his speech said it was estimated it would be $82,000,000. I can not figure that it would be anything like that much, even if every pound of it continues to come in under these exorbitant schedules.

Mr. CARTER. Which it would not.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman from Oklahoma is correct. It would not. I do not see how any Member could possibly figure that there would be any considerable importations of wool under these prohibitive rates.

They were not made to raise revenue but to keep out imports; at least that is my opinion. And that is just the reason why I can not support the bill unless its rates are modified and placed on a revenue basis. Recently the farmers of Kansas and other Western States have been demanding an embargo on the importation of wheat from Canada, and prior to the election certain Republican politicians made a great show of sympathy with the idea.

What are our figures as to our trade with Canada, anyway? Is Canada sending us more goods than we are selling them? Not at all. The balance of trade is largely in our favor. For example, in the first nine calendar months of this year the exports of the United States to Canada amounted to $754,536,265, and imports from the same country were $417,631,824. The trade balance is therefore running in our favor with Canada at the rate of nearly $450,000,000 per year.

Exchange rates are against the Canadians and increase the cost of what they buy from us, but they continue to buy, and, next to Great Britain, Canada is our best customer.

What good would our foreign trade do us if we could not collect our pay, and how would we collect our pay except by our exchange of commodities? It would, indeed, be a great stroke of legislative wisdom for us to put an embargo on Canadian wheat when Canada is one of our best customers.

I can not think of a policy which would be more shortsighted. What would be the use of developing foreign trade if we are going to kill it off in that way?

What I have just said as to the unwisdom of an embargo on wheat I think would apply with equal force to an embargo on wool, either by a straight embargo law or by the more indirect means of prohibitive tariff rates.

One of the best tariff speeches that it has been my privilege to read was the one delivered by Senator ROBERT L. OWEN, of Oklahoma, June 15, 1909. In that speech, discussing this very question of prohibitive rates, he said:

It is plain that we can not pursue a policy by which our exports would be paid in gold and not paid in the goods and credits and properties of foreign countries.

It can, therefore, be taken as true that our exports are paid for by imports, and that when we limit our imports we limit our exports and our national commerce. This economic law is as fixed as the law of gravitation.

And then that able and fearless Democrat, Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, of North Carolina, said very recently:

Remember, if a prohibitive tariff or embargo is good in times of emergency it is good in normal times to prevent future emergencies. Can we afford to educate our farmers that high tariffs are his salvation, now and hereafter? The products of our farmers in the United States are in large part exported. How can their exports be paid for by foreigners except by imports? An embargo or prohibitive tariff cuts off the means of paying for our agricultural exports.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, to sum up this whole situation, if any gentleman who advocates the enactment of this bill can show me how the farmers of the United States can be prosperous without a good, healthy foreign trade and how this foreign trade can be carried on without an exchange of commodities, then I will look with more favor on his bill.

Of course, no such showing can or will be made. Therefore I will vote against the bill, because I believe to do so will not only be best for our farming interests, but for the entire country as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri rose.

Mr. FORDNEY. Does the gentleman want five minutes?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I want to offer an amendment striking out the last two words. I want just a minute.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

Mr. FORDNEY. Make it 10 minutes, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY] also desires to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] want time?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Michigan will allow me four minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] moves that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I sent up an amendment to the Clerk's desk a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. Without objection the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLNEY: Page 3, line 21, after the word "pound," insert "Provided, That all wool in transit on the enactment of this bill shall be admitted to the ports of the United States at the present rates of duty."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. OLNEY. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is germane to the paragraph, since the presiding officer practically so decided some moments ago on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, holding that his amendment was germane.

I am speaking from the standpoint of perhaps as ardent and consistent a protectionist as there is in the House, and yet I can not vote for this bill, because I think it is a delusion, a makeshift, and uneconomical. Speaking as a wool merchant in Boston, I think the passage of this bill and its adoption into law would doubtless tremendously stimulate the prices of wools that are now stored in warehouses in Boston, perhaps at a rate of 30 per cent in advance of the present prices. But I do not believe that the passage of this bill will stimulate business as a whole.

To be sure, according to to-day's statistics, there are 48,615,000 sheep in the United States, whose product in grease wool amounts to about 300,000,000 pounds, or about 125,000,000 pounds in a scoured state. If you will look at the report you will notice that there is approximately 600,000,000 pounds of wool in storage in this country at the present time. But bear in mind that nearly 100,000,000 pounds of this large total quantity is still owned by the United States Government and is practically useless, so far as manufacturing purposes are concerned, because it consists largely of tag ends and the undesirable wools which find no market even at public auction.

I do not believe for an instant that the passage of a high protective bill now would stimulate the machinery of New England, the textile mills, where to-day 40 per cent of the employees are out of work or the mills are running on part time, because, after all, the law of supply and demand is preeminent now as ever, and you and I are not buying clothes; we are using our old clothing, with the frayed cuffs and the worn collars, and that condition of affairs will continue to exist until the demand for clothing comes back to us. The same is true of the leather industry and the boot and shoe manufactories of New England, where business is absolutely flat to-day, although there is practically no importation of boots and shoes into this country.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLNEY. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would like to ask my friend from Massachusetts what is the price of Texas wool in the United States to-day?

Mr. OLNEY. I am practically out of the market to-day.

Mr. HUDSPETH. There is practically no market for it.

Mr. OLNEY. That is correct. There is practically no market for it.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then with the crop coming in next spring there will be 900,000,000 pounds on hand by the 1st of May. When will there be a market for it?

Mr. OLNEY. Just as soon as our mills start up, stimulated by the demand for clothing; and you must understand that the 900,000,000 pounds you speak of, when it comes into a scoured condition, represents about 70 per cent shrinkage, so that that would be about 30 per cent of scoured wool, or 300,000,000 pounds.

Mr. HUDSPETH. We use, do we not, each year 525,000,000 pounds?

Mr. OLNEY. Yes. We consume about twice as much wool as we raise, but I tell you the manufacturing industries of this country can not do without Australian and South American wools and wools used for felting and knitting purposes, and they will buy such wools despite a high tariff.

The object of my amendment is perhaps a moral obligation that we owe to these wool merchants who in good faith, prior to this date, have purchased wool in Australia and far-away points. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have action taken on my amendment, which in effect provides that wools in transit, upon the ocean, for instance, be admitted to the ports of the United States at the now prevailing rate of duty in case, of course, this bill is enacted into law during this session of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that his amendment was read for information and that it will have to be reoffered again.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words of the section, and I do this merely for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill now under consideration. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I take it that the debate is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY], and I understand there are four minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope this amendment will not prevail. As has already been stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY], we have here in the country now at least 600,000,000 pounds of wool in storage, subject to an annual consumption of about 525,000,000 pounds. In addition to the amount already in storage there will be the spring clip of about 300,000,000 pounds, so that altogether we have right in sight at this time wool enough to last this country for a year and a half. Besides this there are large cargoes afloat consigned to this country. Wool has piled up and accumulated in Australia and New Zealand during the war because of the lack of shipping facilities, and they desire to dump that wool upon this country. The result has been, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] has stated, that there is practically no market for wool. It can not be sold at any price, except some fine grades for which there is a special demand.

Now, the demand for clothing, which will set the mills going, will come when the retailer puts down his price to correspond with the value of the wool as it is in the market. When that is done trade will be resumed, the mills will begin operation, and the consumption of wool will increase. But in the meantime, if we did not import another pound of wool——

Mr. OLNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. OLNEY. Does not the gentleman think his figure of 600,000,000 pounds is an overestimate, when about 300,000,000 pounds of that is wool in the grease, and on a scoured basis you will get only about 100,000,000 pounds, and therefore there are only about 400,000,000 pounds of wool ready to manufacture?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understand that the estimate of our annual consumption is on wool in the grease, and that is the reason why I make the estimate on storage in the same manner.

Mr. OLNEY. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. OLNEY. Does not the gentleman think my amendment is reasonable, since it does not apply to wool which is to follow in the consecutive months of February, March, and April, but only concerns wool in transit and wool on the ocean coming to this country?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I think not; because these gentlemen will get the benefit of this rate when the wool is landed here. It will prevent more wool from coming in competition with the wool that they have bought and shipped in. It will also, I expect, somewhat increase the price of wool in this country, although that price will not be anything like the price predicted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY]. These importers already have the benefit of the low rate of exchange. They will suffer no loss, although they may not make all the profit they expected.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. With all this surplus of wool and surplus of cotton and surplus of corn and beef and pork, why does not the consuming public get these things cheaper?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will have to ask the wholesaler and retailer about that.

Mr. LAYTON. That is what we had better legislate on.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The retailer is trying to work off his stocks which he has on hand at the old price. If woolen goods and clothing were priced to compare with wool there would be no complaint about the price of woolen goods. Inevitably they must come down. This bill will not, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] says, tend to keep prices up. For more than a year the manufacturer will be using wool that was bought at prices ruinously low.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLNEY: Page 3, line 21, after the word "pound," insert "Provided, That all wools in transit on the enactment of this bill shall be admitted to the ports of the United States at the now prevailing rates of duty."

Mr. LONGWORTH. I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] to strike out the paragraph.

The question being taken, the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

17. Wool and hair of the kind provided for in paragraph 16, when advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, and manufactures of which wool or hair of the kind provided for in paragraph 16 is the component material of chief value, 45 cents per pound in addition to the rates of duty imposed thereon by existing law.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY: Page 3, line 22, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, we are approaching the close of the consideration of this bill. In my presentation of my views I have not attempted to delay the passage of this bill. I know it can be passed in this House and will be passed. If I wished to delay matters I could demand the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill, which would necessarily put it over until to-morrow. But a number of gentlemen on both sides expect to take the 9.40 train to-night for their homes, and I have not interposed my remarks as the consideration of this bill has progressed for the purpose of delay. I hope the bill will be concluded to-night. I know there is nothing I can do that will change it in any particular. I would if I could. I do not want to disturb the plans of those gentlemen who expect to go home to-night to enjoy their Christmas vacations. This bill violates from my viewpoint every economic principle that can be possibly applied to a bill of this character.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I have only five minutes, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I observe that the only paragraph the gentleman from Illinois failed to criticize in the bill was the paragraph on lemons. Was that because the candidate in his party for the Presidency in several speeches made in California advocated a duty on lemons not only sufficient to equalize the cost of production but the freight rate to New York?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will say to the gentleman that the paragraph on lemons is just as objectionable and indefensible as any paragraph of the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then why did not the gentleman move to strike it out?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. It is just as bad as the rest.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did the gentleman have the Democratic candidate's speeches in mind——

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I do not care to yield to the gentleman for a speech; I do not agree with the gentleman's views, and I would not have any respect for my opinions on the tariff if I did.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman confirms me in the belief that I am right.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I lost the gentleman's remark; I did not hear it, or I would reply to it in terms. I want to say that the gentleman from Ohio representing as he does a consuming constituency may have some difficulty in the future in defending his position on this bill. The gentleman from Ohio prevented amendments all the way through by raising points of order. The gentleman from Ohio is as responsible as any man on that side for the increasing amounts his constituents will have to pay for flour and other necessaries of life if this bill becomes a law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Under the Underwood tariff bill we have reached out for the markets of the world. Under the Underwood tariff bill to-day in far off India our great steel industries have attained the ascendancy over the industries of England herself. We are advised that in the dark continent of Africa American trade under the Underwood tariff bill has assumed the ascendancy.

I do not expect the worsted manufacturers in New England to agree to any proposition which means the extension of the industries of the United States. To-day we can go to any section of the world and we can proudly proclaim: Here are the products of the industries of my country, here they send their goods. And these representatives of the old New England school propose to stop that sort of thing, to destroy the proud position we occupy to-day among the commercial nations of the world. [Applause.]

To-day on the seas of the world our merchant navy ranks almost supreme. To-day on the seas of the world over 2,000 ships carry the American flag sailing over 62 ocean lanes, carrying our surplus of manufactures and bringing back to this country the exports of other sections of the world. If our importations are to cease, if our exportations are to cease, then the magnificent merchant navy built up by the party that has been in control for the last eight years must rot in our ports.

This badly balanced bill, if it should become a law, will ruin the industries it seeks to aid. These products sell at a lower price than in the immediate past, but they are not selling for lower prices than they did under the old Payne-Aldrich bill. Gradually we are going back from the Democratic days of high prices to the old Republican days of low prices for farm products, and every Republican victory is reflected in lower and lower prices. One more Republican victory and the farming industry will sink to the old Republican level. We are going back from the Democratic period of high prices for cattle to the old Republican days of low prices for cattle. We are going back from the Democratic days of $2 a bushel for corn to the old Republican days of 50 cents a bushel for corn. These products commenced to drop just the day after the election in Maine, and on that same day stocks commenced to go up. We do not know where we are going, but we know that we are on our way in farming sections back to the grand old Republican days of low prices for farm products. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is recognized.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can say what I want to say in five minutes. I have been waiting here all afternoon, listening to members of the committee repeat the same thing constantly.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 10 minutes, notwithstanding the order of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes, notwithstanding the order of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this debate with more than ordinary interest and have noted that the bill has been assailed from very many angles. I have had a good deal of sympathy with much of the opposition that has been uttered. However, it strikes me as I have listened to the arguments, pro and con, that there is an emergency and that the emergency ought, if possible, to be met in some way. I do not believe, of course, that this is a scientific effort at tariff legislation. No one would even intimate such a thing. There are but 16 items covered by this emergency bill, and as I recall the last tariff measure covered something like 657 items. This simply picks out the items of production on the farm that have suffered from conditions produced under the stress of war. If there is any justification for the passage of the bill at all, it must be upon the basis upon which the committee has placed it. I appreciate the situation that has been portrayed here.

War has been over for two years. Up to the time of the closing of the war all of the world was enlisted in production to meet war needs. We were straining every nerve, not only in America but in every country, to produce to the maximum. The cry went out that we must have the food and the materials in order to win the war, and there was scarcely an idle person anywhere in any nation on the globe. When the war ended, ours was the only country that had ready money. War-ridden Europe was without money and credit, and other countries in Europe that were not belligerent and even some countries that were belligerents, like New Zealand and Australia, began bending their energies to produce for the war demands; but when the war ended they found themselves stocked up with such a supply as they had never had before, and for two years we have witnessed the inability of war-torn Europe to buy the world's production, and yet the price was on a war basis and ours the only country able to pay cash.

The result was that all the world made America a dumping ground for the sake of getting our money. Australia flooded our markets with the excess products that she could not sell in Europe, but could sell in America, for our ready cash. The same thing was true of South America and in all of the countries of the Old World not belligerent. The result was inevitable that quantities of rice and quantities of wool and quantities of corn and of wheat and of potatoes and of cattle and of other agricultural products, especially those included in the classes named in this bill, something like 16 in number, came to our country unhindered. What is the situation? We have got them here at prices below the cost of our own production. They have come from Europe, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, and South America, and they have received war prices for them and the result is that American production is to-day without a market—glutted. I realize as much as any Member on either side of the aisle that this glutting of the market and the falling of prices are inevitable. I know as you know that industry everywhere is slowing down. Production on a war scale can not continue, liquidation of war conditions must come. Prices must come down even though at great loss to the producer. The farmer, the basic producer, suffered more poignantly than anybody else, and this legislation is designed to give him some relief. If we do not lay an embargo—and I do not think people would want to do that—then let us put the barrier of an import duty up against further floods of importation, higher than it now is—and many of these articles are on the free list—and then if Europe, selling to America, competes with American producers, let her pay a duty to help run the expenses of the Government. That is the philosophy of this bill.

As a scientific measure, I repeat, it has absolutely no defense. It is not an embargo, for still the markets are open. But as remedial legislation to protect further our products from importations from Europe at cheap labor cost, it is a measure that will win my support as a temporary relief until a tariff measure can be brought in. I would not support it as legislation of a permanent character, as it has no scientific basis. Notwithstanding its temporary character, I do not object to the committee refusing to admit these proposed amendments, for if you did in one article you would have to do it in every other article. The committee has selected the articles which have depreciated 50 per cent in value, and as temporary relief, as an emergency measure, I am voting for it. But, Mr. Chairman, my vote on this measure must not be taken as a justification for hasty and ill-digested legislation to heal the injury of war conditions under which we are now suffering.

There is no way by which we can prevent injury inevitable from the manner in which the war was conducted. In building the war machine we invited profiteering, both in capital and labor, and thereby unreasonably increased the cost level of production. As has often been stated, this was done by the Government greatly increasing the scale of war workers, shortening the day's work, overtime pay, enlarging the force to do the same work, and many other steps, all designed to push up the cost of production. The farmer had to meet this Government competition. He was compelled to pay abnormally high prices for all he needed on the farm, including labor. In this way he was in the same situation as the manufacturer, only the latter, if doing Government work, had the Government as his market. The end of the war cut off this market. Prices began to topple from their dizzy heights. The farmer is always the last to benefit in rising prices and the first to suffer in falling prices.

We are in the process of readjustment, known in the business world as liquidation. It is the stage of returning to normal, where the laws of trade operate upon economic lines, where the law of supply and demand again is permitted to operate without the interference of Government, either to retard or to artificially stimulate. Everybody should assist in getting away from the war basis of abnormal cost of production. We can not reduce the cost of living and at the same time keep up the abnormal cost of production. In this process of liquidation all classes will suffer the evil effects of overstimulus of war, because the Nation will find an overproduction without a corresponding ability for consumption.

Banks, responding to this war stimulus, overloaned; hence loans upon goods, safe when made, are now greater than the value of securities upon which loans are made. Industrial values of all sorts, like the motor properties, have fallen precipitately. One after another class of securities have and are still passing their dividends, because raw material purchased at war-inflated prices cost more than the finished article will now command in the market; hence an inevitable loss.

This is precisely the situation of the farmer, only he will suffer more poignantly because less able to bridge over. This is especially true of the small farmer, the tenant, and the stock raisers. It is a most unfortunate situation. While this suffering is inevitable, its causes are well known, and its results need not be more than temporary, if we do not make the blunder of attempting to continue a war scale. While it is claimed that the fall in prices will amount to between two and five billions of dollars' loss, it is a change in price rather than value and must be, as I see it, marked off as so much loss, due to the method of financing the war. It can not be cured by psychologic remedies. Most of our basic industries are solvent. Our fiscal institutions are sound. We have the largest production in foodstuffs. In the seven cereals our product this year is nearly 6,000,000,000 bushels greater than the average of the five-year period immediately preceding this year. The real trouble is in the augmented costs due to war financing.

The transportation system is now rapidly getting on a sound basis, so that from that source—the most important—we need have little fear.

Upon every hand we note a marked increase in labor efficiency, which is one of the most hopeful symptoms of the future. Our wealth is intact and only awaits the application of sound business principles again. In my opinion, we should guard against the clamor for unwise legislation at such a period. It can at best be merely palliative and will only defer the day of accounting if we refuse to see the real situation.

Only recently a Congressman expressed his belief that we should have a debased currency to match the inflated price. His contention was that a debt made in war time was so inflated that it was just that it should be paid in inflated money. Of course, this is the argument for the greenback dollar. It was at the bottom of the 16-to-1 silver contention back in ninety-six. It is the basis of populism. It is the doctrine that always thrives in times of depression. This proposal is serious, because under such clamor this Congress is not different from other Congresses. Men will follow what they think their people back home want. This is especially true in parts of the West and is growing with leaps and bounds in the South, which has come to look to the Government for all sorts of paternal nostrums to cure our shortcomings.

There are many proposals for relief. Some of them go to fundamentals, and these should be favorably considered.

At the close of the last session the House passed a bill permitting farmers' cooperative associations for the purpose of marketing. It recognized the principle of collective bargaining. This will soon become a law. I voted for the law both in the Rules Committee and in the House, but not until it was amended so as to cure the class-legislation feature, which I had consistently opposed.

Another proposal demanded from various interests is to lay an embargo upon certain imports, such as wool, corn, wheat, live stock, and so forth. This proposal is based upon the tremendous importation of goods from foreign countries; wool from Australia and South America, wheat from Canada, and so forth, which largely destroys the home market for American products. The proposal is too drastic, and is indefensible upon grounds of sound economy. It is vastly better to revise the Underwood bill as soon as possible, which can not be done until after March 4. We may be justified, in view of Wilson's assured veto of such revision, to enact a temporary tariff measure of remedial character, such as is now before us, especially if it can be agreed upon by both Republicans and Democrats. This will allow tariff revision to await the special session, when Republicans have full control. Embargoes will cut off all imports and in a large degree will prevent our exports. In a degree a temporary tariff measure such as the measure now before us will have that effect. This measure is limited both in number of articles and in time—its operation ceases in 10 months.

The immediate clamor from the cotton sections and the West for a revival of Government agencies, such as the War Finance Corporation, I regarded as both unnecessary and unwise. If the Federal Reserve System will ever break down it will be because it is a Government institution which will become responsive to the clamor for Government relief of various unfortunate situations which appeal for aid through Government loans. We recently had the spectacle of Congress directing the responsible head of the Treasury Department, who advises against the revival of an agency of war whose creation was of doubtful wisdom and whose discontinuance had been ordered because demanded by sound economics, to revive this war agency notwithstanding.

This was done by a Republican Congress after a pledge to the country that we would put "less government in business and more business in government." Such legislation is unwise primarily, because we are laying the foundation for a clamor against the Government to give relief that is not within its province. The revival will not do what is promised by its proponents. While little more than a psychologic effect is expected, our professions here are not limited to that. We are holding out to the distressed farmer a relief which the law is offered to insure.

We are by such legislation inviting attack upon the Government when promised relief is not forthcoming. This feeds antigovernment sentiment in America. It is an unsound practice to proceed in legislation upon the basis that it will do no harm even if it does no good. That is deception, and will only increase the unrest which the legislation is designed to relieve. Such legislation is questionable just now, since it is proposed to further our export trade by a plan of Government credit, instead of permitting the unhindered operation of the Edge law enacted in the last session and under which exports are to be handled by extension of credit without calling upon the Government.

Whatever else this country demands, it will not tolerate further Government loans to Europe, unless better securities than we now have are supplied. We have already loaned $9,660,000,000, and have deferred interest on the same for three years. By that time these loans will amout to $11,000,000,000. If we include what Europe owes for goods already delivered, it will be $14,000,000,000. Europe wants us to cancel these loans as our part of the European war obligation in their fight to make the "world safe for democracy." This note is sounded in official circles of every European country. Britain does not hesitate to tell us her payment depends upon the payment of her loans to other European countries. Our people will gladly give to relieve suffering Europe, but our Government will certainly refuse further loans until Europe shows a disposition to go to work. These countries will take necessary steps when nothing else is left them. Nothing will more greatly stimulate them to work than the certainty that Government loans are ended.

We passed the Edge law, under which exports may be financed by private interests. Under this law the American Bankers' Corporation, with a capital of $100,000,000, is undertaking to do what is proposed by the revival of the War Finance Corporation. In October our exports amounted to the enormous sum of $752,000,000, the largest of any month of the last three years, except last March. I can but think it unwise to revive Government war agencies in peace time. Especially do I believe it unsound for the Government to enlarge upon business participation to enlarge credit at the very moment we are suffering from inflation of credit. It is also unsound to enter upon class legislation to appease a sectional clamor such as we now hear from the cotton producers and some of our wheat and corn growers. If we do it for one, we will be called upon to do it for others. If foreign credits are to be increased, it must be done outside of Government obligations. Only last week we adopted a proposal which will permit the Government's obligations to be enlarged $1,000,000,000, at the very hour we are battling with the problem of reducing these obligations.

Congress should treat the matter of war liquidation as a business proposition. It must be carried on under the laws of business. Any attempt at Government financing will involve possibilities fraught with danger. Labor will be justified in demanding Government subsidies to keep up wages to tide over. Where relief is demanded on behalf of the public it should be taken. Investors will demand security upon investments; capital will go into hiding in self-defense; business will become prostrate; revenues will slow down; taxes will continue to be of greater burden and more difficult to pay.

Fiat remedies will be proposed and we will again face the age-old demand for the production of wealth without work by Government decree. Laws encouraging production should not be withheld. Laws protecting the produce from foreign competition are to be encouraged. But Government operation is not advisable. Too much Government interference with legitimate enterprise we pledged to prevent. Government financing of further foreign loans must not be undertaken. Especially war agencies must not be continued in time of peace, much less must we not revive those already dismantled. This is our most recent pledge, supported by the most emphatic verdict in the most stupendous majority ever delivered. If we ignore our pledges, the people will as readily turn away from the party now in control as they did toward it in the last election. The farmer has a right to demand all other elements to share in the losses incident to the war.

Liquidation must come. War levels can not be permanent. All classes should assist in readjustment. Where relief by law can be lent it should not be withheld. But the remedy must not be worse than the disease, and the public must not be deceived by promises that can not be kept. No mere palliative can be substituted for sound business principles. This is no time for quack remedies.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The rates of duty imposed by section 1 (except under paragraphs 15 and 17) in the case of articles on which a rate of duty is imposed by existing law, shall be in lieu of such rate of duty during the 10 months' period referred to in section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The duties imposed by this act shall be levied, collected, and paid on the same basis, in the same manner, and subject to the same provisions of law, including penalties, as the duties imposed by such act in 1913.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH, Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 15275, had directed him to report the same back without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. J. Res. 212. Joint resolution directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes; and

S. 4565. An act extending the time for the doing of annual assessment work on mining claims for the year 1920 to and including July 1, 1921.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7930. An act to provide for the treatment in hospital of diseased alien seamen.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I report the pension appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois presents a privileged report. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15344) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the pension appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas reserves all points of order on the pension appropriation bill reported by the gentleman from Illinois.

EMERGENCY TARIFF BILL.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FISH. Is it in order to move to recommit the bill to the committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send up his motion to recommit.

Mr. BLANTON. A third reading has been had, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the motion is only in order after the third reading of the bill. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FISH moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith, incorporating in the bill the temporary duties on dairy products equal at least to the duties in the commodities in the Payne-Aldrich bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion is out of order under paragraph 3 of Rule XXI.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that the motion is out of order. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FORDNEY. That adds an item to the bill, which is not permissible.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York holds that it is permissible under the rules of the House to recommit this bill at this time in order that the committee, which has the power itself to add any items it desires, may do so, although the House itself is unable to do so, and for that reason I had recourse to this procedure of making the motion at this time to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that the motion to recommit is not in order under the rules of the House. The motion of the gentleman from New York seems to direct the committee, if adopted, to include in the bill items which would not appear to be germane to any of the items in the bill nor to the bill itself. It does not specify particular items or rates of duty except by reference to the provisions of measures passed by the Congress, and therefore the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order. The question is upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 194, nays 85, answered "present" 6, not voting 146, as follows:

It will be observed that no appropriation is asked for at this time, but that if the holding of the proposed congress be authorized by the Congress of the United States, it may be that the dairy organizations of the United States may, if found necessary, ask the Congress for a small appropriation in addition to the $100,000 which they themselves purpose to raise.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—THE DYE INDUSTRY.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments regarding an editorial in the New York Times of the 21st instant and a communication to it from Dr. Charles H. Herty, to both of which my attention was called in a letter received yesterday signed by John Franklin Crowell. The fact that both the communication and the editorial refer to me personally, and evoked this inquiry, must be my explanation to the Senate for trespassing upon its time. The letter which inclosed one of these documents is brief, and I shall read it:

Your reputation for fairness and public spirit and attitude on business questions, from which your position in the dyestuffs bill seems to some to be a departure, leads me to ask whether your actual position is correctly represented in the inclosed clipping. While I have no thought of financial interest in the Longworth bill, it seems to me to be in line with public interest and deserving of support. I am equally sure that you must have some good reason for your position, and I would appreciate being advised.

The editorial bears the caption "The Threatened Dyestuff Industry," and I can read it in less time than in attempting to state its purport.

THE THREATENED DYESTUFF INDUSTRY.

Like the American merchant marine, the dye and dyestuff industries were an incident and achievement of the War with Germany; in other words, if there had been no war there would now be no American ocean ships to carry American cargoes to every port in the world, and there would be no valuable dyestuff industry, indispensable to manufacturers and employing a great army of workmen. No American would propose the scrapping of the merchant marine or tolerate it. Why should the dyestuff industry be scrapped or sacrificed? Any mistake in legislation dealing with this American industry that grew out of the exigencies of the war would cause rejoicing in Germany. The Germans alone would benefit by it. They would profit enormously if our new industry were neglected and allowed to languish, ultimately to perish.

It should not be forgotten that during the war the Germans turned dye factories into poison-gas factories and were very near to winning the war in the drive of March-April, 1918, by gassing the allied troops. Two years ago, when American hospitals were filled with soldiers suffering tortures from the effects of the enemy's poison gas—hundreds of soldiers had been asphyxiated and died on the field—the American dyestuff industries were struggling toward prosperity without the aid of German dyes, and public opinion demanded that they should be made self-sustaining, so that they could stand alone and be independent. A good deal of capital has since been invested on the justifiable assumption that Congress would assist with necessary legislation after the war when Germany endeavored to recapture her dye and dyestuff trade.

At the first session of the present Congress Mr. LONGWORTH, of Ohio, introduced in the House a bill to safeguard the industry for a limited period and to enable consumers to obtain dyes which American producers are not yet able to furnish. The measure was described as "a bill to regulate the importation of coal-tar products and to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof." American textile concerns were to be supplied with imported dyes through a commission which would issue licenses upon application. The commission, consisting of representatives of leading manufacturers' associations, was to allow only importations actually needed.

I might say, Mr. President, that that commission is still functioning and excluding all dyes that are not a prime essential to American industries.

In England a licensing bill has passed the House of Commons and will become a law. In the interval since ratification of the peace treaty the Germans have "dumped" dyes and dyestuffs valued at £5,000,000 into England, and the home industry would be ruined without legislative help.

England placed an embargo upon all German dyes very shortly after the armistice, and so did France; but both were soon compelled to repeal those drastic provisions in order to secure a sufficient supply for their textile industries.

In this country the home industry will collapse unless legislation on the lines of the Longworth bill is provided. The Longworth measure has already passed the House. In the Senate two Senators, THOMAS, of Colorado, and MOSES, of New Hampshire, prevented passage, and unless their obstruction is overcome by the plain logic of the situation or by closure in an extremity the American dyestuff industry is doomed. If it deserves support and assistance—and there should be no cavilling about the wisdom of sustaining and encouraging the industry—the Longworth bill can be amended to perfect it. Before the peace treaty is ratified or peace with Germany made in any way the protecting law should be on the statute book.

This editorial, Mr. President, was evidently inspired by the communication from Dr. Charles H. Herty. Dr. Herty is the editor of a chemical journal representing the chemical industry. He was formerly a professor in two of the universities of the South, that of Georgia and of North Carolina. He was then a tariff-for-revenue man, but has since been converted to the extreme doctrine of protection. Macaulay said that there is no zeal like the zeal of an apostate and no hatred like the hatred of a renegade. I am not disposed to apply this aphorism in all its harshness to this gentleman, notwithstanding the fact that his zeal for an embargo on dyestuffs imports would fully warrant my doing so.

The doctor went on a mission to France and Germany last winter partly to secure dyestuffs, which he did not secure, and partly to ascertain the condition of the industry over there. He went to Ludwigshafen, where the Badische factories are located; he saw smoke coming from 12 out of 14 chimneys; he never stopped to inquire further but hastened to the seacoast, took the first ship sailing to America, and breathlessly informed the committee because of that situation that the German dyestuff industries had been resurrected, were running full blast, and would soon deluge this country with their merchandise. Before our committee he went so far as to say that our one protection would be to require Germany to scrap and dismantle all her dye and chemical establishments.

I refer to these matters as indicating the extremes of view which this gentleman indulges and which may palliate the making of the absolutely unfounded statements of his communication upon which the Times, which is a very fair and reliable publication, particularly as regards its editorial statements of fact, bases this editorial. I am sure it was made on secondhand information, else its conclusion that without the drastic provisions of the Longworth bill the industry is doomed, for that is both silly and absurd.

I shall not read all of this letter, Mr. President, but shall ask leave at this time to insert it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE DYE BILL—CONDITIONS OF THE INDUSTRY IN GERMANY AND HERE.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

Two years ago, when our hospitals were filled with American soldiers wounded by the poison gases made in German dye factories, when our textile, leather, paper, and other industries were smarting under the experience of servility to a foreign nation for supplies of needed dyes, the thought of the Nation was clear as to the necessity of a complete self-sustained American dye industry.

That thought reflected itself upon the Congress of the United States and found expression more than a year ago in the passage by the House of Representatives of the Longworth bill, a measure adequately protecting for a limited time our rapidly growing dye industry and at the same time insuring ample means for consumers to obtain those dyes which American producers are not yet in position to furnish.

During the intervening year a remarkable situation has developed. Two pictures have been painted which should be exhibited before all thoughtful Americans.

In Germany, despite the protestations of poverty and consequent inability to meet reparation payments, the unification of the great German dye plants, effected in 1916 and originally planned to continue until 1966, has now been extended to the year 2000. For the enlarged operation of these plants new capital is being called and eagerly subscribed by German citizens. Badische, Bayer, and Hoechst are each adding 90,000,000 marks, Berlin Anilin 30,000,000 marks.

An entirely new factor now enters. The world's destiny is more closely bound up in the utilization of nitrogen than in that of any other chemical element. This element when properly harnessed affects food supply, dominates war material, and enters largely into dye manufacture. It is the one raw material of which Germany has an unlimited supply, as it constitutes four-fifths of the atmosphere. For its utilization under the Haber process but little power is required. Prof. Haber, who worked out the details of this process, is the same Prof. Haber who was the head and front of Germany's war gas program. The future operation of the Haber process on a greatly increased scale is now under a special organization controlled by the dye cartel or trust, the present capitalization of the nitrogen organization being fixed at 500,000,000 marks. To-day the American representative of this organization is endeavoring to sell nitrite of soda at very low prices from "that portion of nitrite of soda as produced by the Badische Anilin and Soda Fabrik of Germany through their atmospheric nitrogen development which has been allotted for consumption in the United States." A letter from this agent further states: "We have instructions from Germany to find out the prospects of nitrite of soda consumption in the United States over the year 1921."

That is the picture which, more than any other, bears directly upon the future peace of the world.

Look now at the other picture painted by our own hands.

The Longworth bill went to the Senate more than a year ago, extended hearings were held, a skeptical Senate was convinced, and the bill, indorsed by Republicans and Democrats alike, was favorably reported last spring, though the importers of German dyes and a small group of textile interests opposed it at every step. It has been impossible to gain a vote on the measure. Why? Because two Senators, one a Republican and one a Democrat, Senators MOSES and THOMAS, have conducted a determined filibuster, under the Senate rules, against the measure and are still determined to continue that filibuster.

* * * * * * *

Mr. THOMAS. Dr. Herty says that Badische, Bayer, and Hoechst, who are German manufacturers of dyestuffs and chemicals, have each added 90,000,000 marks to their capital. This is one of his sinister indications of returning German dye prosperity; but, Mr. President, when we consider that the mark is now worth less than 2 cents, when before the war it was worth nearly 25 cents, it will at once be seen that this capital, though prodigious in figures, is actually very small as regards actual value. And it is far less than the water which has recently been injected into the American dye combinations to which I shall shortly refer.

The doctor then refers to the manufacture of nitrates in Germany, which I think the farmers of this country now need about as badly as they have ever needed fertilizer. What a calamity cheap nitrates would now be to agriculture. Dr. Herty, after singing his usual hymn of praise to the Longworth bill, in behalf of which hearings were had which he says converted or convinced a skeptical Senate, refers to the fact that the bill failed to reach a vote because of the opposition of Senators THOMAS and MOSES. Then, he adds:

As a result of this inaction, this uncertainty as to the future, the continued growth of the American dye industry has been seriously set back. Contemplated developments have been postponed; research staffs are being curtailed; chemists whose work had accomplished such brilliant results during the past four years are now seeking employment; capital has become shy; the enthusiasm of the many prospective chemists now filling our university laboratories is becoming chilled—all because two Members of the Senate are obdurate.

The American picture has been blotched. For its restoration only one means remains—the adoption of a closure rule on this bill by the Senate. No matter how great the hesitancy may be regarding the adoption of a closure rule, the situation demands it. Arguments on the merits of the bill are no longer needed. The case has been made out. Bring the measure to a vote. Vital interests are too deeply at stake for two Members of the Senate to block a nation's will.

CHARLES H. HERTY.

NEW YORK, December 17, 1920.

Mr. President, I shall not now inflict another argument upon the Senate regarding this measure, but I will confine myself so far as I can to the charge made and particularly to the editorial in the Times which falsely, although perhaps ignorantly, declares that without the immediate enactment of this particular bill the dye industry is doomed. I may say, however, that as a prelude to this editorial the New York Times on the 7th day of December, 1920, published an article purporting to be a dispatch from Berlin dated the 6th day of December, entitled:

German dye firms prepare to sweep world. Public shares confidence and offers capital.

Then follows a remarkable statement which the uninitiated would construe as meaning that the commercial and industrial activities of the German people and the capitalists of Germany, especially as to this particular industry, were being devoted and all of their energies, all of their time, and all of their money were being consecrated to the rehabilitation of this particular business, and that the alarm was being sounded to the American manufacturer of pending destructive German competition; yet in the next column of the paper—and I have made the clipping together—appeared another dispatch of the same date from Berne, Switzerland, headed:

Germany starving, observers assert. Find children in shocking state from underfeeding, and people perishing of cold. Foerster fears anarchy. Unless effective aid comes quickly no one can foretell the consequences.

In the same paper, on the same page, and in adjacent columns, the New York Times informed the people of the United States, first, that Germany is resuming her antewar prosperous industrial condition; and, second, that her people are starving to death and must have help at once if a great human calamity is to be averted. There is no need to comment upon such a contradiction.

Now, Mr. President, a few words regarding the condition of the dye industry. Before the close of my remarks at the last session I obtained possession of and introduced a contract between the Levinsteins and the Du Ponts under which, like the Pope of old, they divided the world into two great divisions, the eastern half, so far as the dye trade was concerned, to be occupied by the Levinsteins and the western half by the Du Ponts. Shortly prior to, and, I think, on the last day of the session, or late at night on the next to the last day, a Senator from this floor referred to my criticisms of the document, and said that it was merely designed to give to each information concerning a particular trade which might be used for the benefit of all; in other words, that it did not create or tend to create a monopoly simply because there were industries outside the pale of its influence, and, of course, in these days nothing is a monopoly which is not the equivalent of a complete industrial despotism.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[New York Times, Tuesday, December 7, 1920.]

GERMAN DYE FIRMS PREPARE TO SWEEP WORLD; PUBLIC SHARES CONFIDENCE AND OFFERS CAPITAL.

BERLIN, December 6.

All big concerns in Germany are going to fortify themselves with large amounts of new capital so as to face the fight for the world's markets.

The most conspicuous feature of the German money market of late has been the fact that of the three chief dye-making firms, Messrs. Friedrich Bayer, Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik, and the Meister Lucius concern in each calling for 90,000,000 marks of fresh capital. The Anilin Fabrikation Co., another member of the trust which lately announced a dividend of 18 per cent, is calling for an additional 30,000,000 marks. There is, I am told, a rush for these shares, as the public has confidence in the ability of the dye companies, and the latter are equally sure of their future.

A member of the board of directors of a well-known company, which during the last year multiplied its previous year's profits by six-fold, told me the other day that the Dye Trust was so certain of the superiority of its productions that it has no reason to suppose any restrictions will bar its activities in the world's best markets. Dye Trust agents who have been in England, he said, returned greatly encouraged, and from most other countries reports are altogether satisfactory.

Another big concern, that of Messrs. Franz Rasquin & Co., of Muelheim, announced net profits just over 3,000,000 marks, as against 600,000 marks last year, and it increased its dividends from 30 to 40 per cent. The firm's report states that it "has large orders in hand at good prices."

In order to speed up the dye business the trust is unloading its interests in the Merzburg and Opau Chemical Manure Works onto a new company with 500,000,000 marks capital, and the trust arrangement, made in August, 1916, to expire in December, 1965, has been extended so as to remain in force. The capital of the trust, formed of seven companies, will be 962,800,000 marks. Four of the chief firms of the trust employ nearly 1,000 research experts.

Regarding foreign trade, the trust is pressing its export department to obtain relief from export restrictions, and the Government is doing all it can in its own way. I learn that reports, even from such places as Venezuela and China, are very satisfactory. In Venezuela German dyes are pushing out American products, while China took, in the three months of April, May, and June, half the amount of the aniline dyes that England imported in six months. Holland is another market in which German dye firms are doing exceedingly well. During the first half of the present year Holland imported from Germany nearly 18,500,000 florins worth of all kinds of dyestuffs, which at the present rate of exchange means about 380,000,000 marks. Of that amount aniline and tar dyes accounted for 4,500,000 florins, against 180,000 florins for the first half of last year.

It is a curious fact that some German dye firms are running on coal from the United States. German dye-firm agents who have been to the United States report an extremely cool reception, and it is recognized that there will still be a fight for the trade there.

BERNE, SWITZERLAND, December 6.

For some time past persons of all nationalities returning from Germany have been warning the world with ever increasing vehemence that the great majority of the German people are too underfed to endure the coming winter, even if they could keep their homes warmed, whereas, on the contrary, their homes are mostly unheated. To-day Prof. F. W. Foerster, well known not only as a man of science, but on account of the moderation and courage of his attitude during the war, warns the civilized world through the medium of the Neus Zuercher Zeitung that unless help on a large scale can be given to Germany immediately disaster must overtake her and Europe.

"Besides holding solemn conferences, eminent financiers of all countries absolutely must meet to discuss the desperateness of the food conditions in central Europe," he says. "Before their proposals can be acted upon experienced organizers throughout the civilized world must collaborate to undertake relief measures on a large scale in order temporarily to check the underfeeding in German towns and cities. The impending starvation of millions of people during the winter cold is heartrending, and there could indeed be no finer way of celebrating the first consolidation of the League of Nations in Geneva than by taking extensive measures to help central Europe.

"Should Germany continue to suffer so acutely from underfeeding she will develop into a terrible powder magazine, threatening all Europe, as will appear every day more clearly."

Dr. Foerster contends that it is useless to expect Germany to rehabilitate Europe by her labor because she is fast becoming, if she hasn't already become, too nervously and mentally exhausted and too physically weak to do so, even with the best will in the world. Again, he insists on what observers have said that her mental exhaustion and hopelessness expose her to every kind of mental epidemic, such as bolshevism, and cause the German people to listen to wild utterances to which in normal circumstances they would be far too sensible to pay any attention.

British and American Quakers have done much for German women and children, but while grateful for their efforts, Dr. Foerster says these are merely a drop in the ocean. Neutral medical men who have visited various parts of Germany lately bear out Dr. Foerster, and one doctor narrates, without surprise, that an American lady belonging to an American Quaker commission sent to Berlin fainted in a dispensary at sight of the state of Berlin children who had been brought in wrapped in newspapers and in an indescribable condition owing to underfeeding. The condition of new born and older children is so distressing that a Berlin physician has gone the length of seriously addressing parents and telling them that in the present circumstances it is their duty not to bring children into such a world.

Dr. Foerster asks the public not to accuse him of propaganda, and few who know his attitude during the war would be inclined to do so.

Mr. THOMAS. I made the statement then, and I repeat it now, that the real purpose behind this measure—which is not needed at all—is to effectuate a great single consolidated interest here, representing not only this particular branch of chemical development, but the entire chemical industry of the United States. I also made the assertion that the vast capital of the Du Ponts, derived from their various activities, gave them the ability to absorb other industries practically without limitation; and that statement has been verified by the fact that during the vacation of this body the Du Pont Co. has acquired absolute control of the General Motors Co. Of course, that is not an industry connected directly with the subject of my remarks, but it indicates that the income of this vast industrial enterprise is so huge that its beneficiaries may at will absorb any business that may be in the market through a transfer of its corporate shares.

I also then emphasized the very prosperous condition of the dye industry, as represented by the Du Ponts and their competitors. I now call attention, as confirmatory of that statement, to an advertisement of the Du Pont Co. which appears in the Color Trade Journal for December. It consists of a beautiful and attractive lithograph or steel engraving or picture of what is called "the heart of the American dyestuffs industry, the Deepwater works of the Du Pont Co. at Deepwater, N. J.," with a statement in the form of an advertisement, wherein this company commits itself:

Building for permanence and not to meet a war-time emergency, our vast Deepwater plant is the visible pledge of the Du Pont Co. to America that her dyestuffs needs will be met, no matter what the situation without her borders.

Let us contemplate that for a moment. It "will be met, no matter what the situation without her borders." Yet Herty and the Times declare that the industry is doomed if we do not speedily place an embargo upon the importation of German dyes and increase the duties now prevailing and which the dye manufacturers themselves were permitted to write in 1916.

From the research laboratory, through every phase of manufacture back to the checking laboratory, adequate facilities, involving a tremendous investment, are provided for large-scale production of the essential dyestuffs required by the textile manufacturers and other dyestuffs-consuming industries.

That is the Du Pont statement to the people; but there are other announcements in the same periodical upon this subject which are very illuminating.

I turn next to the advertisement of the United States Color & Chemical Co., on the next page, presenting pictures of nine different establishments belonging to it, and from their appearance certainly in a state of high efficiency. The text of the advertisement is equally illuminating.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not wish to curtail the interesting remarks of the Senator from Colorado, but I have here two reports from the Committee on Banking and Currency that ought to be acted on to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall take but a very little time. I should not have asked the indulgence of the Senate but for the personal nature of the communication and editorial to which I have called attention.

Mr. McLEAN. If it is the Senator's purpose to close by 1 o'clock I shall not interrupt him further at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall occupy only a very few moments, I hope, beyond what I have already taken.

There are other advertisements of other equally prosperous institutions engaged in this business, evidently oblivious of the doom which hangs over them because of the unpatriotic and reprehensible conduct of two Senators of the United States.

Another combination, this of dye manufacturers themselves, during the interval between our adjournment and our reassembling, is that of the Barrett Co. The Barrett Co. was prosecuted in 1913, or shortly afterwards, and successfully so, for a violation of the antitrust law. It seems, however, to have recovered from that knockout blow, if it was one, and is now one of five large corporations which have consolidated to form the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation. The president of the Barrett Co. announced in the Barrett Trail for October that—

All of the merging companies will be run as independent entities. So that as far as the Barrett Co. is concerned there is contemplated no change of any kind in its manner of conducting its business or in its personnel.

The Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation made a statement during the last week of September, 1920, scarcely 60 days ago, giving the assets, liabilities, and income of the consolidated companies—the Barrett Co., the National Aniline & Chemical Co., the Solvay Process Co., the Semet-Solvay Co., and the General Chemical Co.

Here is the financial statement of this suffering, this doomed corporation:

The income account covered the first six months of 1920, during which time the net income before depreciation and taxes was $22,381,649. After reserve and taxes the net income available for dividends was $12,825,241. Total assets on December 31, 1919, amounted to $223,941,660, and current assets, $94,175,790. Current liabilities on the same date amounted to $29,161,845.

Does this showing resemble that of a tottering and practically doomed enterprise?

The proportion of outstanding stocks of the consolidating companies is given:

Barrett Co., preferred, 93.78 per cent; common, 95.14 per cent.

National Aniline Co., preferred, 90.35 per cent; common, 98.18 per cent.

Solvay Process Co., 99.82 per cent.

Semet-Solvay Co., 97.01 per cent.

General Chemical Co., preferred, 92.71 per cent; common, 95.83 per cent.

And these, Mr. President, have followed the usual course. This capitalization has been used as the basis for an added capitalization, a watered capitalization, a fictitious capitalization; and when it comes to die because of the obstructive tactics of two Senators it will have the consolation that in its career it never missed a single opportunity offered by the practices of this commercial world for the dropsical increase of a capital stock as the basis of prices for its products to the consumers of this country.

Of the other companies involved in the merger, the National Aniline & Chemical Co., organized in 1917, represents an amalgamation of a large number of other interests. It has capital stock, authorized and outstanding, of 395,900 shares common stock of no par value, but of the stated value of $5 per share, and $23,000,000 7 per cent cumulative preferred. A large part of the common stock is owned by the General Chemical Co., and so forth.

The Solvay Process Co.'s authorized capitalization is $36,000,000; outstanding, $22,500,000.

The Semet-Solvay Co., authorized, $20,000,000; outstanding, $16,000,000.

The General Chemical Co., authorized $20,000,000 common and $20,000,000 6 per cent cumulative preferred. Outstanding May 15, 1920, $19,000,000 common, $16,000,000 preferred, par of $100.

Mr. President, I have said sufficient for my purpose. I have shown facts and figures supplied by some of these institutions themselves. The claim that this bill is essential to their continued existence is utterly and incredibly false. It can have but one purpose—to force the hand of this Congress during its short session by the imposition of a cloture upon the Senate, to the end that the monopoly shall be made absolutely complete and, of course, upon the unselfish and patriotic plea that it is essential as a war industry to the protection of the Republic in the event hostilities shall again occur between this and some other nation.

Let me now refer for a moment to some figures showing our imports and exports of dyestuffs. I read from the same journal.

For the month of September our domestic exports to all countries of aniline dyes—I will not refer to the dyes which are not produced from coal-tar derivatives—were $2,299,516. Those are the figures of our exports. Our imports of alizarin dyes amounted to $3,054; colors or dyes not elsewhere specified, $314,659. This is the dyestuff import trade that is "overwhelming" the American industry. At that rate, Mr. President, the total annual imports will not exceed $2,000,000 or $2,500,000. But here is something equally assuring in this journal entitled:

United States foreign trade for 1919 and 1920 in finished coal-tar colors and indigo. (Prepared by the Division of Statistics, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.)

From this it appears that our imports of dyes in 1919, including all sorts of dyes, totaled $3,169,276.

Coming to the growth of exports, on page 197, we have this information: First, that Switzerland is now the chief source of coal-tar colors and dyes and of synthetic indigo imported into the United States in the calendar years 1918 and 1919.

Exports of aniline dyes—

Exports, mind you—

amounted to $10,183,948 in the fiscal year 1919, but increased to $17,130,397 in 1920, a gain of 68 per cent in the last year.

The high tide of German importation of dyes to this country scarcely exceeded $15,000,000 per annum. This industry, this American industry, controls very largely the export trade in dyes. It is so powerful in its activities and so prosperous at present—and I am glad of it—that the only need for foreign dyes manifested in our trade reports is embodied in the figures, less than two and a quarter millions a year; and, of course, constituting dyes which do not enter into competition with domestic dyes and which the American trade must have, else the War Trade Board, which sits clothed with power and majesty just below the War, State, and Navy Department Building, issues its permits, according to its own discretion, or refuses them, which is more likely the case, for the importation of dyes which are absolutely needed, which up to this time have not been manufactured here.

But let us proceed:

With the return to peace it is evident that whatever the demand for dyes made in Germany may be, that country will never regain its lost supremacy in the world trade in dyestuffs.

Mr. REED. Is that an editorial?

Mr. THOMAS. This is the report of the United States foreign trade for 1919 and 1920 in finished coal-tar colors and indigo, prepared by the Division of Statistics, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, but published in a periodical which is devoted to the passage of this bill.

I continue reading:

The United States was first to establish a domestic industry sufficient to meet the demands of the home market. This was done on private initiative and capital.

That is the way it ought to have been done.

The British Government has established a definite policy, backing it financially, to develop this industry and maintain it so that England will not again be dependent on outside sources for its colors and dyes. Although the British production is constantly increasing, it has not been able to overtake the increasing demand. A recent estimate gives the total output as equal to about 80 per cent of the dyes actually consumed in the United Kingdom.

The United Kingdom seems to be doing pretty well.

France, Italy, and Japan are producing some dyestuffs, but due to lack of raw materials and to other difficulties incident to establishing the manufacture these countries can not yet supply their own textile factories with the quantity and variety of colors needed. Germany, it is now conceded, will not be the strenuous competitor she was formerly in the foreign trade. Switzerland is the only country, other than the United States, now making aniline colors sufficient to meet its own requirements and to export on a large scale, and the Swiss are dependent on other countries for the raw materials.

Let me say here that the United States is exporting some coal-tar intermediates, derived from American coal, to Germany, because they are needed by the German chemical industries and can not be secured from their domestic supply.

This article continues:

The United States has abundant coal to supply the raw materials for making aniline dyes. Private capital has been supplied as fast as it could be utilized in establishing scores of factories and in training skilled operatives and chemists for actual and experimental work on a large scale. There has been an increasing tendency since 1916 to centralize or consolidate domestic enterprises, in order to cut overhead expense, utilize all by-products, and reduce the price of finished dyes. This has not only increased production but has developed a foreign trade, as shown by the wide distribution of American aniline dyes exported in the calendar years 1918 and 1919. The value of the exports for these years is shown in the table on the following page.

Mr. President, I ask leave to print as a part of my remarks the article from which I have just read, and the title of which I have given. It covers only two pages of this document; and also the report I read concerning the Barrett Co.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES FOREIGN TRADE FOR 1919 AND 1920 IN FINISHED COAL-TAR COLORS AND INDIGO.

[Prepared by the Division of Statistics, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.]

The domestic coal-tar color industry, reborn of the war, continues to thrive in times of peace as evidenced by a comparison of the foreign trade during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, with that of 1919.

Imports of alizarin and alizarin dyes increased from 11,797 pounds, valued at $13,286 in 1919, to 257,841 pounds, worth $103,266 in 1920. Receipts of other finished coal-tar colors and dyes rose from 1,934,021 pounds, valued at $2,753,116, to 2,785,904 pounds at $3,775,216, or an increase of 44 per cent in the quantity and 37 per cent in value during the same period.

SWITZERLAND THE CHIEF SOURCE OF COAL-TAR COLORS—INDIGO TRADE.

Switzerland has the place formerly held by Germany as the leading source of the coal-tar colors imported into the United States, the receipts rising from 1,243,135 pounds, valued at $2,047,043 in 1919, to 1,454,811 pounds, worth $2,500,933 in 1920, followed by imports from the United Kingdom of 616,720 pounds, invoiced at $609,238 in 1919, and 558,166 pounds at $567,258 in 1920, with smaller amounts from Germany and other countries during the same year.

Imports of natural indigo declined from 996,069 pounds, worth $1,242,885 in 1919, to 126,539 pounds, valued at $165,332 in 1920; but the imports of synthetic indigo increased approximately 70 per cent in quantity and value, from 594,107 pounds, invoiced at $308,582 in 1919, to 1,014,100 pounds, valued at $530,285, in the year just ended. This was to be expected, as synthetic indigo is superior commercially to the vegetable product, the color being more even, and the cost of production prior to the war less than that of the natural indigo. As the bulk of the laboratory product was made in Germany, when imports were cut off by the war the trade in the natural product revived, but apparently will not be able to hold its place under peace conditions in competition with the synthetic indigo, more especially as the latter is now being produced on a commercial scale in the United States and countries other than Germany.

The fiscal year figures are more readily comparable in the following tabular form:

In the calendar year 1919, of a total of 23,875 pounds of imported alizarin and alizarin dyes, 23,417 pounds came from England, the first of the allied countries to produce them on a commercial scale. The production, however, has at no time since 1914 been equal to the world-wide demand. Experimental work in American laboratories has resulted in a recent announcement by one of the largest factories that it is in a position to begin marketing a number of alizarin colors.

SWISS DYES AND SYNTHETIC INDIGO—SOURCES OF NATURAL INDIGO.

Switzerland, though hampered by a lack of intermediates and other raw materials, has been the chief source of coal-tar colors and dyes and of synthetic indigo imported into the United States in the calendar years 1918 and 1919. Swiss colors imported in 1918 were valued at $1,762,688, in contrast of $561,699 from England, out of a total of $2,469,439 from all countries; and $2,176,463 in 1919, against $664,548 from England, out of a total of $3,169,276.

The natural indigo is grown chiefly in China, British India, and the East Indies. The imports shown from England and Switzerland are derived from the Orient. In 1918 the total receipts of this vegetable color amounted to 1,747,074 pounds, valued at $2,194,367, of which 1,138,176 pounds, valued at $1,284,434, came from British India; 264,975 pounds, at $463,510, from England; 234,542 pounds, at $299,554, from Salvador; and less amounts from other countries. In 1919 total imports dropped to 227,474 pounds, worth $260,115, the bulk of it coming from British India and Salvador. Natural indigo can be readily grown in the subtropical countries of the Western Hemisphere, but, owing to the higher cost of labor, it can not compete commercially with that from the Orient. Prior to the revolution it was produced on a somewhat extensive scale in the Carolinas.

GROWTH IN EXPORTS OF COAL-TAR DYES.

Exports of aniline dyes amounted to $10,183,948 in the fiscal year 1919, but increased to $17,130,397 in 1920, a gain of 68 per cent in the last year.

With the return to peace it is evident that whatever the demand for dyes made in Germany may be, that country will never regain its lost supremacy in the world trade in dyestuffs. The United States was first to establish a domestic industry sufficient to meet the demands of the home market. This was done on private initiative and capital. The British Government has established a definite policy, backing it financially, to develop this industry and maintain it so that England will not again be dependent on outside sources for its colors and dyes. Although the British production is constantly increasing, it has not been able to overtake the increasing demand. A recent estimate gives the total output as equal to about 80 per cent of the dyes actually consumed in the United Kingdom. France, Italy, and Japan are producing some dyestuffs, but due to lack of raw materials and to other difficulties incident to establishing the manufacture, these countries can not yet supply their own textile factories with the quantity and variety of colors needed. Germany, it is now conceded, will not be the strenuous competitor she was formerly in the foreign trade. Switzerland is the only country, other than the United States, now making aniline colors sufficient to meet its own requirements and to export on a large scale, and the Swiss are dependent on other countries for the raw materials.

The United States has abundant coal to supply the raw materials for making aniline dyes. Private capital has been supplied as fast as it could be utilized in establishing scores of factories and in training skilled operatives and chemists for actual and experimental work on a large scale. There has been an increasing tendency since 1916 to centralize or consolidate the domestic enterprises, in order to cut overhead expense, utilize all by-products, and reduce the price of finished dyes. This has not only increased production, but has developed the foreign trade, as shown by the wide distribution of American aniline dyes exported in the calendar years 1918 and 1919. The value of the exports for these years is shown in the table which follows.

NEW STATISTICAL CLASSIFICATION OF FINISHED DYESTUFFS.

Soon after the war cut off the supply of imported dyestuffs, on which so many American industries were dependent, it was found that no detailed figures showing the variety and quantity of each color needed were available, as the statistical classification of imports included dyes and colors in a group for which total value only was given. In order to develop a domestic industry the urgent call for adequate statistical information led the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to collect and compile in detail from the original import declarations for the fiscal year 1914 the desired data, which were published in Special Agents Series No. 121, Artificial Dyestuffs Used in the United States.

Since then there has been a constantly increasing demand for an expanded classification of the official export and import schedules to make available more specific data in relation to our foreign trade in coal-tar colors. After conferences with experts and others interested in the dye manufacture and trade a revision of these schedules has been made, to be effective after January 1, 1921. The new import classification is as follows:

Alizarin and derivatives:
- Alizarin—
  - Natural.
  - Synthetic.
- Colors or color lakes obtained, derived, or manufactured from alizarin.
- Dyes obtained, derived, or manufactured from alizarin.

Anthracene and carbazole derivatives:
- Colors or lakes obtained, derived, or manufactured from anthracene or carbazole.
- Dyes obtained, derived, or manufactured from anthracene or carbazole.

Other color lakes.

All other colors, dyes, or stains, whether soluble or not in water, color acids, and color bases.

Indigo and indigoids:
- Indigo—
  - Natural.
  - Synthetic.
- Dyes obtained from indigo.
- Indigoids, whether or not obtained from indigo.

In exports color lakes will be classed separately.

FAVORABLE MARKETS FOR AMERICAN PRODUCTS.

Aniline dyes were not shown separately in the statistical classification prior to July 1, 1917, and for the six months ended December 30 of that year the exports totaled $3,502,218. The shipments in 1918 amounted to $8,629,611 and to $10,724,071 in 1919. The Orient offers unlimited opportunities for the exploitation of American-made colors, Japan, British India, and China being the heaviest buyers during the past two years. Shipments to Japan declined from $2,576,801 in 1918 to $2,151,191 in 1919, but those to British India increased from $1,004,022 to $1,562,244, to China from $549,605 to $1,609,060, and to Hongkong from $97,393 to $228,788, with considerable gains for other Far Eastern countries. Canada affords the best market for dyes in the western world, taking $836,445 worth of aniline colors in 1918 and $1,015,334 worth in 1919. Exports to European countries aggregated $1,401,732 in 1918 and $1,560,211 in 1919, the principal markets in order of value being Spain, England, Italy, Portugal, and France. Australia took these products to the value of $35,035 in 1918 and $130,985 in 1919. Aniline dyes exported to South America were valued at $1,719,408 in 1918 and at $1,651,872 in 1919, Brazil, Argentina, Chile, and Peru being the leading countries of destination.

The world-wide shortage of dyestuffs and the growing demand for both quantity and variety of such materials offer every opportunity to extend the foreign market for American colors.

MEMORANDUM ON THE BARRETT CO. (OF NEW JERSEY), (DECEMBER 22, 1920).

The company was incorporated February 6, 1903, in New Jersey, under perpetual charter, as the American Coal Products Co.; name changed to The Barrett Co. on February 1, 1916.

General office, 17 Battery Place, New York.

Plants number about 40 in all, the principal ones being located at New York, St. Louis, Detroit, Nashville, New Orleans, Johnstown (Pa.), Latrobe, Chicago, Cleveland, Birmingham, Salt Lake City, Youngstown, Bethlehem, Elizabeth, Boston, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis, Peoria, Milwaukee, Bangor, Toledo, Columbus, Buffalo, Baltimore, Washington, and Richmond.

Products include roofing and building papers of all kinds, roofing and paving pitch, tarvia, carbolic acid, benzol, naphtha, and all coal-tar products.

Capital stock: Authorized, $25,000,000 common and $12,500,000 of 7 per cent cumulative preferred; outstanding as of December 31, 1919, $16,443,100 common and $7,811,400 preferred; par, $100.

Officers: Eversley Childs, chairman; W. H. Childs, president; T. M. Rianhard, vice president and general manager; W. N. McIlravy; R. P. Perry, and John C. Runkle, vice presidents; E. J. Steer, secretary and treasurer; and F. M. Stearns, assistant secretary and assistant treasurer.

The original corporation (the American Coal Products Co.) and the Barrett Manufacturing Co. and subsidiaries, were charged with violation of the Sherman antitrust law on March 3, 1913, and on the following day a decree was entered in the Federal district court under which the National Coal Tar Co., Union Coal Tar Chemical Co., W. H. Rankin Co., and New York Coal Tar Chemical Co., all subsidiaries of the Barrett Co., were ordered dissolved and their charters surrendered; the Barrett Co. was also required to eliminate certain restrictive conditions in some of its contracts for tar and further required to operate the following of its active subsidiaries as departments: Warren Chemical & Manufacturing Co., Commonwealth Roofing Co., Warren-Ehret Co., Eastern Granite Roofing Co., United Roofing & Manufacturing Co. The Barrett Manufacturing Co. owned 70 per cent of the stock of the H. F. Watson Co., of Erie, Pa., and under the court's decree was required to dispose of 25 per cent of the stock of this company.

The Barrett Co. of New Jersey was formerly principally a holding company, conducting its operations through subsidiary companies, of which the Barrett Co. of West Virginia was the principal one. However, on September 16, 1918, the subsidiary companies were consolidated and the assets of the West Virginia company transferred to the Barrett Co. of New Jersey. (Moody's Manual of Railroads and Corporation Securities, 1920, p. 2284.) It is said to own a controlling interest in the Société Anonyme de Materiaux pour Toitures et Routes, and to be associated with Paix & Co. in building a new plant at Courchelette, in northeastern France. (Drug and Chemical Markets, July 7, 1920, p. 12.)

The Barrett Co. is one of five large corporations which have consolidated to form the Allied Chemical and Dye Corporation. The president of the Barrett Co. announced in The Barrett Trail for October that "all of the merging companies will be run as independent entities. So that as far as the Barrett Co. is concerned, there is contemplated no change of any kind in its manner of conducting its business or in its personnel."

The Allied Chemical and Dye Corporation made a statement during the last week in September, 1920, giving the assets, liabilities, and income of the consolidated companies. The Barrett Co., National Aniline & Chemical Co., the Solvay Process Co., the Semet-Solvay Co., and the General Chemical Co. The income account covered the first six months of 1920, during which time the net income, before depreciation and taxes, was $22,381,649. After reserve and taxes the net income available for dividends was $12,825,241. Total assets on December 31, 1919, amounted to $223,941,660 and current assets $94,175,790. Current liabilities on the same date amounted to $29,161,845. Among assets, patents, processes, formulae, and good will were valued at $21,981,845. The bonded indebtedness was $9,493,074. The Guaranty Trust Co. was appointed depository for the consolidation. (Drug and Chemical Markets, Sept. 29, 1920.)

A further statement was made during the first week of December, 1920, by the committee in charge of the consolidation, to the effect that the consolidation has become operative and the plan will be carried into effect as of January 1, 1921. Temporary stock certificates for the new stock, both preferred and common, will be ready for distribution about January 6. The proportion of outstanding stocks of the consolidating companies now under control of the committee is as follows: Barrett Co. preferred, 93.78 per cent, and common, 95.14 per cent; National Aniline and Chemical preferred, 90.35 per cent, and common, 98.18 per cent; Solvay Process, 99.82 per cent; Semet-Solvay, 97.01 per cent; General Chemical preferred, 92.71 per cent, and common, 95.83 per cent. (Drug and Chemical Markets, Dec. 8, 1920, p. 1225.)

Of the other companies involved in the merger:

The National Aniline & Chemical Co., Inc., organized in 1917, represents an amalgamation of a number of interests engaged in the manufacture of aniline oil and salts, coal tar, colors, intermediates, and dyestuffs. The company was formed for the purpose of unifying and coordinating the dyestuffs industry, and its various factories cover the business process of manufacture from the raw material to the finished products. Capital stock: Authorized and outstanding, 395,900 shares common, of no par value, but of the "stated" value of $5 per share, and $23,524,700 7 per cent cumulative preferred, par $100. A large part of the common stock is owned by the General Chemical Co., the Barrett Co., and the Semet-Solvay Co. (Moody's Manual, 1920, p. 2782.)

The Solvay Process Co. was incorporated in 1881 to manufacture soda and its by-products. It is engaged in the manufacture of alkali and its by-products, and through its allied companies, the Semet-Solvay Co. and Solvay Collieries Co., is also engaged in the operation of by-product coke plants. Capital stock: Authorized, $36,000,000; outstanding, $22,500,000; par $100. (Moody's Manual, 1920, p. 1625.)

The Semet-Solvay Co., incorporated in 1916, manufactures iron, steel, coke, copper, lumber, gas acids, explosives, chemicals, etc., and does construction work. Capital stock: Authorized, $20,000,000; outstanding, $16,978,886; par $100. (Moody's Manual, 1920, p. 1573.)

The General Chemical Co., organized in 1899, is a consolidation of a number of companies engaged in the manufacture of heavy chemicals, sulphuric acid, grocery specialties, and baking powder. It controls several corporations through stock ownership and has a large interest in the National Aniline & Chemical Co. (Inc.). Capital stock: Authorized, $20,000,000 common and $20,000,000 6 per cent cumulative preferred; outstanding May 15, 1920, $19,822,900 common and $16,333,300 preferred; par $100. (Moody's Manual, 1920, p. 646.)

Mr. THOMAS. Now, Mr. President, just another word: There is no doubt of the power of the Senate to take up this measure and apply the cloture rule. I am not complaining. I have been fighting for a cloture rule ever since I have been here, and I am not complaining. I have simply made use of machinery I have found here which I have not been able thus far to remove, and have utilized for the performance of a duty to myself, to the Congress, and to the people of the United States. With one exception I am opposed to embargoes absolutely, although I shall have some amendments to the embargo bill which passed the House yesterday when it comes over. I am in favor of a temporary embargo on the indiscriminate immigration now flooding this country with hundreds of thousands of immigrants per month, most of them undesirable.

If we really want to stem the tide of depressing conditions, and particularly to aid those American workmen who are to-day out of employment, we should prohibit immigration into the United States for the next year. They are not only taking the bread out of the mouths of and competing with the workmen of this country still engaged in gainful pursuits, but they are threatening the very fabric of our civilization. Of course, I do not mean this statement to apply to all those who are coming, nor to the many good naturalized citizens we have in this country. But when I reflect that the great steamship companies, both of the United States and of the Old World, in their eagerness and greed for gain, are rounding up and crowding immigrants of all nationalities into every nook and corner of every steamship plying between the two continents, and dumping them upon our shores at the rate of millions per annum; when I further reflect that the Commissioner of Immigration warns us that 12,000,000 of these people, no matter how disreputable, will come as soon as they can secure accommodations, I say, Mr. President, that if we are to embargo anything, we should begin there, and I propose to give the Senate an opportunity to vote upon that sort of an embargo when the bill which has just passed the House comes before this body for consideration.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial of the Amos Lodge, No. 27, I. O. B. B., of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the immigration of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the city council of Duluth, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation for governmental supervision of the coal industry through the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the board of directors, the St. Paul (Minn.) Association, of St. Paul, Minn., favoring the so-called "truth in fabric" bill, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Franklin County Wool Growers' Association, of Ottawa, Kans., favoring the Capper-French "truth in fabric" bill, also praying for the enactment of legislation placing a tariff on wool, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Farmers' Union, of Flush, Kans., praying for the passage of the Capper antigrain-gambling measure, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I present resolutions passed by a number of farm organizations meeting in St. Louis on the 16th day of this month, protesting against the Senate amendment to the Capper bill and also protesting against the Poindexter antistrike bill. I ask unanimous consent that these resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Will not the Senator let the resolutions be referred to the proper committee and have them noted in the RECORD?

Mr. LENROOT. I would, except that one of the bills is on the calendar and the other has passed, so that neither is before a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to printing them in the RECORD?

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The conference also unanimously voiced its opposition to the Poindexter antistrike bill passed by the Senate last Thursday.

Copies of telegrams on the Capper-Volstead and antistrike measures are included below.

Respectfully, yours,

Senator KNUTE NELSON,
Chairman Judiciary Committee, Washington, D. C.:

Farmers meeting here this week, representing several billion dollars' annual cooperative business, earnestly protest amended form Capper-Volstead bill as adopted by Senate yesterday. As lawyer of high standing, do you not agree with us that proviso added by your committee to Volstead bill as passed by House practically nullifies measure? We ask that bill be changed in conference to conform to Volstead bill. Please answer.

CHARLES S. BARRETT,
St. Louis, Mo.:

Telegram received. Will consider the matter referred to in conference.

POINDEXTER ANTISTRIKE BILL.

We are opposed to the Poindexter antistrike bill adopted by the United States Senate on Thursday.

We deprecate strikes and realize their harmful immediate effects, yet we realize that there are circumstances which under existing conditions make united protest the only means for the self-preservation of the workers.

We believe the bill will cause far greater harm than good, and will cause strikes rather than prevent them. Legislation along similar lines enacted in other lands has been abandoned or has become a dead letter. Public opinion will not sustain them.

We say that in these unsettled times Congress should seek to remove the cause of strikes rather than to make strikes a felony. Our position on the strike question is in line with the position taken by various members of the General Board of Farm Organizations, who last February joined in the publicly declared statement that "the right to cease work, individually or collectively, for adequate reasons is unassailable."

We believe that the propaganda upon the strike question circulated within the past few months, especially among farmers, has been entirely misleading, and that the views as expressed above will be agreed to by an overwhelming majority of American farmers when the question is thoroughly analyzed.

We regret that such prominence has been given in the hearings to the opinions of certain persons claiming to express the view of agricultural organizations, when, in reality, their connection, if any, with such organization is nominal, to say the least.

We indorse the statement made by the secretary of the National Board of Farm Organizations at the hearing on the Poindexter antistrike bill last spring, who, concluding his protest, said:

"Provide some certain means of giving justice to all legitimate demands whether of farmers or labor; strike some real blows at excess profits of the great profiteering corporations; put some stability into the public's investment in Liberty bonds; enact some constructive legislation at this session of Congress that will give the people confidence that they have a government that is as willing to protect human lives and happiness as it is to protect dollars—then it will be time enough to take up the question of antistrike legislation, and not till then."

We ask the secretary of the conference to send copies of this resolution to every Member of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives, with the request to defeat by influence and vote this bill or similar measures.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of the Helena Commercial Club, of Helena, Mont., favoring an embargo on wool and agricultural products, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Interstate Conference for the Investigation of Vivisection, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate, in the District of Columbia and Territories of the United States, the practice of vivisection of animals, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I present to the Senate a letter from the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Macon, Ga., and also resolutions passed by the Macon Wholesale Grocers, in which they call attention to the increase of rates being made by certain railroads for transportation of freight, and complain that those rates go into effect now without waiting for approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission. In presenting the matter, I merely wish to say that the Senate placed upon the railroad bill a provision that increases should not go into effect except after approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it was lost in conference.

I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I shall have to object to printing the resolutions in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. They will be noted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not wish especially to have them printed in the RECORD, and I had not intended to ask that they be printed in the RECORD, but the Senator just now consented to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] having some resolutions printed in the RECORD, and therefore I thought I ought to ask that these be printed.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say frankly that one of the bills referred to in the resolutions presented by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] had passed the Senate and the other is on the calendar.

Mr. LENROOT. I would not have made the request had the matter been pending before any committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This matter is not pending before any committee, and I really thought that the facts set out in the resolutions, which are brief, might well be printed in the RECORD in order that they might be seen.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator made just as clear a statement of it as is possible.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I also present a resolution adopted by Carpenters' Local Union, No. 1927, of Atlanta, Ga., objecting to oriental immigration, which I move be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce, Lansing, Mich.; a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Traverse, Mich.; a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce, Ann Arbor, Mich.; and a resolution of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, of Glen Haven, Mich., praying that the people of the State of Michigan be afforded opportunity to secure legislation enabling the State to purchase and preserve Camp Custer as a State property, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of the Grand Rapids Real Estate Board, Grand Rapids, Mich., urging immediate passage by Congress of an amendment to the Federal tax laws, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Travelers' Protective Association of America, St. Louis, Mo., asking for more stringent immigration laws, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Travelers' Protective Association of America, St. Louis, Mo., asking for a comprehensive plan by Congress for the improvement of harbors and inland waterways, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Mason County Farm Bureau, Scottsville, Mich., asking an import duty on all foreign-grown beans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Joint Association of Postal Employees of Staten Island, N. Y., asking an increase in the salaries of post-office employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Travelers' Protective Association of America, St. Louis, Mo., asking for an amendment to the income tax law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a memorial from radio station 8–AB, Port Huron, Mich., and also a memorial from the Detroit radio station, Detroit, Mich., remonstrating against legislation proposing to regulate amateur wireless, which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a memorial from the Highland Park Woman's Club, Highland Park, Mich., and also a petition from members of the University Club, Harbor Springs, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of maternity and infancy, which were laid on the table.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a memorial from the Twentieth Century Club, Detroit, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation commercializing the national parks, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a resolution adopted by the Grand Rapids Real Estate Board, Grand Rapids, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the Federal tax laws, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GRONNA presented a petition of sachems, chiefs, and warriors of the Onondaga Nation and of the Tonawanda Band of the Seneca Nation of Indians in the State of New York, praying for an amendment of House bill No. 288, exempting them from its provisions, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of the members of the commission of the city of Fargo, N. Dak., praying for the passage of a bill relative to the mining, marketing, and fixing of the prices of coal, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have received and I present resolutions from a great number of American Legion posts in my State. As they are all very much in the same form, I will ask to have only one of them printed. It is very brief. Then I will ask to have them all noted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I must object to having them printed. I would like to have them noted in the RECORD.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall read one of them. It is very brief. I realize that the Senator from Utah may take me off the floor if he chooses.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object to the reading after the morning business is closed.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator may object now, if he cares to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I object at this time.

Mr. GRONNA. Then, Mr. President, I shall avail myself of an opportunity to take time this afternoon to read as many of them as I may see fit.

Mr. KENDRICK. I present on behalf of my colleague the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is absent on official business, a telegram received from Hon. W. A. Drake, of Fort Collins, Colo., asking for immediate legislation upon meat and meat products.

Also a letter from Mr. G. L. Chesney, of Evanston, Wyo., asking for an embargo on wool, and the immediate enactment of tariff legislation on the same product.

I move that the two communications be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. I also present a resolution adopted by the Sheridan Commercial Club, of Sheridan, Wyo., protesting against commercializing the waters of the national parks, which I ask may lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF PORTO RICAN ACT.

Mr. POINDEXTER. From the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 11769) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1917. I ask that the report of the House committee (Rept. No. 674), which accompanies the bill, be printed as the report of the Senate committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FARM LOAN BONDS.

Mr. McLEAN. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4664) to amend the first paragraph of section 20 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, as amended by the act of Congress approved April 20, 1920.

The Federal Farm Loan Board wants to issue a new series of bonds, and under the law as it is to-day the duration of those bonds is limited to five years, whereas the mortgages or farm loans back of the bonds run for a much longer period, and there would seem to be every reason why the board should be permitted to issue a 10-year bond. The bonds would be more desirable. Your committee were unanimously of the opinion that the resolution should pass, and as the board wishes to print the bonds at once I hope there will be no objection to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill. If it can be passed without discussion I shall not object to its consideration now, but it seems to me we ought to dispose of the routine morning business, and then I would have no objection to the bill coming up if it is to be discussed. If there is no discussion——

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the Senator that if there is any objection——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 20 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, as amended by the act of Congress approved April 20, 1920, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 20. That bonds provided for in this act shall be issued in denominations of $40, $100, $500, $1,000, and such larger denominations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may authorize; they shall run for specified minimum and maximum periods, subject to payment and retirement, at the option of the land bank, at any time after the minimum period specified in the bonds, which shall not be longer than 10 years from the date of their issue. They shall have interest coupons attached, payable semiannually, and shall be issued in series of not less than $50,000, the amount and terms to be fixed by the Federal Farm Loan Board. They shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 5 per cent per annum."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORCED SALE OF BONDS.

Mr. McLEAN. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4683) to amend section 11 (m) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and March 3, 1919, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

I explained the bill to the Senate on Monday last. Under the proviso in section 11 of the Federal reserve act as it is to-day all notes, drafts, or bills of exchange discounted for any member bank in excess of the amount permitted under such section must be secured by not less than the like face amount of bonds and notes of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States: "Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection shall not be operative after December 31, 1920."

There is something like $600,000,000 of United States bonds held by the banks that are not fully paid up by the owners, and unless the time is extended for another year the banks will be obliged to call these loans, and the owners will have to force the bonds upon the market. There would seem to be no reason why this time should not be extended. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 (m) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and March 3, 1919, be further amended by striking out the words "December 31, 1920" at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "December 31, 1921."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEWARK BAY BRIDGE, NEW JERSEY.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 4515) reviving, confirming, and renewing the authority of the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey to construct a bridge across the navigable waters of the Newark Bay, in the State of New Jersey, and I submit a report (No. 673) thereon.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, on page 1, strike out the title of the bill down to and including the word "construct," and insert "to extend the time for the construction of," and on the same page, on line 3, after the words "That the," strike out the balance of the line, and on page 2, strike out all of lines 1, 2, 3,

4, 5, and 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved August 8, 1919, to be built by the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey, across the Newark Bay between the city of Elizabeth and the city of Bayonne, N. J., are hereby extended two and five years, respectively, from the date of approval of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved August 8, 1919, to be built by the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey, across the Newark Bay between the city of Elizabeth and the city of Bayonne, N. J., are hereby extended two and five years, respectively, from the date of approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee reports in favor of striking out the preamble. If there be no objection, the preamble will be stricken out.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the navigable waters of Newark Bay, N. J."

LILLIE K. TITLOW.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 401, submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 13th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Lillie K. Titlow, widow of Samuel C. Titlow, late a policeman in the Capitol, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ZELDA R. FORE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably with an amendment Senate resolution 402, which was submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 13th instant, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution. The amendment was, in line 3, to strike out the word "Velba" and insert the word "Zelda," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Zelda R. Fore, widow of James L. Fore, late a policeman in the Capitol, under the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MARY NEAL.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which committee was referred Senate resolution 403, submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 13th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mary Neal, widow of Thomas Neal, late a laborer in charge of private passage in the Capitol, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

CAROLINE B. GASTON.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 404, submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 13th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Caroline B. Gaston, widow of Alanson D. Gaston, late a messenger in the Capitol, under the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

CHANGE OF PRESIDENTIAL TERM, ETC.

Mr. ASHURST. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read at length, and after it is read I should like to take about three minutes to make a brief explanation of it.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 228) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"SECTION 1. The terms of the President and Vice President of the United States shall commence on the third Monday in January following the election of presidential and vice presidential electors.

"SEC. 2. The presidential and vice presidential electors, composing the Electoral College, shall assemble in the States by which they are appointed and cast their votes for President and Vice President on the second Monday in December following their appointment, and the vote so cast, duly certified, shall be filed with the President of the Senate before the first Monday in January next thereafter, and the Congress shall meet in joint session on the second Monday in January following and open and count the same: Provided, That Congress may alter all the dates fixed in this section, in its discretion.

"SEC. 3. The terms of Senators and Representatives shall commence on the first Monday in January following their election.

"SEC. 4. There shall be held two regular sessions of Congress, convening on the first Monday of January each year.

"SEC. 5. This amendment shall not take effect until after the 4th day of March of the year 1925."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, no other country permits so long a time to elapse between an election and the installation of the new servants as does the United States. In a democratic republic as soon as possible the will of the people as expressed at the polls should be carried into effect.

Under the present system four months elapse before the new Congress and the new President are inaugurated.

My proposed amendment to the Constitution simply provides that the electors chosen in November and composing the Electoral College shall meet in their respective States on the second Monday in December and there cast their votes; that the new Congress elected in the previous November shall meet on the first Monday in January; that the messengers shall bring the returns from the various States to the President of the Senate and file them before the first Monday in January; that on the second Monday in January the new Congress, sitting in joint session, shall canvass the electoral vote and declare the result; and that on the third Monday in January the President and Vice President shall be inaugurated.

In most of the States the governor is inaugurated in January; the new legislature meets in January. Moreover, under the present system a repudiated House of Representatives would have the power in certain cases to choose a President. This should be changed.

This is not a new subject. I am not entitled to any credit for novelty of ideas respecting the same. I have simply reintroduced a joint resolution which was reported from the Judiciary Committee in 1914. This joint resolution was before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and was discussed for months. A comprehensive statement favoring the resolution was prepared in February, 1914, signed by the following members of the Committee on the Judiciary: Senators JOHN K. SHIELDS, KNUTE NELSON, now the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, ALBERT B. CUMMINS, W. E. Chilton, DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, and one HENRY F. ASHURST.

This, therefore, is not a new matter which I have suddenly presented to the country and the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that at this time I may include in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the views which those members of the Committee on the Judiciary held on this subject in 1914.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Senate Report 212, part 2, Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

The minority recommends that the resolution, omitting formal parts, be amended so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE XVIII.

"SECTION 1. The terms of the President and Vice President of the United States shall commence on the third Monday in January following the election of presidential and vice presidential electors.

"SEC. 2. The presidential and vice presidential electors, composing the Electoral College, shall assemble in the States by which they are appointed and cast their votes for President and Vice President on the second Monday in December following their appointment, and the vote so cast, duly certified, shall be filed with the President of the Senate before the first Monday in January next thereafter, and the Congress shall meet in joint session on the second Monday in January following and open and count the same: Provided, That Congress may alter all the dates fixed in this section in its discretion.

"SEC. 3. The terms of Senators and Representatives shall commence on the first Monday in January following their election.

"SEC. 4. There shall be held two regular sessions of Congress, convening on the first Monday of January each year.

"SEC. 5. The terms of said officers who may be in office at the time of the adoption of this amendment are hereby changed to conform herewith."

The amendments of the resolution recommended are the substitution in the first section of the "third" Monday instead of the "second" Monday in January for the commencement of the terms of the President and Vice President; the substitution of the "second" Monday for the "first" Monday in December for the meeting of electors for President and Vice President; and provisions that the vote shall be filed with the President of the Senate before the first Monday in January, and that Congress shall meet on the second Monday thereafter and open and count the vote, and authorizing Congress to change these dates; and the addition of section 4, providing for a change in the terms of the President and Vice President and Senators and Representatives in office when the constitutional amendment is adopted and becomes effective, so that they will expire with the commencement of the terms of their successors, under the proposed amendment to the Constitution.

The Constitution, Article II, section 1, ordains that the President and Vice President shall hold office for the term of four years, but does not provide when the terms shall commence. The only recognition of the 4th of March succeeding the day of a presidential election as the day of the commencement of the terms of the President and Vice President is the provision in the twelfth amendment to the Constitution, effective September 25, 1804, that "if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the 4th day of March next following, then the Vice President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President."

This would probably be construed to be a provision that the term of the President expired on the 4th of March after a presidential election—that a vacancy then exists—in which event the then Vice President succeeded to the office.

The time when the presidential electors should be elected, and the date on which they shall meet and give their vote is, by Article II, section 1, of the Constitution, left to the discretion of Congress, with the restriction that the day of voting shall be the same throughout the United States. An act was passed February 3, 1887, requiring them to meet and give their vote on the second Monday in January next after their appointment, in such place in each State as the legislature thereof shall direct; which vote, duly certified, to be delivered to the President of the Senate before the first Wednesday in February, and be canvassed by Congress, in joint session, on the second Wednesday in February thereafter.

The Constitution, while providing that Representatives shall hold their offices for two years (Art. I, sec. 2) and Senators for six years (Art. I, sec. 3), does not provide when the terms shall commence.

The commencement of the terms of the first President and Vice President, and of the Senators and Representatives composing the first Congress, was fixed by a resolution of Congress adopted September 13, 1788, providing "that the first Wednesday in March next (which happened to be the 4th day of March) be the time for commencing proceedings under the Constitution."

Congress has provided (act of Mar. 1, 1792, Rev. Stat., sec. 152) that the terms of the President and Vice President shall commence on the 4th day of March next succeeding the day on which the votes of the electors have been given, but there seems to be no statute enacted since the adoption of the Constitution fixing the commencement of the terms of Senators and Representatives.

The Constitution is proposed to be amended by the resolution as follows:

1. The terms of the President and Vice President, by the first section, are made to commence on the third Monday in January instead of the 4th day of March succeeding the election of electors.

2. The electors are required, by the second section, to meet and cast their vote on the second Monday in December succeeding their appointment; the vote to be filed with the President of the Senate before the first Monday in January thereafter, and the Congress to meet, in joint session, to open and count the same on the second Monday in January succeeding. The Congress, however, is authorized to change these dates.

The provisions of this section are entirely new, the present Constitution having left these matters entirely to the discretion of Congress, and are for the purpose of preventing confusion in putting the first section into effect.

3. The terms of Senators and Representatives are, by the third section, made to commence on the first Monday in January following their election.

This provision is new, and although there is no provision in the present Constitution fixing when the terms of Senators and Representatives shall commence, yet those providing that their terms shall be six and two years entitle those now in office and hereafter to be elected, to hold for two years after the 4th of March succeeding their election, the day when the first Senators and Representatives were qualified under the Constitution, and their terms can not be changed without a constitutional provision.

4. The fourth section merely changes the second paragraph of section 4 of Article I of the Constitution, in effect, so as to provide that Congress shall meet each year, commencing on the first Monday of January instead of the first Monday in December.

5. The provisions of section 5 are temporary, and for the purpose merely of putting into effect the material provisions by shortening the terms of the President and Vice President, and Senators and Representatives, to the extent of the periods between the dates fixed by the resolution for the commencement of the terms of these officers hereafter and the 4th of March succeeding said dates.

Under the present law Congress does not convene in regular session until 13 months after the election of its Members. There was some reason for such a provision at the time of the formation of our Government, as it then took a long time to ascertain the results of elections, and to reach the Capitol from remote parts of the country. But there is no excuse whatever now, since the most distant States of the Union are within a few days' travel of Washington City.

Senators heretofore have been elected by the legislatures of the States in January, and sometimes not until February or March. But since the adoption of the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution, by which Senators are to be elected by the people, probably at the November election, it becomes very opportune for Congress to convene in January following. The convening of Congress on the first Monday of December, as at present, is very inopportune, as adjournment for the Christmas holidays is always taken and many Members go to their homes, returning late, which precludes any real work until January.

The reasons for the adoption of the proposed amendment are these:

First. Congress should at the earliest practicable time enact the principles of the majority of the people, as expressed in the election of each Congress. That is why the Constitution requires the election of a new Congress every two years. If it is not to reflect the sentiment of the people these frequent elections have no meaning or purpose. Any evasion of this is subversive of the fundamental principle of our Government, that the majority shall rule. No other nation in the world has its legislative body convene so long after the expression of the people upon governmental questions.

During the campaign preceding a congressional election the great questions that divide the political parties are thoroughly discussed for the purpose of determining the policy of the Government and of having the sentiments of the majority crystallized into legislation. It seems trifling with the rights of the people when their mandates can not be obeyed within a reasonable time. It is unfair to an administration that the legislation which it thinks so essential to the prosperity of the country should be so long deferred. It is true an extraordinary session may be called early, but such sessions are limited generally to one or two subjects, which of necessity make enormous waste of the time of each House, waiting for the other to consider and pass the measures.

Second. As the law is at the present time, the second regular session does not convene until after the election of the succeeding Congress. As an election often changes the political complexion of a Congress, under the present law many times we have the injustice of a Congress that has been disapproved by the people enacting laws for the people opposed to their last expression. Such a condition does violence to the rights of the majority. A Member of the House of Representatives can barely get started in his work until the time arrives for the nominating convention of his district. He has accomplished nothing, and hence has made no record upon which to go before his party or his people. This is an injustice both to the Members and to the people. The record of a Representative should be completed before he asks an indorsement of his course.

Third. Under the present system a contest over a seat in the House of Representatives is seldom ever decided until more than half the term, and in many instances until a period of 22 months of the term, has expired. For all that time the occupant of the seat draws the salary, and when his opponent is seated he also draws the salary for the full term; thus the Government pays for the representation from that district twice. But that is not the worst feature of the situation; during all of that time the district is being misrepresented, at least politically, in Congress.

By Congress meeting the first Monday in January succeeding the elections, contested-election cases can be disposed of at least during the first six months of the Congress.

Fourth. The President and Vice President should enter upon the performance of their duties as soon as the new Congress can count the electoral votes. The newly elected governors of our States are inducted into office as soon as the new legislatures of the States canvass the votes and declare their election. It is the old Congress which now counts the electoral votes. It is dangerous to permit the defeated party to retain control of the machinery by which such important officers are declared elected.

In the event that no candidate for President receives a majority of the electoral votes, the Constitution provides that the House of Representatives shall elect the President, the representation from each State having one vote. At the present time it is the old Congress that elects the President under such contingency, and thereby it becomes possible for a political party repudiated by the people to elect a President who was defeated at the election. Under the present provision of the Constitution, in the event the House fails to choose a President before the 4th of March, then the Vice President then in office becomes President for four years. This affords a great temptation, by mere delay, to defeat the will of the people, and if it is ever exercised it will likely produce a revolution.

It is true that January weather would likely be inclement for an inaugural parade, but that is a reason too insignificant to constitute an argument against a constitutional amendment which promises so much for good government. Nearly all the governors of the States are inaugurated in January. The pomp and ceremony which usually attend the coronation of monarchs are at least not necessary to a republic.

For these reasons we favor the adoption of the resolution, amended as herein suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXCLUSION OF ALIENS.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed.

COLUMBIA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE FOR THE BLIND.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 to aid the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind, at 1808 H Street NW., Washington, D. C., intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15130) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EMERGENCY SUGAR TARIFF.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the so-called emergency tariff bill, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Finance. I also ask that the proposed amendment may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. GAY to the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 4, after line 3, insert the following paragraph:

"18. Sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above 75°, 2.13 cents per pound, and for every additional degree shown by the polariscope test seventy-eight one-thousandths of 1 cent per pound additional, and fractions of a degree in proportion; molasses, testing not above 40°, 45 per cent ad valorem; testing above 40° and not above 56°, 6¾ cents per gallon; testing above 56°, 13½ cents per gallon. Sugar draining and sugar sweeping shall be subject to duty as molasses or sugar, as the case may be, according to polariscopic test.

"That the duties in this paragraph herein imposed are in addition to the rates of duty imposed on such sugars by existing laws, and shall in no manner affect or impair such existing laws.

"Provided, That if the imposition of the duties herein shall have the effect of increasing the price in the ports of the United States of duty paid 96° centrifugal sugar produced in and imported from Cuba beyond 8 cents per pound or shall increase the price in the ports of the United States of similar sugars paying full duty beyond 8.76 cents per pound, or shall increase the price in the ports of the United States of sugars that have gone through a process of refining or sugars fit for direct human consumption beyond 10 cents per pound, then the emergency duty herein named shall be automatically decreased, so as to prevent the prices of such sugars advancing beyond the respective prices herein named."

In section 2, page 4, line 5, insert a comma after figure "15," strike out "and," and insert after figure "17" "and 18."

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, the emergency tariff bill which is now before the Senate is designed to relieve the distressing situation existing in all the agricultural sections of the country.

The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. FORDNEY, admits that the bill, which was reported out of his committee and passed by the House, was hastily drawn, and has stated that later a more scientific tariff bill will be presented for the consideration of Congress.

Mr. President, I favor relieving the distress which the producers of other commodities are now suffering by including their commodities in the proposed emergency tariff legislation. I can not believe that any fair-minded Member of Congress can refuse to assist those engaged in the agricultural activities where it is shown that they are now in dire distress through no fault of their own.

The sugar producers of Louisiana, like the wool growers of the West and the wheat farmers, are in many instances being obliged to sell their product at a price far below the cost of production.

Sugar being one of the most important food products, the sugar planters of Louisiana, encouraged by the belief that the Government wished to foster such an industry, planted the usual acreage in sugar cane. They paid high wages to their employees and high prices for every commodity which they had to use, so that when the harvest season came the crop produced was the most expensive ever known. Under these conditions, and with the rapid decline in sugar prices within the last six weeks or two months, the sugar planters find themselves facing bankruptcy, and it is doubtful if even the remedy proposed in my amendment can save many of them.

We of Louisiana have never wanted to see sugar soar to prices which it attained during the past summer. The Louisiana producer has not been the beneficiary. He has adhered to the prices established by the Government; and I know of no case of profiteering among the sugar producers of the State.

Unfortunately, the speculator and the middleman got control of large quantities of sugar, both domestic and foreign, and boosted the prices beyond the dreams of the most greedy, and thus brought unjust criticism on the sugar producer of Louisiana and made enemies for the industry everywhere. It is unfortunate that such profiteers could not have been successfully prosecuted.

If the woolgrower, if the wheat farmer, if any other producer in America is entitled to consideration by Congress, then surely the sugar planters of Louisiana are entitled to the same consideration, and in this emergency should receive the same treatment from Congress, regardless of the fact that sugar has been used as a political football. I can not believe that fair-minded men will discriminate against it.

The amendment intended to be proposed by me provides that the price of 96 test sugar or raw sugar which comes into this country shall at no time exceed 8 cents. By providing a sliding scale for the tariff this price can be maintained for the period covered by the bill, and will at least have the effect of permitting the sugar producers to continue in business for another year, which without this legislation it is doubtful if many will be able to do.

SALE OR LEASE OF TERMINAL FACILITIES.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 409), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what steps, if any, are being taken or have been taken to lease or sell any of the docks, piers, warehouses, or other terminal facilities constructed or acquired by the Government of the United States for the use of and used by the War Department during the war; and if any such facilities have been leased or it is proposed to lease or sell the same, advise the Senate the terms or proposed terms of such leases or sales and the law authorizing such action.

CREDITS TO GOVERNMENT OF POLAND.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 410), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate as to the character, extent, and amounts of credits which have been granted by the War Department to the Government of Poland, the character of securities and interest received thereon in exchange for such credits, and whether commissions, if any, have been received by any American citizens for services in connection with the granting of such credits.

WATER SUPPLY OF SUNNYSIDE, UTAH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 46) for the protection of the water supply of the town of Sunnyside, Utah, which was, on page 2, line 16, after the word "purposes," to insert " : Provided, That deposits of coal or other minerals in the lands reserved by this act may be leased or otherwise disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior under laws applicable to such deposits, if and when he shall find that same may be mined and removed without injury to the municipal water supply of Sunnyside, Utah."

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

L., p. 1133), which were, on page 2, line 8, after the word "period," to insert "not exceeding three years," and on page 2, line 16, after the word "lands," to insert "not irrigated and reclaimed."

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, several days ago I called attention to the fact that Senate resolution No. 327, asking for certain information from the Secretary of Agriculture, had just been responded to, and there was an implied criticism in my observation of the tardiness of the Secretary in responding to the resolution. Upon examination I discover that the Secretary quite promptly responded to the resolution, but I was not advised of that fact until the day that I called attention to the resolution and asked that the reply be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. In justice to the Agricultural Department I desire to submit that explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed.

BONUS FOR EX-SOLDIERS IN WORLD WAR.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, a few moments ago I made an attempt to have printed in the RECORD one brief resolution adopted by some of the heroes who participated in the late war. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] saw fit to object. I asked to have that resolution printed in the RECORD and then to have a number of others noted in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I shall take only a minute or two to read one of these resolutions, although I have a great number of them; but I want to say that I think some of the Members of this body become unduly alarmed over the expense to the Government of printing important communications. I know of no more important legislation than the legislation suggested by these soldiers. Are we to take the position now, Mr. President, since they were so victorious on the battle fields of France and Flanders, that we shall deny them the right even to be heard in the legislative halls of our country?

Mr. President, it seems to me that the least thing we can do to honor those heroes is to permit them to speak, and to speak through their representatives, if they so desire.

Mr. President, these boys stood ready at a moment's call to sacrifice their all upon the field of battle. They asked no questions at the time war was declared. They asked for no conditions whatever, but they stood ready to serve, and they served faithfully and well. Thousands of them have not returned, and other thousands who have returned came back maimed and crippled; and I hope those who were fortunate enough not to be injured will have the right to speak even to the Members of this great body.

Mr. President, I have received, and I present now in regular order to this distinguished body, resolutions from the American Legion posts at Crosby, Cando, Hope, Tuttle, Carrington, Grand Forks, Washburn, Hatton, Bismarck, Lisbon, Loma, Edgeley, Litchville, Fullerton, Portland, Fargo, Jamestown, Bowman, Donnybrook, Pembina, Oakes, Alexander, and Devils Lake, N. Dak. As I attempted to say a moment ago, they are very much alike in form, and I shall read only one of them. It is addressed to me, and is dated Devils Lake, N. Dak., November 17, 1920:

DEAR SIR: The following resolution was passed unanimously by the Tim Running Post, No. 24, of the American Legion, at Devils Lake, N. Dak., at the regular meeting of November 15, 1920:

"Whereas the American Legion, through the national convention, national officers, various departments, and local posts, have during the past year passed resolutions approving of the various plans for a soldier bonus; and

"Whereas the national legislative committee of the American Legion have worked out and submitted to and approved of by practically the entire membership of the American Legion a form of bonus known as the American Legion fourfold optional plan of a Federal bonus; and

"Whereas this fourfold plan has already passed the House of Representatives in Congress: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That Tim Running Post, No. 24, petition the Senators of North Dakota to support the early passage through the United States Senate of this measure."

EVERETT A. DUELL,
Post Commander.
F. P. MANN, Jr.,
Post Adjutant.

I ask, Mr. President, that the names of the officers in each one of these petitions be noted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRONNA. The American Legion posts from all these cities and towns have unanimously adopted resolutions indorsing this measure.

I am also in receipt of a telegram from the American Legion post at Minot indorsing the Fordney bill providing for adjusted compensation to soldiers. I ask that that may be printed in the RECORD. It is a very brief telegram.

The telegram is as follows:

MINOT, N. DAK., December 17.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Five hundred members William Carroll Post, Minot, American Legion, unanimously indorse Fordney bill for adjusted compensation, and earnestly and respectfully ask your support for passage of this measure during the present session of Congress.

ARCHIE D. MCCANNEL,
Post Commander.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, we should immediately consider the requests of these brave heroes. They were called to arms at a moment's notice. They did not hesitate, but they went and performed their duties in a most creditable manner; thousands of them left good positions and others left their business to suffer. It is now for us to decide what shall be done with the requests of these World War heroes. Shall we turn a deaf ear to their requests or shall we proceed to consider the question in the same spirit that they performed their work?

So far as I am personally concerned my vote shall be cast, if I have the opportunity, for the enactment of legislation such as is outlined in these resolutions. It is the least we can do to recognize the patriotic services of these young men; and if perchance there happens to be some one not in need of any financial aid, it is not compulsory upon him to receive it. But there are thousands and hundreds of thousands of the young men who do need it, and for that reason I favor the legislation suggested in these resolutions.

Mr. President, I realize that there is opposition to this legislation. Let us consider where the opposition comes from.

I have here a printed pamphlet under the heading of the chamber of commerce of the great city of New York:

At a special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, held April 21, 1920, the following preamble and resolutions, presented by its committee on a national budget, was unanimously adopted.

If there is no objection, Mr. President, in order to save time, I ask that these resolutions may be printed as a part of my remarks.

The resolutions are as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

At a special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York held April 21, 1920, the following preamble and resolutions, presented by its committee on a national budget, was unanimously adopted:

BONUSES FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

"To the Chamber of Commerce:

"Whereas the grand total for Government expenditures this year, including the amount to be paid to the railroads, the amount of special appropriation bills of this session of Congress, and the amount to provide for deficiencies, was originally estimated at $6,000,000,000; it is now estimated that these appropriations will be reduced by about $1,500,000,000, leaving a total of $4,500,000,000 to be derived from taxation; in addition to these appropriations the Government's present floating debt is about $3,000,000,000; and

"Whereas it is estimated that the proposed legislation for the proposed blanket bonuses for veterans of the World's War will require about $2,000,000,000, which brings the total amount to be derived from the taxation for the year 1921 up to $6,500,000,000; and

"Whereas the estimated Federal revenue for 1920–21 being only about $4,600,000,000, the revenue necessary to pay the proposed blanket bonuses must be obtained by one of the following methods:

"(a) A retroactive excise tax on war profits;
"(b) A revival of the rates levied for the year 1918;
"(c) A heavy tax on luxuries;
"(d) A general sales tax;
"(e) Another bond issue; and

"Whereas any one of these methods of raising additional revenue would mean an increase in the tax burden upon the business of the country, a burden that is already stifling enterprise, which, in whatever form it may take, will add to and protract the present inflation; and

"Whereas the origin of a proposal for blanket bonuses for ex-soldiers seems to have been largely political and inconsistent with the avowed principles of the American Legion, and is contrary to the spirit of patriotism which animated the American Expeditionary Force, the proposal is neither just nor expedient. There exists no convincing evidence that the veterans of the World War are willing to become beneficiaries of a public expenditure which will inevitably bring serious economic consequences and will endanger the public welfare; and

"Whereas the country recognizes its duty—that full provision should be made for the rehabilitation of the disabled men and that there should be a generous provision for the dependents of those who died in the service: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York approves of generous provision for veterans of the World War who were disabled and for the dependents of those who died in the service, but that on economic and ethical grounds it is opposed to the proposal for a blanket bonus for all veterans, regardless of the actual needs of the individual due to his service; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York regards with grave concern the apparent breakdown of the Federal Board of Vocational Education and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the two instrumentalities created by Congress for the protection of the disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States and the dependents of those who died in the service, and invites the attention of Congress to this serious situation.

"Respectfully submitted.

"CHARLES D. FREEMAN, Chairman.
"LEONOR F. LOREE,
"JOHN T. PRATT,
"HOWARD C. SMITH,
"Of the Special Committee on a National Budget."

ALFRED E. MARLING,
President.

BUILDING CONDITIONS AND COAL SITUATION.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, on Tuesday of last week I filed with the Senate a report of a special committee appointed in April of this year to inquire into the housing shortage of the country and into matters of transportation, thrift, and finance as they pertain to housing. This report was made after a survey of the country, the committee visiting many of the important cities, except those on the Pacific coast.

I offered the resolution which authorized the appointment of this committee because of the fact that the Federal Government itself is especially responsible for the housing shortage. It seemed to me that it was fitting that we should have accurate information before a serious attempt was made to legislate on the subject.

Senators may recall that, in a discussion with the late Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, late in 1917, when a bill was pending in the Senate appropriating a hundred million dollars for Government housing in important industrial centers where there was a lack of living accommodations for men and women employed in Government service, I insisted that the attitude of the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board in discouraging construction would in the end bring about a shortage of housing which it would take years to overcome. I protested that the building of homes was, next to the production of food, the most essential of all the country's enterprises, and that it would be much better to stop less essential work and permit the housing business to continue wherever labor, capital, and material could be obtained without interference with the business of carrying on the war. As I recall it, no other Member of this body offered protest. We were so absorbed in the war that we overlooked many other essential matters.

When the war was over there was almost at once a disposition to again begin active construction work, but we were unable to proceed because of the fact that the whole building industry had been disrupted; we found that transportation was inadequate and material directed to other channels; and that labor, through war conditions, had changed the whole system of business, while the wages of labor in the building trade had doubled and its efficiency materially decreased. Our transportation facilities were disorganized by Government operation and mismanagement. Railroad service for construction materials had failed, although recently it has been somewhat improved.

To-day we have freight rates on building materials more than double what they were before the war, and with all probability that the high rates will remain in effect. Our lowest coal prices to-day are two and one-half times what they were in prewar times, and in some cases from six to ten times the prewar price. The Government has fixed the wages of men employed by the railroads and in the mines. We can not hope for any material reduction in transportation or fuel unless there is some reduction in wages. It is true that the railroads are being operated now much more efficiently than a few months ago, but if these high wage rates continue, we can not expect any noticeable reductions in transportation rates.

We are facing an entirely new business situation. Wages are higher; other costs are higher. And while there ought to be a substantial reduction in the prices of every commodity, building construction prices will never come back to where they were before, so we must face the situation with that in mind.

The present tax laws are a large element in contributing to the situation. In the cities the increased cost of necessary local improvements has doubled the taxes. The need for additional revenue has caused the enactment by the several States of income-tax laws. The cost of the war, the need for revenue to pay interest and for the amortization of our debt, and the increased cost of government will keep taxes out of proportion to the prewar rate for a good many years. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his recent annual statement, estimated the yearly cost of running the Government at four billion, and stated that in his judgment it would be impossible for a number of years to decrease this amount.

High taxes have been particularly burdensome on the building industry. In fact, some individuals of large incomes who formerly loaned a large part of their capital on real estate mortgages claim that these mortgages, after paying taxes, net less than 2 per cent income, and that other investments can be found which will give 5 and 6 per cent; this, naturally, results in a shortage of money for housing development.

There is no doubt that there exists a serious shortage of houses, not only in the great cities, but in the smaller towns as well, and in fact even in the villages, and this applies to every part of the country. Wherever the committee has held hearings, people have traveled hundreds of miles to testify as to unfavorable building conditions in their respective communities. They have complained of money shortage; they have complained of building material costs and lack of transportation for building materials. Some sober, level-headed business men have urged that the committee refrain from making any recommendations to relieve the situation, insisting that the law of supply and demand would take care of the situation. I pointed out to them that there was a demand, even a shortage, and that there is an ample supply of raw materials and labor, but still that there is no active movement in the building of homes. Many of the State legislatures have enacted laws which they felt would furnish some relief. In Massachusetts, for instance, a bill was passed which had the purpose of controlling rentals. In that Commonwealth other measures were enacted giving municipalities the right to bond themselves to the extent of 1 per cent of their assessed real estate, this money to be used by the city for home building. In New York and New Jersey rent laws were passed and laws exempting from taxation, for a period of years, new buildings erected strictly for housing purposes. Other restrictive measures of local character have also been passed. But most of these laws have tended to further increase the housing shortage by discouraging building.

It is interesting to note that we are not the only country which is troubled with this same problem. In France the situation has become so bad that the Government, in response to public demand, has actually offered to builders 50 per cent of the cost of construction if they would only get busy and construct homes for the people. In England the Government is attempting to arrange for the construction of 500,000 workingmen's houses. These are all to be built by the Government itself and rented at a price that will hardly pay the interest on the cost of construction, with the result that some day England will face a condition, in attempting to pay its housing bonds, that will, unless extraordinary steps are taken to prevent it, undermine her whole business and social fabric.

The committee's activities have been directed with the idea in mind of extending facilities to private initiative rather than subsidies, and rather than elaborating governmental organization for construction. The total housing construction in this country during the past four years was less than in the year 1916 alone, or in fact in any other one of the immediate prewar years. The construction of houses is like every other business, based entirely upon the profit in the venture, and men will build houses again when they can see an opportunity for gain. There will be protests against legislation that will tend to encourage men to make profits, but after all unless the producer can make profits the shortage of houses will continue; in fact it will become even more embarrassing than it is to-day.

When the committee began its inquiry into the subject, it was anxious to find some means by which the Federal legislation could help restore building activity without directly involving the Government in construction or subsidy. The Nation has had enough of governmental operation and control of business. The committee has found this sentiment existing everywhere it went, but it has also found a feeling that the Government, having stopped building, must furnish facilities to restore the industry to its normal activity. And so the committee has recommended the establishment of a construction bureau in the Department of Commerce which may be a clearing house for all building activities and a place where information can be obtained concerning building materials, where study can be made of all sorts of new building methods tending to decrease costs, and where uniformity of standard materials may be worked out. In other words, the bureau will be helpful in furnishing information of every character to stimulate building, reduce its cost, and be a means of encouraging generally the building of homes for all the people of the country. The creation of this bureau has been strongly urged by practical men engaged in the building industry throughout the country, and if initiated under the proper auspices, will, I am sure, prove exceedingly helpful.

In the committee's inquiry into financing building it discovered, among other things, that in the country west of the Allegheny Mountains the banking methods were different from those in the East. In the Eastern States we have a system of mutual savings banks where 50 per cent of the deposits are loaned back to the people for building construction, mostly homes, in the immediate neighborhood where the money is deposited. As an evidence of the extent of the business done in this way, it is interesting to note that in New York State these savings banks have deposits totaling $2,398,328,940, and have approximately $1,227,117,575 loaned back on bond and mortgages on real estate. A like condition exists in the New England States and in other Eastern States, but there are none of these mutual banks in the western country. The State and national banks, however, have savings departments where money is deposited at large interest rates, and these deposits are loaned on short-term securities, little or no part being used for financing homes.

Our committee has been informed that there is upward of $2,000,000,000 of savings deposits in the national banks of the country, and I have introduced a bill to-day which provided that 50 per cent of the savings deposits in these banks may be loaned on mortgages on real estate. In my judgment, this will not in any degree affect the stability of these banks. These deposits may be drawn on demand, but under the statutes 90 days' notice may be required in case of an emergency. In my own judgment, it will do much to safeguard these banks, although the deposits will not be as liquid as they are to-day; in the long run, however, they will be more secure, for there is no investment safer than first mortgages on homes.

The committee's investigations have convinced me that under our present Federal taxation system the issuance by the States of bonds for public improvements have been unduly encouraged. These are issued tax-exempt, and wherever public interest can be secured for an improvement of any character in a State or any of its subdivisions it is easy to get money in this manner. Not only are the funds of the country being drawn from industry in this manner, but vast sums have been wasted through the carrying on of public improvements that could have been deferred until business conditions are stabilized.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, does the Senator object to an interruption?

Mr. CALDER. No, Mr. President.

Mr. McLEAN. Has the Senator any estimate of the total investment in nontaxable securities?

Mr. CALDER. I have a statement here.

Mr. McLEAN. I think it is something more than sixteen billion.

Mr. CALDER. My estimate was that it was a little less than fifteen. Men of large incomes are drawing their money out of active industry and investing it in these tax-exempt securities in order to avoid the payment of taxes. These tax-exempt securities have increased in the last five years from $3,000,000,000 to over $14,000,000,000. High taxes and exempt securities have not only led States to bond themselves to such an extent that they will some day find it difficult to meet their obligations, but have also retarded the Nation's business generally. They have resulted in taking from the mortgage field almost completely the private investor. The interest rate on mortgages is fixed by law in nearly every State, and individuals of large means who formerly invested a considerable portion of their wealth in mortgage investments find to-day, because of high taxes, their net profits in many cases not more than one-third of what they received before the income-tax law went into effect. I am informed that the Marshall Field estate in Chicago and the estate of Hetty Green, both of whom formerly loaned heavily on real estate, find their incomes from this source less than 2 per cent, and they are diverting their capital funds to more lucrative investments. The supply of mortgage money is so restricted that to-day the home owner is compelled to rely largely on savings banks and insurance companies in the East and building and loan associations in the West. I have introduced a bill exempting from taxation the income on mortgages when in the hands of individuals, provided that no individual shall own more than $40,000 worth of exempt mortgages.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator if any of the States have laws similar to that. Do the States exempt in many instances, where the money goes into homes?

Mr. CALDER. I do not know of any State that does, I will say, Mr. President. In New York State we have an income tax, graduated from 1 to 3 per cent, but in that State the income on mortgages is not tax exempt. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that this is not a very large item of the Federal tax except in the case of a lender or of an institution with a very large income, where the income runs into the millions or hundreds of thousands, when the income tax gets up to 50 or 60 or 65 per cent. The fact that two-thirds of the income from the mortgage investment is taken in taxation practically takes the mortgage paper out of the market.

I consider the adoption of this measure very necessary unless our whole revenue system is changed, the excess-profits tax repealed, and the maximum income tax fixed at not to exceed 30 per cent of the income. It is the common belief that these high taxes are taken entirely from the rich, and while on the surface of things that appears to be so, in the end the taxes are passed on to the consumer. I know there is a well-grounded opinion that it would be unwise to further extend our tax-exempt field, but the Government itself is responsible for the present building conditions as well as for the present tax-exempt securities, and it would be much better to provide for a small tax exemption for mortgages and thereby obtain sufficient means to revive the housing industry rather than later in response to public demand adopt a Government construction program of a socialistic nature which would mean the expenditure of several billion dollars from the Public Treasury. When the present revenue laws are revised not only should the high rates be lowered, but I would provide that further issues of State and municipal bonds should at least be subject to normal income-tax rates. This would check the movement of large issues of tax-exempt bonds. This, I am sure, would be welcomed by those who are trying to safeguard the interests of the different communities of the country. However, until the issuance of tax-exempt securities has been effectively checked the real estate mortgages should be made a more attractive investment unless we are prepared to face the consequences of an increasing housing shortage.

In the committee's report we have recommended legislation providing for exemption for the next five years of the profits on the sale of new buildings erected for dwelling purposes, provided these profits are reinvested in new buildings. Legislation of this character was enacted at the last session of Congress in order to encourage the building of ships engaged in the foreign trade. This is very unusual, but in my opinion should be extended to cover housing also, as such legislation is justifiable in the emergency that exists to-day.

The committee has also urged the creation of a home loan banking system in line with our farm loan bank. Under the bill proposed there would be established in each Federal reserve district banks to be organized with a capital of not less than a hundred thousand dollars, stock to be subscribed by building and loan associations in that district. The purpose of these banks is to permit the discounting of mortgages held by building and loan associations. No Government funds or subsidy are contemplated, because the building and loan associations already have ample assets. The committee believes that legislation of this kind could be so safeguarded as to avoid any possible loss on the part of the Government or of any individual, and that vast sums could be obtained through the sale of bonds to conservative investors. The objection to this bill is based entirely on the fact that it would create more tax-exempt securities. There is some justification for this objection, but these building and loan associations of the country have to-day loaned on bonds and mortgages over $2,200,000,000, and there are no organizations in the country that have contributed more toward obtaining homes for our people than have these building and loan associations. They are organized under State laws, and in the main conducted by men located in the immediate community where they are operating, and the amount of their losses has been negligible. In fact, I am of the opinion that in the present business depression the securities held by these associations have universally maintained their value and there have been few losses. At least 95 per cent of these organizations are in favor of the legislation I have referred to. The suggestion has come to the committee—and we are disposed to consider it—that perhaps the bonds issued under this act might be made subject to the normal tax. The suggestion has also come to the committee that under this home loan banking system corporations other than building and loan associations might also organize for loaning money to build homes. The committee may determine to recommend this being done.

I have talked to-day about the financing of building. This, in my judgment, is one of the important things in connection with the revival of building activity, but there are other questions involved, and I have already referred to them in some degree. Labor is a big problem. The testimony before our committee indicates, when one considers the cost to the manufacturer of materials which go into houses, that 75 per cent of it is for labor.

There is no question that labor has been inefficient since the war. This is apparent to everyone and not even denied by labor itself. It was brought about by the allocation of many skilled men to war work, and was encouraged by the cost-plus system of contracting, where it made no difference to the employer whether labor did a day's work or not or whether it received more or less. Wages have doubled and efficiency has lessened to such an extent that when averaged up one finds that it cost three or four times as much for the labor to build a house this year as it did in 1916. I think it fair, however, to labor to say that in recent months its efficiency has materially increased. Labor insists that the high wages paid them during the past 15 months shall be maintained, and they have a right to insist upon this unless living costs are reduced. There is evidence that we are approaching a period when living costs will be reduced. When that time comes labor must do its part.

There is another very important matter that the committee discovered in its investigation of the building situation, and that is the lack of apprentices. Labor in the past has sought to check the number of apprentices, contending that if the number was unlimited it would in the end afford less opportunity for journeymen to obtain employment. This situation no longer exists, for in most cities of the country we find little disposition on the part of the young men to learn the building trades. They are to-day more interested in engaging in lines of endeavor where no manual labor is required. There never was greater opportunity for the young men of America to learn trades in which employment is steady and unlimited. This is true in nearly all building trades. I have already called it to the attention of the Senate and I have called it to the attention of the governors of a number of States, so that some steps may be undertaken to establish trade schools, where young men may be encouraged to equip themselves to take advantage of existing opportunities.

The future of the country is involved in this matter of skilled labor. I have been an observer of building activities for years; the country has been depending largely upon men coming here from abroad to furnish the workmen in our building industry. The immigrants from the Scandinavian countries, Germany, and the British Isles have formed a large part of our building tradesmen, but now very few trained workmen are coming from these countries; and with little disposition on the part of American-born young men to learn the trades, unless there is a revival of interest we will be a country of mediocre workmen in another generation.

I think it fair to say in behalf of the American Federation of Labor that when their representatives have appeared before this committee they have been willing always to cooperate in all matters to encourage building of homes. They have appointed a committee to adjust jurisdictional strikes, and much good has been done in ending labor difficulties through this instrumentality.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will kindly suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production; and for other purposes.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, we have a situation in the city of New York where a committee of our legislature, presided over by Senator Lockwood, with Samuel Untermyer as counsel, has rendered unusual public service in unearthing building conditions that have shocked the country. They have found combinations between labor and capital, or, I should say, not exactly between labor and capital, but on the part of some labor leaders who, through dealing with some men of the building industry, have been able to obtain for certain labor leaders tremendous sums of money, and have given some members of the building industry unusual advantage in being able to obtain labor to complete their contracts within a given time. Many men have been indicted in New York in connection with this matter. Some have been convicted and others I am sure will be.

Our committee has authority from the Senate to appoint counsel, for the purpose of taking up the subject from a nation-wide standpoint. I feel confident that when we have concluded our inquiry in this line we will have cleaned up the situation to some degree and benefits will come to the building business of the country, and more particularly to the housing industry, and that prices will be lower, at least to some degree, as a result of this very same matter.

I repeat that, in my opinion, private initiative should be encouraged. We have relied upon our American citizenry to solve its problems in the past. There never was a time when the country needed the best-directed efforts as much as it does to-day, and Congress can perform no greater service than that of enacting legislation which will encourage private citizens to settle their own problems, rather than legislation which will make the private citizen dependent upon the Government.

May I call the attention of the Senate to a situation that has caused considerable trouble during the past six months? That is the issuance of priority orders by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the transportation of coal. These were issued with the best of intentions, but did much harm, particularly to the building industry. While the movement of fuel is important, the Interstate Commerce Commission acted, it seemed to the committee, many times without full information. It was most unwise and most damaging to industry to have ex parte orders issued for the movement of coal, without opportunity to men in other lines to present their side of the case to the commission. The committee would direct the attention of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce to this matter, with a view to amendment of the transportation act, in order to check the issuance of ill-advised ex parte orders. These priority orders have forced men who had to have various building materials at once to pay two and three times the regular price for them. These priority orders have retarded business and discouraged building immensely during the past year. I believe, however, that transportation facilities have now improved to such an extent that the priority orders will be unnecessary during the coming year.

In discussing the effect of the housing shortage on public health and morals, I wish to refer to a recent conference held by the health commissioners of the country at Detroit, called by Dr. Copeland, health commissioner of the city of New York, at the suggestion of the committee. All cities with a population of 200,000 or over were represented. The report of the conference indicates that in every city of the Nation there is abnormal overcrowding. It was brought out that as a result of the overcrowding infant mortality in the congested centers has increased 50 per cent. There is also a large increase in the number of tuberculosis cases in the cities. This conference of health commissioners strongly urged that every effort should be made by the States and Federal Government to revive housing activity, and pointed out that if something is not done to bring this about the health of the Nation will be menaced.

The Senate undoubtedly recalls the recent figures of the Census Bureau, which show that for the first time a majority of our people live in cities, while formerly a majority lived in the rural districts. It seems to be the trend of the times for people to gather in the cities, and no act of ours here can change that drift. Since these people are in the cities, they must be sheltered. I wish to urge upon the Senate that greater interest be displayed here in the human welfare, so that something may be done to relieve the deplorable living conditions.

Many Members of the Senate believe these conditions will in the end take care of themselves. France believed likewise until she was compelled to pass housing laws, which mean Government building and paternalism. England thought so until she had to provide for the building of 500,000 homes for her workingmen. New York thought so until the people demanded the passing of rent laws. Massachusetts thought so until the legislature found it necessary to enact similar laws. So we hesitate and put off until we may have to take action, which is damaging to the future of our country. Would it not be better to act now than to wait and have the people of America rise up in discontent and demand that the Government itself go into the building business?

I can not take my seat without saying a word on the coal situation. This every Senator knows about. Our railroad difficulties and our labor difficulties have had much to do with our fuel problem. Coal profiteering on the part of the mine operators has encouraged the miners to ask for more pay. When they see the mine operators charging $15 a ton for their product, it is natural that the miner should demand a part of their profits. Bituminous coal which before the war sold at the mine for $1.50, is now $3.50 to $15, and anthracite, which formerly sold at the mine for $3.50, has brought recently from $8 to $20.

Fuel is a basic necessity. National development depends upon an ever-increasing supply of power. Heat is as necessary for production, in fact, for human existence, as is air or water; its use must be continued from day to day and can not be deferred or interrupted.

Our investigation into the coal situation has convinced me that the private interests now in control of the production and distribution of coal, in spite of efforts by some, are actually unable to prevent a continuance or a repetition of the present deplorable situation, and that it is the duty of the Government to take such reasonable and practical steps as it may to remedy the evil. We must have fuel and shelter, and something must be done to supply the dire necessities to the people. Men have contended that this business, too, will take care of itself, and considerable reference has been made to the operation of the railroads under Government control. It is a recognized fact that the coal business, if properly conducted, could easily supply fuel to the people at a price they could afford to pay. The committee has felt disposed, before it actually urges the establishment of complete Government control, or even the licensing system, to recommend that all coal operators, wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers be compelled by statute to file at regular and frequent periods with some Federal agency reports on the total tonnage produced or handled, the size and quality thereof, the amount of tonnage contracted for, the amount sold on contract and at spot sale, to whom, together with the prices made or received under such contracts or sales.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. CALDER. Certainly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is the Senator familiar with the bill which was presented by the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to the full committee, which carries out practically all the recommendations in the preliminary report of the committee of which the Senator is the head?

Mr. CALDER. I have not minutely examined the bill to which the Senator refers, but from a hasty examination of it it would seem in large part to agree with my conclusions on the matter.

I wish to compliment the Senator upon his bill. It is a step in the right direction. I wish to say to him, too, that I arrived at my conclusions in the matter without ever having read his bill or having the slightest knowledge that he and I were of the same opinion as to the remedy.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope to have the Senator's support if the bill is reported out by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CALDER. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey again that in the main I agree with his proposition. I would go a little further than the Senator does, and I purpose to confer with him about the whole situation before introducing the bill I have in mind.

Let me say further to the Senator that he is a member of the great Committee on Interstate Commerce, and a very prominent member of the committee. I trust that he will urge his committee at the very earliest date to take up consideration of his bill, and the bill which I shall introduce, upon which I am hopeful his committee will agree.

Mr. McLEAN. Can the Senator from New York give us from his investigation any information with regard to the activities of the Department of Justice or the Federal Trade Commission in trying to enforce the laws against extortion and in the production and sale of coal?

Mr. CALDER. I know there has been some activity on the part of the Department of Justice, but not in my judgment as great as could easily have been. I believe that there is plenty of evidence obtainable that would have warranted the Department of Justice in prosecuting, under the Lever Act, some of the men interested in the coal business in the country. I know some suits have been begun, but I know of none that have terminated successfully. I know also, I will say to the Senator from Connecticut, that the Federal Trade Commission has attempted to obtain from the coal operators of the country detailed information along the line asked for by the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and as recommended by our report; that is, complete information as to costs, selling prices, production, and all similar matters; but when the Federal Trade Commission sought to collect such information the coal operators of the country began suit against the commission, and have been able, so far, to restrain them by order of the court from gathering the information. So I think it is hardly fair to say that the Federal Trade Commission has not made some effort to get information which, if obtained and published to the whole country, would, I am sure, be very helpful.

Mr. President, we are not sure that the remedy proposed will be adequate, but believe it should be tried before the Government goes into business itself. It would afford opportunity for the public to know the exact cost of production, the price coal was sold for, and to whom. It would also afford opportunity for coal to be traced to its final destination and in all probability would bring the relief desired. The committee makes this recommendation now and is to inquire further into the situation.

During the past few days revelations have been made as to the actual cost of the production of bituminous coal—we have that information in our possession, obtained from some of the operators—as to the great production this year, and as to the fact that the railroads have carried more tonnage during the months of July, August, September, and October than ever before in their history; and yet Interstate Commerce Commissioner Aitchison, when asked by me in his appearance before our committee, "Has it ever been suggested that coal was being held for higher prices or speculation?" answered:

> I have not any doubt of it. There has been the greatest crossing of orders, double-crossing of orders, and double-crossing of consignees and those that have had contracts for the last 90 days that I have ever known about in my business experience. That is abundantly established. We have moved coal. It has been moved and delivered in such quantities that there ought not to be any occasion for panic. But there has been the excuse of car shortage and the excuse of labor trouble. The result has been that certain unscrupulous mine owners, I have no doubt, and perhaps certain brokers who have contracts with the railroads, with construction companies of one kind or another, with industries, with wholesalers and with retailers of coal that have deliberately withheld the fulfilling of their contracts in order that they might have coal for the market.

That was the statement of a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission appearing as a witness before our committee. Coal has been so difficult to obtain that the Government itself has been obliged to pay commissions ranging as high as 50 cents per ton, one gentleman alone receiving many thousands of dollars simply for acting as an agent for the War Department in connection with such purchases.

I will call the attention of my colleagues particularly to the remarks which I now propose to make, because they affect some coal purchased by the War Department.

Mr. POMERENE. Who was the man to whom the Senator has referred?

Mr. CALDER. The one who made the $75,000 fee?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. CALDER. He was Col. Wentz, president of the National Coal Operators' Association. It appears that he was invited by the War Department to purchase for them not exceeding 275,000 tons of coal, and merely for acting as the agent for the War Department he was to be paid $137,000. The evidence before the committee indicated that he had already procured for the Government while acting as its agent 150,000 tons of coal, involving a commission or agency fee to him of $75,000.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. EDGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Am I correctly advised that this gentleman was himself at the head of a certain corporation which was selling coal at probably $4 a ton or thereabouts to private parties; that he went out and bought coal for the War Department at $11 a ton and got a commission of 50 cents per ton thereon? I was so informed this morning, though I was not present at the time he testified. Is that correct?

Mr. CALDER. It is substantially correct, but the evidence before the committee indicated that Col. Wentz's mine in West Virginia, the Stonega mine, was selling coal for $3.50 per ton, or perhaps $3.75 a ton, and that, acting as the agent for the Government, he sold coal to the War Department at $11 a ton. I inquired of Col. Wentz if he sold any of his $3.50 coal to the Government. He said he did not, but that he sold other people's coal to the Government at $11 per ton, out of which he made a commission or an agency fee of 50 cents.

Mr. POMERENE. Has the Senator individually, or has his committee, been able to reconcile that course of conduct with the principles of common honesty which ought to regulate the relations which exist between a man who is dealing with the Government and the Government?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I was quite shocked at the disclosure, and stated at the hearing that the American people never would agree that a transaction was perfectly legitimate whereby a coal operator who sold coal for $3.50 a ton to his private customers should, while representing the Government, obtain coal for it at $11 a ton. His answer was that he had no coal to sell at that time, but that the Government had sent him out to buy coal in the market for it, and that he did buy some coal for the Government at as high a price as $11 a ton.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield, with the permission of the Senator from New York.

Mr. KENYON. Being a member of the committee which made this investigation, I am interested in the inquiry of the Senator from Ohio. Does he think that it is the duty of the committee to reconcile with the principles of common honesty the operations of many of the coal operators in this country? If he does, I wish to retire from the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am very frank to say that when I asked the question, with all the respect that I have for the great ability of the committee, I did not believe they would be able to do it. I simply desire to observe—and I am assuming when I make the statement that the facts are fully before the committee, and I base my statement upon that assumption—that I think the facts should be referred to the Department of Justice, if this man is a civilian, for their investigation; and if he was in the War Department it ought to be referred to that department, with a view to court-martialing him.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator from Ohio is referring to and, of course, has in mind Col. Wentz. Col. Wentz is not now in the service; he is not a Regular Army officer, but is the president of the National Coal Association. He has not been in the service for some time, nor did he arrange for this agency fee while he was in the Army. Col. Wentz is a coal operator, and is also a wholesale coal dealer. Not as an operator selling coal at $3.50 a ton, but as a wholesale coal dealer, selling coal at the market price, he arranged this matter for the War Department, as he says, at its request. I have no reason to doubt him. He said at the request of the War Department he went out and bought the coal at prices not exceeding $11 a ton, receiving a fee of 50 cents for doing that for the War Department.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, does not the difference between $3.50 and $11 per ton represent the average extent to which the Government was held up during the war on all articles purchased by it?

Mr. CALDER. I think that may be true; but the war is over and high prices ought to cease.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but I was merely trying to ascertain whether that was about the extent to which the Government was robbed during the war in connection with all articles purchased by it, at the same time it was paying ninety-odd dollars for a hinge and $45 for a lock for a door.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. With the permission of the Senator from New York, I think it is only fair to state that, as I recall the testimony before the committee yesterday, Col. Wentz testified that he advised the War Department that they should not buy coal at that time, but the War Department—and I think the evidence was the Secretary of War or the purchasing agent; I am not sure which and can not state positively—insisted that he go into the market at that time and buy the amount of coal that he was deputized to buy, and it was necessary, in order to carry out that order, to pay from $6.90 to $11 per ton. I think that is correct, is it not?

Mr. CALDER. That statement was made by Col. Wentz.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask a question for further information?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Did the committee go into the question of the immediate necessities of the Government at that time?

Mr. EDGE. I did not catch the question.

Mr. POMERENE. Did the committee go into the question of what were the immediate necessities of the Government at that time?

Mr. EDGE. No; not in detail. It was at the end of the day's session. This information, however, must be followed up by the committee in many respects. The particular coal purchases, as I recall, were made in September and October of this year for the coming winter's use.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have such infinite confidence in the personal integrity and the high character of the Secretary of War that I do not believe he would enter into any contract unless he thought that it was absolutely necessary. I have no doubt that, whatever his views may have been at the time, they were based upon what he thought was sufficient evidence; but I am directing my attention to the coal dealer, who will sell his own coal at $3.50 to the private consumer or the industrial consumer, and when it comes to selling coal to the Federal Government for its operations charges $11 per ton. That course can not be defended.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I am quite sure that no member of the committee is offering any immunity for the coal dealers. If Senators have followed up our investigation and the reports we have already submitted they will realize that it is not necessary even to discuss such a question. The Senator from Ohio, I think, has not entirely understood the testimony as I recall it. The same purchasing agent for the Government, Col. Wentz, did not sell his coal for $11, as I recall his testimony.

Mr. CALDER. That is correct.

Mr. EDGE. He sold his coal for $3.50 and above, but I do not recall that he ever sold it for as high as $11.

Mr. POMERENE. I think inadvertently I used the word "sell." I understood from what the chairman of the committee said that the gentleman referred to went out and bought the coal from other producers and sold it and got a commission of 50 cents.

Mr. EDGE. Yes; but Col. Wentz stated very positively to the committee that he did that upon positive orders of the War Department and against his own advice.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the committee now knows the cost of bituminous coal at the mines of the respective producers; it knows the names of the producers and the amounts at which they have sold their coal; it knows something of the activities of one of the great coal associations which during the past three years has spent nearly a million dollars, has collected from its members nearly a million and a quarter, and is now collecting at the rate of nearly a half million dollars annually. This association during the past summer has been trying to ally itself with wholesalers and retailers and anthracite producers, in order to present a united front to influence the making and administration of the Federal laws. It has assisted in drafting some of the priority car-service orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission which have relieved its members of contractual obligations. It is ever ready to supply voluminous information upon the questions which are to the interest of its membership, but seems reluctant to supply simple and essential information which may be to their disadvantage. Its membership have dictated to the United States Geological Survey as to the form in which the basic figures should be compiled. It has spent in lawyers' fees alone during the past nine months over $100,000. Its officers have held forth to this committee promising assurances of reductions in prices of bituminous coal since last July. Nevertheless, profiteering has continued and propaganda has been issued shifting responsibility to others; indeed, this association is so powerful that its president has been sought by the War Department as a procurer of bituminous coal at a commission of 50 cents a ton.

According to the final figures furnished the committee, during the period from July to November the War Department purchased some 900,000 tons of bituminous coal at figures as high as $13 at the mine. The average cost of mining this coal was probably about $3. The average price to the War Department of this coal at the mine was about $7 per ton, so that the department paid about $3,600,000 over the cost of producing the coal.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. In my section of the country in the early autumn of this year the operators had sold large quantities of coal at contract price, say, $10 or $11 a ton delivered there, and the purchasers could not get the coal. They were told by the operators that they did not have it, but that they could go to what they called the independents and buy all the coal they wanted for from $18 to $20 a ton.

I had quite a correspondence with the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission in regard to the matter, and I could not get any satisfaction at all. It seems to me that the law ought to be so amended that the Federal Trade Commission, in cooperation with the Department of Justice, can get at a situation like that and punish them, and if the Federal Trade Commission have not power enough it seems to me it would be a good plan to give them additional power. If all they have are gums without teeth, we had better put some teeth into the gums without establishing any new board.

Mr. CALDER. I am quite in accord with the Senator's views. I know something about the conditions in his State. I heard a good deal about them from the Senator himself during the summer. The trouble was this: Those who had contracts to deliver coal to the citizens of the Senator's State complained that they could get no cars; but the Senator's constituents could always go out and get the coal if they paid the price, while the coal operator or wholesaler who had a contract with the Senator's constituents was selling in Baltimore or Philadelphia or New York or some other place, at the spot price, the contract coal which should have gone to his people.

Mr. McLEAN. It appeared to us that there was collusion between the regular operators and the independents, as they were called. Has the Senator investigated that subject?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, we have not gotten down to it. This is one of the most important things I ever tackled; and I want to say to my friend the Senator that the ramifications of this coal business, one "passing the buck" to the other, and, as Mr. Aitchison said before us, the crossing and double-crossing of the coal industry during the past summer, have been about the worst examples of defying the public and of giving improper information that have ever come to my knowledge.

Mr. McLEAN. Did the Senator's investigation go into the quality of the coal? I am getting complaints frequently that the coal that is being delivered in New England now is about 25 per cent slate.

Mr. CALDER. I will say to the Senator that we have had many complaints, and we have investigated some of them.

Mr. EDGE and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CALDER. I yield first to the junior Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. Is not the query of the Senator from Connecticut partially answered, at least, by a realization of the fact that under the priority orders many of these independents were able to secure orders for cars to transport their coal, and, as I understand from the testimony before the committee, I think yesterday or the day before, the Interstate Commerce Commission is compelled by the present law to allocate certain cars to the smaller mines in certain proportions, and through that the independents were able to get a sufficient supply of coal in the retailers' hands to keep up these prices in the way he speaks of? There is not any question in the world, in my judgment, that there must be legislation giving the Federal Trade Commission considerably more power, if that is the board to handle the subject; and there must be some board, perhaps the Interstate Commerce Commission, in such a position that common sense and ordinary business judgment can be used rather than these automatic rules or laws, whatever they may be.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the senior Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that the preliminary report of the Senator's committee provided for the standardization of coal, did it not, the classification of coal through an inspection? Did it not recommend that?

Mr. CALDER. I do not think we went into that very fully.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will state, if it did not, that the bill which was presented to the Interstate Commerce Commission contemplated placing in a bureau of the Government or in the Geological Survey the inspection and standardization of coal by Government authorities.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. CALDER. With pleasure.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] has referred to the exorbitant prices which were charged to consumers in the State of Connecticut. I may say that even in my own State, when the production of coal was certainly costing, including a reasonable profit, not to exceed $4 per ton f. o. b. cars at the mine, it was retailing to the domestic consumer at eight and nine and ten and eleven dollars. The Senator from New York has just referred to the price that was paid by the War Department. I state these facts preliminary to this question:

Has not the committee found that in very many instances these exorbitant charges were being made as against domestic consumers and industrial consumers, as well as the War Department, at a time when Col. Wentz was contracting his coal, as he claims, at $3.50 and $4 per ton f. o. b. cars at the mine?

Mr. CALDER. Yes, sir. I will say to the Senator that in the great industrial centers in the East these industries, the public utilities, and the coal dealers, having contracts for their year's supply, were unable to obtain enough coal for their immediate needs, and were obtaining some, but were required to go out during certain months of the year when they had contracts for $3.50 and $4 a ton and pay as high as $12, $14, and $15 to get enough coal for their immediate needs.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from New York in the early part of his remarks on this subject made the statement that these difficulties were in part labor, in part strikes, and in part transportation. I think he is right about that; but, save during the time when this outlaw strike of the switchmen was in progress, it was my observation, after a considerable investigation, that the men who could not get transportation when they were paying a low price for coal could nearly always get transportation when they paid a high price for coal. Now, there may be some way of explaining that consistently with the high principles of common honesty, but I do not expect this committee to answer that question. I desire to call attention to another matter, if the Senator will permit me.

There has been a good deal of talk about the troubles growing out of the shipment of coal for the uplake region, and this has to some extent affected the price of coal in my section of the country. Will the Senator permit me to explain briefly?

Mr. CALDER. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Ordinarily the shipment of coal up the Lakes begins at the opening of navigation, and there is a constant stream of these coal boats going up the Lakes laden with coal and coming down laden with iron. They always desire to have this coal taken up by the Lake route, because it is much cheaper than by the railroad route; but this switchmen's strike in the spring largely interfered with these shipments up the Lakes. Then an order was made by the Interstate Commerce Commission directing that a vast deal of the coal mined in Ohio, western Pennsylvania, and perhaps in West Virginia should be taken up to the Lake ports in order that it might be sent up by the Lake route, their intention being to supply the Ohio consumers and others in that vicinity later in the season, and they made an order to that effect, so that coal was sent up to the Lakes which ordinarily was not shipped up there. I say "ordinarily not shipped," for the reason that some of our coal in Ohio is too soft for storage purposes, and when it is stored and gets wet it heats, and we have spontaneous combustion; so that it is the harder variety of coal that is ordinarily shipped up the Lakes. Under this order a good deal of this soft coal, too soft for storage, was sent up the Lake routes, and in Ohio during the summer you could not get coal at any reasonable price for domestic purposes; and it further resulted in this situation: Many of these mines had contracted their coal to private industries at, let me say—I am not speaking accurately—$4 per ton at the mouth of the mine, and under this order to ship it uplakes these operators got $5 a ton and over for the coal that went uplakes, when it was all under contract to sell to these private industries at $4 or less.

After this plan had been in operation for some time I was waited upon by a committee from the Chambers of Commerce of Akron and Canton. They had been in conference with the chamber of commerce in Cleveland, and later on they had some hearings, as a result of which the situation was to some extent remedied; but even in August, notwithstanding the experience which we had two years ago, there were from ten to eleven thousand cars of loaded coal on the sidetracks in Cleveland, which was the equivalent of about four days' shipping capacity of all the boats on the Lakes, and another 6,000 cars were en route between the mines and the Lakes for lake shipment. The result was that here were these cars standing idle for a period of nearly four days on the tracks in Cleveland, and the domestic consumer could not get coal, and under a proper regulation of this situation these cars could have been sent to the mines, reloaded, and sent to these various industrial centers where they needed coal for domestic purposes. I think those facts ought to be known, and we ought to have the benefit of them in our investigation of the subject.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the information given by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to some degree was already known by the committee. These priority orders were issued and taken advantage of undoubtedly by some coal operators, and they worked just as the Senator has told us they did. The industries of his State, the household consumers, and the public utilities having contracts had their coal diverted under these priority orders, and they were compelled, despite the fact that they were covered by their contracts, to go out into the open market and buy spot coal, and were compelled to pay one, two, or three dollars, often five or six or ten dollars, higher for coal for their immediate needs.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, does the Senator know whether the production of coal is running equal to the consumption now?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, testimony before the committee yesterday indicated that the production of coal for this coal year, that is, the year beginning April 1 of this year and ending April 1 of next year, will be greater than in any year in the history of the country, and that the facilities are here for increasing that production at least 150,000,000 tons.

Mr. McLEAN. Then what is the real reason why we can not get coal in our section of the country? The situation is very serious there now. I had a communication from the city of Middletown last week telling me that they can not get coal at any price.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I think it is fair to say that the bituminous situation in the eastern part of the country has been somewhat relieved, but the anthracite situation is still very bad. We have had some hearings in New York on that, and the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] came to me this morning and said he thought that we ought to direct our attention to relieving the anthracite situation in the East. He pointed out to me some letters he had, and I received some this morning from up-State counties in New York, which show that people are without fuel.

Mr. McLEAN. They consume both kinds, largely, in Connecticut, but a large percentage of the domestic consumption is of anthracite coal, and we can not get it at any price.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that we have formed some acquaintance with this subject in the last few days. We have been told by these gentlemen that if there is anyone with a specific complaint they will take care of it. If the Senator will forward his letters to our office, we will pass them along and try to help the immediate needs of his people.

Mr. McLEAN. I would like to discover an instrumentality which can assist us in procuring some coal.

Mr. CALDER. We will try to help.

Mr. McLEAN. I assure the Senator that he will be blessed, or cursed, with a large number of appeals for coal.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. As a member of that committee, following the very generous suggestion of the chairman of the committee, I am quite willing to join with him in helping in any possible way to secure that relief, but I think he should have his remarks clearly understood to refer, as possibly they did, to bituminous coal, soft coal. I think the situation so far as the soft-coal supply is concerned, according to the evidence before us, is such that there should be absolutely no difficulty in any part of the country to-day to have soft coal delivered at what would seem to be a fair price, and as a member of the committee I join with him and will be very glad to have concrete evidence sent to us, so that we can follow it up, if it refers to the soft coal, where difficulty is encountered in having delivery or where the price seems to be out of proportion to the cost that has been established by the investigation of the committee.

The question of anthracite coal, however, is quite different, and there are very many more complexing situations in connection with it which have come to the committee, and I must say that up to the present moment the solution is not in sight so far as I have been able to find.

Mr. CALDER. The committee is thankful at last that it has actual and specific information as to selling prices and as to purchasers, and with this definite information it is to be hoped that pressure may be brought to bring prices of coal to a reasonable level.

The outstanding fact of the committee's investigations seems to be that the coal interests themselves have taken the matters in hand during the past season, have influenced the issuance of priority car-service orders and other Federal action, and that the public has lost, while those engaged in the coal industry have made extraordinary profits. Many of the bituminous coal operators have set a most unfortunate moral example to the industry of the country during a period in which there should have been moral reconstruction as well as physical reconstruction.

NATIONAL POLICY OF ECONOMY.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, in the recent election the voters of the country swept out of office a great number of Democrats, many of whom have been faithful public servants. Even Tennessee, Arizona, Oklahoma, Maryland, and Missouri added their protest against present conditions. It is, however, no time for elation on the part of the Republicans, to whom the people have so overwhelmingly turned. It is rather a time for caution. Our responsibility is grave. Our task is serious. We must put the country on a sound financial basis. Our foreign policy must be thoroughly American. Above all we must return to constitutional government and cast aside any and all autocratic practices, many of which doubtless were advisable or perhaps necessary during the war. If we practice economy, if we avoid entangling alliances, and if we are guided by the Constitution I have no question but that we shall deserve to remain in power and will remain a long time. If, however, we spend too much time in elation, abuse our power, and fail to perform that which the people expect, they will turn on us as they have on the Democratic Party. With the lessons of 1912 fresh in our minds I have no fear of division in our ranks. And I have no doubt of constructive results at the hands of the party of Abraham Lincoln, McKinley, Roosevelt, and Harding.

Let us look into some of our problems and their remedies. When war was declared in 1917 we had in the executive departments in Washington a total of 32,000 employees. A year and a half later, at the time of the signing of the armistice, we had 117,000 employees. In a year the Republican Congress, though the executive branch was still Democratic, cut this number to 87,000. After two years of actual if not technical peace we still have 55,000 more employees in Washington than when the war began. Within the next six months we should further greatly reduce the total, and by the end of the present fiscal year we should, if it is at all possible, return to the prewar basis.

The Bureau of War Risk to-day has on its rolls in the National Capital 6,313 employees, as compared to 15,000 a year ago and 17,000 18 months ago. During the fiscal year it is costing the Government $125,000,000 for the payment of military and naval insurance, $10,324,000 for salaries and expenses, and $46,000,000 for the taking over of hospitals. Meanwhile the bureau is giving out the information that it has received gross applications numbering 4,655,916 and amounting in risk to $40,414,715,500. These are stupendous figures and would greatly impress us with the usefulness of the bureau did we not stop to examine them. The facts are that only 300,000 who have been honorably discharged from the service are still paying voluntarily on $1,740,000,000 of the original war risks included in the $40,414,715,500, and 200,000 now in the service are involuntarily paying on $990,000,000 on the risks in the grand total applied for. Ninety per cent of our soldiers, sailors, and marines who in the first instance took out war-risk policies provided by the Government were not sufficiently interested in them to keep up their payments and were therefore dropped. Five per cent of these have been influenced by the bureau as the result of large expenditure of money and energy to convert their policies to life insurance handled by the Government which would otherwise be handled by private companies outside of the Government. Thus, the Government, as it has a right to do under the law, to-day holds in risks of this kind 237,411 policies amounting to $749,145,000 in risk. Of this total $125,503,000 is in ordinary life policies, $233,146,000 in 20-year endowment policies, $270,863,000 in 20-year payment life policies, $48,359,500 in 30-year endowment policies, $41,010,000 in endowment policies paid up at the age of 62, and $30,252,000 in 30-year payment life insurance policies.

If such a large proportion of men have abandoned Government insurance, is it not fair to conclude that the bureau is a failure? Certainly the Government should not go into the insurance business at a loss, any more than the railroad, the telephone, or the telegraph business. The insurance should, however, be continued for those who care to keep it up; but I can see no reason why the War Risk should not be abolished and all of its functions turned over to the Pension Office. The good of the bureau thus would be retained and much expense done away with. Then, in accord with Republican policy throughout two generations, we should continue to assist those disabled in the service and their dependents. Many millions would be saved for the taxpayers and at the same time a policy would be continued which has always been proven fair and beneficial. At least one-half of the present cost—ten millions—would be saved.

Other bureaus in Washington are swelled out of all proportion to what they should be. One of these is the Bureau of Loans and Currency in the Treasury Department. In 1917 this bureau employed 40 people. It now has 2,000 on the pay roll. By simplification of method most of these could be done away with. All of the auditors for the various departments should be centered under one head, as is contemplated in the budget bill. They now employ 2,402 clerks. In the War Department auditing 1,057 are engaged, some of them on claims for horses stolen or bales of cotton burned during the War of 1812. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing has 7,213 clerks at work on activities growing out of the war, which should be rapidly completed. In the State Department 120 clerks are issuing passports, due entirely to the ludicrous fact that we are still legally at war with the long since defunct German Empire. The Public Health Service, placed upon a military basis, has here 2,000 clerks who stumble over each other in their efforts to keep up the friction of the technical conflict in which we are still engaged. The Adjutant General has about 3,000 clerks employed in the largest filing job in the world, but it is not to be expected that this will last forever. The work should be completed, the vast array of clerks discharged, and the number brought to the limit before the war. With the completion of the census 2,000 more clerks should, of course, disappear. Several bureaus overlap in their activities. Thus the Bureau of Mines and the Bureau of Standards are making the same investigation of heat treatment in improving the quality of steel. Thus also the Bureau of Education, the Woman's Bureau, the Children's Bureau, the Public Health Service, the Census Office, and the Department of Agriculture overlap in many instances. These facts and figures are only a part of the evidence of the crying need for the strictest sort of economy in order to bring us back to a businesslike conduct of the Government.

One of the evidences of waste and extravagance is provided by what is known as the Reclassification Commission, which has had for its noble purpose the rearrangement on a more equitable basis of the salaries of Government clerks. On this commission the President named two former Representatives of his own party in Congress—Mr. Keating, of Colorado, and Mr. Hamlin, of Missouri—and one Republican, Mr. Cooper, of Wisconsin, who has since been reelected. These estimable gentlemen spent $75,000 of the people's money and made a directory classification, which has failed in Chicago and every other municipality where tried. No great business enterprise would think of establishing a wooden standard of classification and remuneration for every place in its employ. Yet from the Reclassification Commission we have a voluminous report, which has all the appearance of presenting the details of a Chinese civil service.

No Member of either branch of Congress has more sympathy for the just grievances of the underpaid Government clerk than I have. When I see a man in charge of the sale of our public timberlands, and with many millions of dollars intrusted to his hands, receiving $1,800 per annum, and when I see the Assistant Chief of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants in the Treasury Department, with all of his first-hand knowledge of Government accounts, gathered through years of faithful service, receiving $2,500 a year, I know that something is wrong. Whatever rearrangement is made should be upon a plan that will make for increased efficiency and more business activity in the departments. Certainly something should be done to remedy flagrant inequalities and inadequacies in Government salaries.

It seems to me that a practicable idea would be to separate the clerks into several grades. For each of these grades there would be a stated salary. Thus, a person doing janitorial work in each of the departments or commissions would receive the same stipend. And so each class of clerical work could be conveniently graded. And thus, also, with scientific investigators, the most capable of whom should receive $3,500 per annum. Each grade should be so comprehensive for its class of work that about 15 of them would cover the entire Government service. Each should have possibility of promotion to a figure $500 above that at appointment. If Congress, under the necessity of economy, felt the need of effecting only one grade at a time it could do so without prejudice to the others. The entire plan would be comprehensive and flexible and do justice to the Government service.

Some glaring anomalies of our Government departments from a business point of view are well known. In the Treasury Department, which should have to do solely with our fiscal affairs, we find the Coast Guard, the Public Health Service, the Supervising Architect's Office, and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. In the Department of Agriculture we find the Bureau of Public Roads, while the Reclamation Service is in the Department of the Interior. Outside of executive departments we find 40 boards, commissions, offices, and bureaus which have no supervision except from Congress. In other words, a good deal of the executive functioning of the Government is illogically and wastefully organized. All of the agencies for the internal physical improvement of the country, such as the river and harbor work, the construction and maintenance of public buildings and grounds, reclamation projects, public roads, inland waterways, and water power, should be part of a new department of public works. The Children's Bureau, the Public Health Service, the Bureau of Education, and kindred activities should be brought together in a department of social welfare.

I know of no more outrageous violation of business principles in the conduct of the Government than the extraordinary extravagance and waste practiced in the United States Shipping Board. In that remarkably inefficient organization 7,800 employees remain of those who assisted in throwing away two billions of the people's money. Where it all went an investigation is seeking to discover. At enormous expense the United States built up during and immediately following the war a merchant marine which is given by Lloyd's for June 30, 1920, at 16,049,000 tons, as compared with 4,330,000 tons in 1914. A tragedy lies in the fact that while we have been bungling and bickering about means to promote our commercial fleets Great Britain is regaining her shipping lost during the submarine warfare to such an extent that to-day her deadweight tonnage is estimated at 20,582,000, as compared with 20,523,000 in 1914. This Congress has already laid down broad lines along which the efficiency of our merchant marine may be improved. It has provided that all our ships under Government operation be turned over eventually to private ownership; that none shall be sold to an alien or operated under a foreign flag. It has granted special concessions to those who operate to certain ports and thereby extend our markets, and it has provided that some shall be kept in special condition for transport use in time of war. It should become one of the chief aims of our Republican administration to immediately turn over to private ownership all Government-owned vessels, to make America first in the number of ships and the tonnage of her merchant marine, and one of its first acts should be to rescue or sell the Leviathan, resting and rusting in New York Harbor, and many other ships, a condition not prevalent in England.

Unless we have a selling organization in the ports of the world all this immense investment which we have in the merchant marine will go for naught. We should have, as England has, in every mart of the world, either through the consuls or the ministers or the legations, agencies to promote the carrying in American ships of the cargoes that are sent out from those ports.

Let us consider briefly the opportunity we have presented us to expand our world trade and the advantage that can accrue to the United States in making our governmental departments more efficient for that purpose.

To understand the full import of our trade possibilities we must compare our foreign commerce with that of Great Britain. At the end of the calendar year ending December 30, 1913, our imports amounted to $1,792,596,480, and those of Great Britain to $3,741,047,607. During the same period our exports totaled $2,484,018,292, and those of Great Britain $3,089,353,116. For the year 1919 our exports were $7,920,425,990 and those of Great Britain, $4,688,311,525. Our imports were $3,904,364,932 and Britain's $7,913,689,206. The great preponderance in England's imports over exports in 1919 was due to heavy drafts of raw materials to feed her manufactures after the armistice and her inability to turn them into finished products for exportation in time to be reported before the close of the year. During the first eight months of 1920 our imports were $3,995,178,060, as compared with $6,560,876,138 for Great Britain, and during the same period our exports were $5,478,306,718, as compared with $5,143,549,831 for Great Britain. If we consider only Britain's domestic exports and not those passing through the country, we find that we exceed the export commerce of Great Britain in 1919 by nearly $4,000,000,000. On the other hand, Europe's temporarily accentuated dearth of food has been our gain. The percentage of agricultural products in our exports for the calendar year 1919 was 52.4 and for the first 10 months of 1920 was 42.9. Our manufactured products constituted 44.9 per cent of the total exports of 1919 and 51.3 per cent of those of the first 10 months of 1920. England's exports are almost entirely manufactures. Hence thanksgiving for our grand export total should give way to serious consideration of the problem of stimulating our manufactures by securing new foreign markets for them.

It is true that New York has replaced London as the banking center of the world and that we have supplanted England as the first trading nation of the earth. Our ocean carriers have grown in three short years so that now we are within striking distance of her tonnage. We are the greatest producing nation on the globe. By training 4,800,000 men and sending 2,000,000 troops across the sea to win every battle in which they were engaged and turn the tide, we have made Washington the capital of the world. Our wealth, which before the war exceeded the combined opulence of the British and German Empires, has gone on by leaps and bounds. The Romanoff, Hapsburg, and Hohenzollern dynasties, which overawed weak nations for centuries, have disappeared and ideas of republican government are permeating the world.

Yet this seeming great prosperity and progress have grown out of abnormal world conditions. With the return of the peoples everywhere to normalcy, it becomes imperative that we repeal unwise tariff laws and rescind unwholesome fiscal practices. The people must realize the necessity of work. As we promised in the campaign, we must have more business in the conduct of the Government and less government in the conduct of business. We must stop governmental leaks, hold to rigid economy, and adopt not only a scientific tariff law, but a scientific method of securing foreign trade.

It would be the height of folly not to protect the progress we have thus far made, our commerce, our wealth, and our institutions with a navy adequate to meet in time of emergency any great enemy. National ambitions have not been lessened by the World War. Jealousies prompted by trade rivalry may lead to conflict unless our force is sufficient to compel respect and maintain peace.

When other nations are developing their building programs it would be suicidal for us to permit our Navy to become second rate. We have been informed by Representative BRITTEN, of Illinois, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 1 last, that by 1923 we shall have a sea force greater than the combined fleets of the British Empire. Our Naval Intelligence, he says, has brought forth figures to show that we have 33 battleships and battle cruisers built and building, while Great Britain has 35 ships of the same character. We are said to have a total tonnage of 1,118,650 as compared with 884,000 for England, an advantage of 8,638 tons per ship. In main batteries we are supposed to have 340 guns to 314 for the British. Our guns will average 14½ inches in caliber as compared to 13⅝ inches for theirs. In a broadside we hurl 548,400 pounds as against 452,000 pounds. In the secondary battery our guns will number 494 to Britain's 526. But ours have 5.4 inches caliber while hers have 4.9 inches. It is stated that we throw 40,158 pounds of projectiles as compared to 32,080 pounds. It is presented as fact that in 1923 in one volley from all our guns we shall throw 588,638 pounds of steel as aginst Britain's 484,080 pounds. We are to have 322 destroyers to 350 for Britain, but ours are to be superior in speed and more up to date, so the story goes. In submarines we are to be equal, and in that field American ingenuity is to throw the weight on our side.

Mr. President, in that connection I desire to insert in the RECORD the figures from Naval Intelligence to prove the statements I have made.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If only approximately correct, these figures are astounding. They would tend to prove that we have revolutionized the naval power of the world. But if these ships are not properly manned by efficiently trained men the figures I have related mean nothing. What we need is sea power enough to protect all that we are, all that we have, and all that we do. Yet the figures I have quoted indicate an enormous burden upon the people, not only of our own country but of England as well. During the past fiscal year our naval appropriations amounted to $438,000,000. I am in favor of proposals by this Government to both Britain and Japan that their naval forces and ours be disarmed pro rata.

At this time I wish to say to the Senate that I not only want disarmament of sea power but I want disarmament of air power as well. If we are to enter into an agreement to disarm, every effective agency for war should be disarmed.

Let me point out to the Senate that, while there seems to be a halting at the present time in England's naval program, I understand that her naval program for the coming year greatly exceeds any that we contemplate.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to ask the Senator from New Jersey what will it profit if we proceed to disarm in the sense that we cease to build battleships, and cease to operate arsenals, and cease to manufacture artillery, if we permit Germany to go on with her great productive capacity for chemical armament, which the last war has demonstrated to be the efficient armament of the future?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator from Pennsylvania well knows my views upon that question. Under the camouflage of a peace industry there lies the greatest propelling force for war. When a government may not make a pound of powder or a tank of chemical gas unless she has a thoroughly established dye industry, I think it is the height of folly to allow the destruction in this country of an industry of that character.

We can not lessen our armament unless they do likewise. Our future safety on both Atlantic and Pacific demand this. War with either of them is unthinkable. With England we are one in language and law. With Japan we are participants in a harmonious relationship, which has existed since Perry landed there in 1854. Yet for us to disarm without them would be nothing less than foolhardy. Let negotiations be opened to the end that the three great possible rivals of the future may by disarming set an example to the other nations of the world.

As a people we are faced with a tremendous responsibility. We must husband our resources. We must be content with nothing less than to be the greatest Nation of all time, not in dominion or merely in wealth but in service to mankind. This service, however, does not consist in yielding our sovereignty, but in developing this Nation to the utmost so as to reveal to an even greater extent what liberty may do under republican institutions. We have just concluded in this country two great moral reforms. By one we have suppressed the liquor traffic and by the other we have admitted that the intelligence and character of women are needed at the ballot box no less than those of men. I doubt if the earnest men and women who brought about those reforms will be content with anything short of another triumph. I think they will now turn to the elimination of the greatest blot on our American civilization at the present time—the prevalence of ignorance as indicated by our statistics of illiteracy. From the time when in 1635 the Dutch in New Amsterdam provided for elementary schools at public expense and Harvard College was founded in 1636 we have gone on building until we have thought that we had provided for universal free education. But the 8,000,000 of those who can not read and write the English language, augmented by the million who came to our shores every year until the World War from other countries, gave us reason to pause. That war brought out the astonishing fact that 24.5 per cent of our enlisted men could not read a newspaper or write to those at home. Vast numbers of immigrants from southern Europe and from Russia and Poland have come here with antigovernment ideas and without any knowledge of our language or the spirit of our institutions, and we have had in consequence May Day outrages, I. W. W. depredations, and the killing and maiming of the innocent by bomb throwers who have had no other thought than insult to our form of government.

The new Republican administration must face this problem and meet it with practical and permanent remedy. It can not admit to the country those who will not assimilate our customs and who are hostile not only to our Government but to every form of government. The States have made great progress in education. During the past generation public schools have multiplied until now there is scarcely a place where free education can not be had. There are, however, some States which have not kept pace with the educational movement. I fear that some of them under one form or another are seeking Federal help, which, translated, means help from other States. It should not be necessary to offer any State a bounty to stamp out illiteracy. As for the Federal Government, we must remember that the public school is our melting pot. It is the crucible in which we assimilate foreign-born children and the children of the foreign born.

If we admit aliens faster than they can be assimilated, we jeopardize our own institutions. We must therefore devise ways and means whereby we will not admit immigrants faster than they can be assimilated. While we now exclude anarchists, it may become necessary to be more watchful and to make certain that we are not admitting those who, while they are not anarchists, do not believe in our form of government. We have a right to change our Government, but no altruistic spirit should lead us to admit those who are bent on changing our form at the first opportunity. I recognize that there is agitation in favor of vast Federal contributions to education. The Federal Government can not afford, however, to meet expenses which the States should meet. It is not only bad economically but fundamentally. We have promised the people a return to constitutional government and we should be true to our promise. Encroachment on State rights should stop. There is much we can do in our field; that is, in the field of immigration. We must be more careful than ever that undesirables be excluded, and we must consider the subject not only from the political aspect but also from the economic and intellectual. We must be just to ourselves, to capital, to labor, and to the schools. Too great a task can not and should not be placed on the schools. It is simply suicidal to admit immigrants faster than the schools can assimilate them, and the subject of assimilation should receive most careful study.

Some of the cities in my State can not get enough teachers and sufficient school facilities to take care of the increasing population. When we realize that that condition exists practically all over the country, we can readily appreciate that it is one of the important problems that must be considered, as well as the question of immigration.

I feel quite sure that many are very anxious to have unskilled labor without limit enter the country. Such unskilled labor may cause a reduction in wages and also a reduction in the cost of living, but if we can not assimilate them, and if many of them, as I suspect, have no regard for any government, they will ultimately, instead of proving an asset, prove a menace.

The subject must be studied carefully and should not be put lightly aside. Self-preservation is the first law of nature, and we should look to the self-preservation of our children, as well as to that of the present generation. We do not want the country to totter 20 years from now, even though at the present moment the cause of such tottering might appear to be beneficial to capital and incidentally reduce the cost of living of all. Better to let the cost of living stay a little higher than to introduce poison.

The farmers of the country, having seen their land values and the market figures of their wheat and other produce go to unprecedented figures, are dissatisfied with falling prices and want something done to put a stop to the decline. I have hearty sympathy with the cultivator of the soil who wrested his crop out of toil and worry and at high costs and then sees himself facing loss. But the farmer is suffering a decline in price as likewise are the manufacturer and other producers of raw and finished material. He must not ask Congress to keep up his prices and demand that the price of the articles he has had to buy be brought down. Nor should he in his discouragement at the falling prices for foodstuffs seek to do away with boards of trade and cotton exchanges because of a belief that they are entirely the cause of his distress. Yet these exchanges should, through regulation, be confined to the useful functions of distribution and exchange and not as agencies to exploit the product of the farmers' toil by gambling in futures and cornering the market for foodstuffs. The farmer must be protected against these uneconomic practices.

Everything must be done to stimulate the farming industry and encourage our farmers to continue production. Much has been done in this direction. They have the parcels post, rural free delivery, farm loan banks, better roads, and telephones. Life on the farm is much more livable than formerly. Our American farmers have enjoyed during the period since the World War in 1914 a greater prosperity than ever before. But they have had a serious setback. By wise governmental policies this temporary setback can be overcome. We must at all hazards maintain healthy prosperity, but not by keeping up fictitious prices created during a time of greatest demand and during a saturnalia of inflation. We should protect farmers and their standard of living by a tariff which will keep out foreign products grown under cheaper conditions, and this should be done at once. And then we should work out a national policy of benefit to the farmers generally, north and south. When the McKinley administration came into power in 1897, Secretary of Agriculture Wilson conceived the idea of bringing from abroad everything grown there and cultivating it here so that we might in any emergency be self-sustaining. As the result of that policy we have our navel oranges; our beet-sugar industry, producing a billion pounds annually; our rice industry, producing enormous quantities annually in Louisiana and Texas; and our date industry in the Southwest.

What the farmers now need is to be guided further in every improvement possible in the raising of their crops, to be assisted in marketing, to be protected from foreign competition in our own market, and to make it easier for them to finance themselves. We already have the farm loan bank. This should be supplemented by the home loan bank and by long and short term credits through extension of the warehouse act, so that they may be enabled to realize sooner on their crop by being able to borrow further after warehousing their product, their paper being consolidated through a general system provided but not supported by the Government. Dairy and other farming of a certain kind, such as found in New Jersey, should be standardized, such as the citrus-fruit industry in California. Cooperative marketing like that of the dairy farmers of New York State should be encouraged. This enables them to do away with the middle man to an extent which redounds to their benefit. Waste in production and marketing should be eliminated. Last year $3,000,000 was lost by the apple shippers of the Northwest in transit on the railroads. Preventable losses in cotton marketing are estimated at $50,000,000 a year and in sweet-potato growing at $25,000,000 a year. National standards for farm products, based upon national standards of weights and measures, supplemented by Government inspection, should be adopted. The facilities for supplying the farmers everywhere with reliable market information should be extended to the utmost. What we need now more than anything else in the relation between the Department of Agriculture and the farmer is the purpose of utilizing all energy to the end of production of the highest quality as well as the utmost quantity. Our farmers must be enabled to produce at even less cost and to sell in the highest market obtainable. They should become as efficient in soil chemistry as the Germans were before the conflict.

We have another even greater problem to solve, which should not be beyond American ingenuity or the constructive genius of the Republican Party. The Department of Labor should be reorganized and socialism eliminated. The powers of the adjustment service should be extended. Encouragement should be given to the Woman's Bureau, which has for its purpose the betterment of working conditions among women in industry to the end, among other advantages, that women and men may have equal pay for equal work. It is useless to deny that we are in the midst of an at least temporarily serious industrial depression, and it will be necessary to encourage and possibly extend the United States Employment Service.

Two million wage earners are out of employment. To help offset this condition, we must enact a tariff law which will cover the difference between the cost of production here and abroad, which will not only stimulate our manufacturers but protect our labor and its standards, not forgetting to enact laws which will prevent the destruction of those industries which have been wrested from Germany and established during the war and which were nonexistent prior to the war, among which are the dye industry, the laboratory glass and surgical instrument industries. The dye industry is vitally essential from an economic standpoint, but absolutely necessary from the standpoint of national preparedness. The man or men who place obstacles in the way of supporting it and encourage domination by Germany in this field have learned no lesson of the great sacrifices we have made by being scientifically unprepared. I know of nothing more shortsighted than the present tendency on the part of many manufacturers to utilize the dull period in business to make war on the labor unions under the guise of a movement for the "open shop," wherein it means a shop closed to union organization. Labor unions have done much to bring about better hours and wages and better working conditions. Wage earners have the same right to organize for their own good as manufacturers and business men generally have to organize for their own benefit. The great body of our workmen deprecate such criminal measures as have been practiced by the I. W. W. and the Western Federation of Miners and such crooked methods as adopted by the building-trade leaders in New York City. Such menaces must be prevented, and labor unions must help to wash their hands of them. But the Republican Party when entering upon the full power of conducting the Government should remind our manufacturers that they must not judge our entire American labor movement by the hot-heads and radicals, and should likewise remind our wage earners that American business is not to be judged by the reactionaries who would entirely suppress the right of labor to organize. There is, however, a limit to which even labor organization should be allowed to go. If through the power of combination any set of men should prevent the people from having fuel or transportation; if, in order to enforce demands which an impartial tribunal created by the Government believes unfair, they imperil the safety and existence of the people at large and make starvation and freezing imminent, then the full power of the Government should be exercised to prevent them, or the Government is a failure.

There is a middle ground or method by which we may harness the vast energies of American labor and the productive might of American capital to the task of making America supreme among all the nations of the world in productive capacity. When we find that method we shall be fully prepared to lead the greatest commercial revival in history, soon to follow upon the present period of liquidation, for the energies of the earth have been quickened by war and those energies will be turned to commerce, as they always have after the period of readjustment following every war we have had. The principle of collective bargaining should be acknowledged in interstate commerce, but unions should live up to their agreements when made. The fallacy that labor creates value and that labor is therefore entitled to the full return on the value it creates, which is the basis of most of our socialistic propaganda, should be met with education as to the real part which both labor and capital play in industry and as to the worth of initiative in our institutions. The Department of Labor should not be conducted as an adjunct of the American Federation of Labor nor as a vehicle for the views of those who favor nonunion labor entirely. It should be administered for the benefit of all our wage earners everywhere, and the Republican Party should make it its policy to so utilize it that in the four years to come it will actually better working conditions and at the same time assist in the upbuilding of the prosperity and efficiency of American industry.

While our total indebtedness is $24,330,889,731, our Liberty and Victory bond war debt on June 30 last amounted to $19,581,201,450. Less the $9,445,006,855 we loaned to our foreign allies, and nevertheless owe the American people, because we borrowed it from them, we owe $10,136,194,595. By act of Congress provision was made for payment into a sinking fund of an amount equal to the sum of 2½ per cent of the total Liberty and Victory loans, less an amount equal to the par of the obligation of foreign Governments held by the United States on July 1. By this $235,000,000 will be paid each year and in 25 years the debt will be wiped out. This refunding provision should be so extended as to include the entire war debt.

I can not understand the methods of the Treasury Department which have permitted approximately $1,000,000,000, due under the corporation assessment of 1917, to go uncollected and even unadjudicated to the present moment. Many of the corporations from whom this money is due will probably not be disposed to question the claim of the Government against them provided it is proven most of the arrears are the result of mistakes in making the returns. Solely through laxity and delay they have not been brought into the Treasury. Steps should be taken to enforce payment so that the statute of limitations will not relieve corporations which owe the money of paying it at all. Certainly not the least of the burdens of the war upon the American people has been incompetency.

While 500 employees of the Government in Washington have been engaged in this particular task of collection, the plain truth is that our Federal methods have not kept pace with those of private enterprise, and the salaries paid by the Government for the same sort of technical services have fallen far behind those our great corporations are in the habit of paying. Yet, I am ready to admit that the Treasury Department can not hope to compete in this respect. We can meet the problem only by a system of employing and training the best in the world of accounting, drawing them to our offices here for a few years for the sake of the certificate of experience in and approval of the Government, which would enable them to gain even larger compensation in private activity than they otherwise would receive. This is true of technical service not only in the Treasury but in all of our executive departments.

We should, it seems to me, remedy our entire present fiscal arrangements by taking the tax from small incomes, removing the surplus-profits tax and surtaxes, and at the same time by gaining more revenue by a protective tariff and by a tax on manufacturers' sales. For rendering less complicated our entire fiscal affairs the enactment of the budget system is vital.

Our Post Office Department should be overhauled and made more efficient by taking the parcel-post business from the main offices in the large cities and conducting it through warehouses or other space rented for the purpose. This is really an express business and is delaying the delivery of the regular letter mail in these offices.

For the protection of the banks and other senders of valuable mail the carrying of mail by aerial route should be stopped unless special stamps are provided and it is so designated by the sender. Congress stipulated that this be done, but the Postmaster General so construed the statute as to do the opposite of what was intended.

The Department of Commerce should become an aggressive, reliable, and efficient instrumentality for the development of trade. That is what it was intended to be, but instead it has become, so far as our foreign commerce is concerned, an adjunct of our Consular Service. It should issue exhaustive monographs on the foreign sources of markets for our goods. There should be quick general reports on this subject. It should be made the chief factor in the American trade boom of the next 10 years, which is bound to follow the present period of liquidation caused by the lack of a protective tariff, overproduction, inflation, overexpansion of credits, and overspeculation. The executive force of the department is now permeated with the Democratic theory of tariff for revenue only. Instead, it should help to give confidence to our business world, and while we protect our producers the Department of Justice should impartially and rigorously see to it that those engaged in interstate commerce who profiteer upon the people by means of exorbitant and unreasonable prices should be apprehended and dealt with not only by adequate fine but imprisonment.

Whatever tends to the upbuilding of this America in which we live should be encouraged. My motto is "America first," and with that thought in mind I have never been able to understand why American ships should not have preference in the Panama Canal. I am not unmindful of the fact that there are other nations and that the United States is but a part of a world. We can play our part in it without entangling ourselves in the affairs of others. We can be honorable and charitable without incurring obligations which may prevent us from doing what we think is just when we are called upon for performance. We can now point out, even though we are not a member of the League of Nations, and I trust never will be a member of a league of nations political in character, that there can not be any stability in Europe until Germany is told what she owes. It is most unfortunate that any official of the United States in any way gave approval to a document which imposes economic slavery. It needs no genius to see that a nation which is not told what she owes but which is given to understand that the exactions from her will be dependent upon her ability to pay will quickly comprehend that the more she works the more she will pay, and the less she works the less she will pay. Why should any people work hard if the fruits of their labor will be taken from them, and if they can not see an end to their obligations?

I hold no brief for Germany or for France, but as a business man I can readily see that it is just as essential for a nation as it is for an individual to know what are his assets and liabilities. If France is to put her house in order, it is just as essential for her to know what are her assets as it is for Germany to know what are her liabilities. How can France ever return to a stable basis so long as she lives on hopes rather than on facts? How can Germany be expected to return to work until she is told how much of the product of her work will be taken from her? So long as there hangs over her the fear that all of the product will be taken from her, so long will the people argue, "What is the use of work?" Give Germany a goal to work for, and if it is within reason she probably will work for it. Let France know what she can count upon, and she can quickly make a budget which will be in accord with her needs and in harmony with sound business. I hope, therefore, that in the very near future some way will be found of pointing out in a friendly way and as a sound business proposition to both France and Germany the necessity that the former should know as soon as possible what she will receive from Germany and that Germany will know as soon as possible what she must pay.

As for the League of Nations, if I understand the recent election, it was rejected by the people of the United States, and if we are true to the people we can not enter it.

We read much in the newspapers about an association of nations, and, indeed, one may be formed, but I am very skeptical that any association of nations can be created which we can enter without losing our independence, our influence, and our sovereignty. I am extremely doubtful whether we can enter a partnership with other nations whose principles of government are antithetical to our own. To do so and preserve our own form of government will challenge the wisdom of the greatest statesmen of the age. Will an association of nations induce Europe to disarm if we do? It is useless to enter into a game of diplomacy wherein the cards are stacked against us. Will such an association of nations prevent the members from taking commercial and financial advantage of us when they have a majority of votes? Will an association of nations prevent the members from transferring their debts to the taxpayers of this country? Will an association of nations, controlled by the great powers, lift the yoke of slavery from subject peoples, or will we unwittingly become slaveholders again?

I must be convinced that such an association of nations can be shaped without impairing our form of government. I have given much thought to the subject and feel that we can not join such an association, for the following reasons:

We hold that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. I do not desire to see the United States enter into any league with foreign powers which would even tend to withhold from them the eventual accomplishment of that right. We also consider it self-evident that church and state should be separated, each performing its function for the good of all when apart and both suffering when either seeks to control the other. We have enjoyed the blessings of this separation so long that we hardly give it a second thought. Yet this principle does not prevail in the States which are members of the league now assembled at Geneva. We stated in the Declaration of Independence, we provided in our Constitution, we fought through four long years, because we believed that all men are created equal in opportunity and under the law. Why should we minimize that principle by allegiance to a league which does not guarantee it? We hold that a republican form of government, based upon equality of representation and universal suffrage for all men and women, without restriction as to wealth, creed, or color, based upon a system of checks and balances between the legislative, judicial, and executive branches so that no man or set of men may obtain and keep arbitrary power, is the best form of government in the world.

The present League of Nations does not even mention these principles. It sets forth in no glorious preamble to an immortal document that these God-given principles are for all men for all time. Yet our fathers died for these principles. They left the Old World and founded this Nation in the new in order that those principles might be established and preserved. They held them dearer than peace, dearer than life without them, and so they fought and died for them. We have been told that the league will assure permanent peace, as though that in itself were to be sought for above every other good. I do not believe this, and I am of the opinion that it will do the opposite. But even if it were true, I should be as bitterly opposed to it, unless it assured a peace which would perpetuate everywhere the ideals upon which America was founded.

It may be that some day we shall have a federation of the world, wherein every people shall express itself in a republic after every king and empire has passed away. That may be centuries hence.

In the meantime America should stand alone, if need be, and stand eternally for the principles upon which our Government is founded, stand as a beacon to the peoples of the earth to show what those who follow those principles may become. Liberty can not, must not, be compromised. A majority of 7,000,000 in this land has declared that it must not.

Mr. President, the new Republican administration of President HARDING, supported by a majority of 22 in the Senate and 170 in the House, and upheld by such an enormous popular majority, has before it a task unequaled in our generation and perhaps in the history of the Government. So well-nigh unanimous has been the voice of the electorate that it may be said without fear of serious contradiction that the Republican Party has received a mandate not only to reconstruct the executive departments and our entire governmental administration upon a more businesslike and efficient basis, but to so revise the laws as to make them harmonize with the foreign and domestic needs of a country which has grown tired of arbitrary impediments to commerce and to the free expression of its intelligence, and, above all, a mandate to maintain our position as the first Nation of the world.

SETTLEMENT OF WAR LOANS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on December 10 I introduced a joint resolution with reference to our debts from foreign countries. The joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 221) instructing the Secretary of the Treasury as to settlement of war loans.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed and instructed at the earliest practicable moment to secure from the several foreign governments, namely, Belgium, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Liberia, Rumania, and Serbia, to which Governments moneys were loaned by the United States under and by virtue of the several war emergency acts of the Congress passed in the years 1917 and 1918, long-time interest-bearing bonds of such Governments for the moneys loaned under the said acts, the interest on such bonds to be paid semiannually at a rate not less than 5 per cent; that in making settlements with the several foreign Governments the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to take interest-bearing bonds for past-due interest on said loans and the future interest up to November 15, 1921, such bonds to be of like tenor and effect as the bonds for the principal loaned to said Governments, and the interest thereon to be paid semiannually in like manner; that said bonds thus taken on account of past-due interest and interest up to November 15, 1921, shall be set aside and kept separate and apart, and may be used as a fund with which to pay any sums that Congress may hereafter determine, should it at any time so determine, shall be paid to soldiers, sailors, and marines in the late War with Germany; that no steps be taken at the present time in reference to any sums loaned to Russia; and that on and after November 21, 1921, interest on all of said indebtednesses shall be collected, as and when the same falls due, it being the sense of the Congress that by said date, four or more years having thus passed since said loans were made, enough time will have elapsed for said Governments to have readjusted their financial obligations, and that in equity and good conscience they should begin paying regularly interest on said loans advanced to them by the United States for the protection and defense and sustenance of their Governments and their peoples.

These debts as shown by the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury are as follows:

Countries:	Credits established, net.
Belgium	$349,214,467.89
Cuba	10,000,000.00
Czechoslovakia	67,329,041.10
France	3,147,974,777.24
Great Britain	4,277,000,000.00
Greece	48,236,629.05
Italy	1,666,260,179.72
Liberia	5,000,000.00
Roumania	25,000,000.00
Russia	187,729,750.00
Serbia	26,780,465.56

Of the foregoing advances there have been repaid up to November 15, 1920, by—

British Government	$80,181,641.56
French Government	31,449,357.55
Roumanian Government	1,794,180.48
Serbian Government	605,326.34
Cuban Government	500,000.00
Belgian Government	10,000.00

Leaving a balance due the United States of $9,595,984,804.69.

The Secretary in his report, on pages 53 and following, describes in some detail the status of these loans. Among other things, he says:

For these advances the Treasury holds obligations in the form of certificates of indebtedness to the United States, payable as to principal and interest, without deduction for taxes of the debtor Government, in gold coin of the United States of the present standard of weight and fineness at the Subtreasury of the United States in New York or at the Treasury of the United States in Washington. Certain of them, at the option of the holder, are payable in the money of the debtor country, some at a fixed rate, and others at the buying rate for cable transfers of the currency of the debtor country in the New York market at noon on the day of demand as determined by the Federal reserve bank of New York. The certificates of indebtedness are signed in the name of the respective debtor Governments by representatives of such Governments designated to the Treasury by the Department of State as being authorized to sign them in the name and on behalf of the respective Governments.

The earlier certificates were payable at fixed dates of maturity, all of which are now past, so that they are now held as demand obligations. They bore interest at various rates of interest from 3 per cent per annum upward. Those subsequently taken are payable on demand and bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. By arrangement with the respective Governments substantially all the obligations have since May 15, 1918, borne interest at the rate of 5 per cent. The certificates of indebtedness are receivable in payment for bonds of the debtor Government or else are convertible into bonds in conformity with the provisions of the various Liberty bond acts in effect at the respective dates of the certificates of indebtedness.

As to interest collections the report further says:

To and including November, 1918, the dates for the collection of interest from foreign Governments were May 15 and November 15. In the spring of 1919 the respective Governments were informed that it would be convenient for the Treasury to receive semiannual payments of interest on April 15 and on October 15 on approximately two-thirds of their respective obligations, and on May 15 and November 15 on the remainder. The full amount of interest due up to April 15, 1919, or May 15, 1919, was, except in the case of Russia, paid in cash on all these loans. To the extent that such interest was not paid from other resources of the foreign Governments concerned it was paid from the proceeds of loans made by the United States Government. All interest on the debts of Cuba and Greece was paid as it became due.

The following is an itemized statement showing the amount of interest heretofore paid by each of the foreign Governments on advances made to it by the United States Treasury:

Czechoslovakia Republic	354,178.09
Great Britain	233,357,185.50
Greece	409,153.34
Italy	57,598,852.62
Liberia	161.10
Russia	4,595,564.15

The amount paid on Russian obligations represents the interest up to November 15, 1917, in full, together with a partial payment of $1,865,925.08 on account of the interest which became due May 15, 1918, and partial payments of $1,399,877.43 on account of the interest which became due November 15, 1918. That paid by the Governments of Greece and Cuba includes interest paid up to October 15, 1920, and November 15, 1920, respectiveiy. The amount paid by the French Government includes interest amounting to $1,810,441.50 to July 31, 1919, on an obligation dated January 28, 1919, and also interest accrued after April 15, 1919, on $19,302,357.55 principal subsequently repaid by the French Government in connection with the adjustment of accounts. The sum paid by the British Government includes $2,244,778.59 interest accrued after May 15, 1919, on $80,181,641.56 principal subsequently repaid by the British Government in connection with the adjustment of accounts, and that paid by Roumania includes a partial payment of $154,409.63 on account of interest accrued to October 15, 1919.

The Secretary of the Treasury holds a special fund of $1,808,506, which is equal to the unpaid balance of the interest which became due on Russian obligations on May 15, 1918. It is believed that ultimately this can be applied in discharge of this balance. A similar fund of $335,095.07 is held, which it is believed will be applicable upon the unpaid balance of the interest which became due November 15, 1918, on the Russian account. The interest accrued and remaining unpaid on Russian obligations, after deducting these special funds, for the half year ending November 15, 1918, is $2,994,025.10, and for the half years ending April 15, 1919, and May 15, 1919, is $4,101,107.50.

The interest due and unpaid is as follows:

The interest accrued and remaining unpaid on obligations of foreign Governments purchased by the Treasury under the Liberty bond acts for the half years ending, respectively, October 15, 1919, and November 15, 1919, April 15, 1920, and May 15, 1920, and October 15, 1920, and November 15, 1920, is as follows:

Countries.	Oct. 15 and Nov. 15, 1919.	Apr. 15 and May 15, 1920.	Oct. 15 and Nov. 15, 1920.	Total.

Great Britain	104,741,907.05	104,920,458.96	104,920,458.96	314,582,824.97
Italy	39,050,152.83	40,442,845.74	40,765,715.11	120,258,713.68
Liberia	328.69	640.16	650.00	1,618.85
Rumania	382,818.09	625,000.00	597,302.95	1,605,121.04
Russia	4,713,366.30	4,685,999.25	4,693,243.75	14,092,609.30
Serbia	669,258.13	669,511.64	659,230.96	1,998,000.73
	224,722,586.00	233,385,044.19	235,291,946.93	693,399,577.12
Add balance (in excess of special funds above mentioned) of interest accrued and remaining unpaid on Russian obligations for half year ending Nov. 15, 1918, and half years ending Apr. 15, 1919, and May 15, 1919				7,095,132.60

The figures that the Secretary of the Treasury gives us in his report are clear enough. We learn how much each Government owes, how much has been repaid, and how much interest is due, but the remainder of the report is very confusing. It is not a clear report. An examination of the several acts of Congress under which these loans were made makes it clear that it was the intent of Congress that interest-bearing bonds, running not longer than the bonds of the United States, should be taken as evidence of the several loans in return for same, but the Secretary reports on page 56 that the Secretary of the Treasury took certificates convertible into bonds "if requested by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States."

My own interpretation of the several acts of Congress under which these loans were authorized is that it was the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, and is his duty now, to convert these certificates into long-time bonds. It is true that the Secretary says that he is opposed to canceling the debts, but his statement on this subject is somewhat vague and indefinite, and at the end of it he tells what the "reasonable and proper course" would be, but gives no reason why he has not carried out this "reasonable and proper course." I quote from his conclusion on this subject:

The indebtedness incurred by the United States to make the foreign loans is not cared for by the sinking fund. Congress contemplated that foreign repayments would provide for that part of our debt. Of late there has been no little discussion as to how this foreign debt should be treated. Some advance the proposal that it should be canceled. This is a favorite plan of some Europeans and some Americans. The suggestion is based first on one ground and then on another. At one time it is based on sentiment or on considerations of generosity. By some it is based on the contention that it will promote peace. It apparently is assumed that antagonisms will be set up if the nations of Europe are asked to repay the loans which they sought and so gladly received. At another time it is based on consideration for present producing interests. Voices are heard representing that it will ruin the trade of America if Europe is to send us her commodities for what she owes us. Apparently these advocates contend that international trade will be profitable provided only we give to the world what we produce, declining to receive any commodities in return. I imagine neither of these suggestions will be received with favor by the American taxpayers. They will realize that if the debts are canceled they must pay taxes to meet the interest and to redeem the principal of $10,000,000,000. Another suggestion is that the demand notes now held by the Government shall be funded into bonds bearing a higher rate of interest which the debtor nations will consent to exchange for the outstanding bonds, and that a direct relation be set up between those who consent to receive such bonds in this country and the foreign debtors, although it is proposed that this Government guarantee the bonds. No evidence is furnished that debtor nations would be willing to assent to the creation of a bonded debt with a higher rate of interest with obligation for the immediate payment of interest; and there is nothing in existing law which warrants such a transaction. They should not be charged interest at a rate exceeding the cost to our Government of the money borrowed from our people to lend to them. The advances made by the United States to the Allies began only at the time of our entry into the war. For substantially a year we had no considerable military forces in Europe and we were lending the money needed to supply the part purchased from our people of the materials necessary for the armies of the Allies, who were holding the Germans in the meantime. If in April, 1917, we had had a vast Army in Europe there would have been no considerable loans to the Allies for purchases of war material in this country, since our own armies would have needed all the munitions this country could have produced. In the circumstances we must deal with the debts of the allied governments in a spirit of fairness. The suggestion that we should throw them upon the market appears to me to be as fatuous and impracticable as either of the other suggestions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the report of the Secretary of the Treasury indicate that no bonds from these debtor nations have been turned over by them to our Government?

Mr. McKELLAR. They have given us certificates of indebtedness, now all past due, according to the report.

Mr. KING. Why has he not converted those certificates into bonds, as the law under which the loans were made seems to contemplate?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the purpose of my remarks, and if the Senator will just wait a moment I think he will see fully my view about it.

PRESENT CONDITION OF DEBTS UNBUSINESSLIKE.

Mr. President, it is wholly unbusinesslike for these debts to remain in their present nebulous state. We should have a definite understanding with our friends to whom we loaned this money. We should require the payment of the current interest as and when it falls due at the earliest date possible. Apparently interest was paid until 1919 and then discontinued. I say apparently, because the report of the Secretary is indefinite on this subject. It does not say whether payments were discontinued at the request of our Government or at the requests of the debtor Governments, or whether payments were just discontinued without discussion at all. It does not say that our Government tried to collect and could not. The American people should know why these interest payments were made up until 1919, after the war was over, and then suddenly discontinued.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I can tell the Senator how those payments have been made. There has been no payment made by any foreign country other than through the settlement of balances of trade between the two countries. No foreign country has sent to us gold to pay us on their obligations, but the payments, the Senator will find in the Secretary's report, are payments of debts that were due America in the settlement of the balances of trade between the two countries. That is why some countries have not paid a thing, and others have.

Mr. McKELLAR. I assume that is correct, although the report of the Secretary does not say so, and I think it should say so; and I think the Secretary should furnish us with definite information about the matter.

Mr. KING. I think also, supplementing what my colleague has said, some interest was paid out of loans which we made them. They never paid any interest directly, but they utilized some of the loans which were made to credit their interest account.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be possible, but it is not disclosed by the report of the Secretary.

There is now due on the principal more than nine and a half billions of dollars. There is likewise more than seven hundred million dollars of past due interest, according to this report of the Secretary. Why the payments of interest were discontinued is a most important matter.

THESE DEBTS SHOULD NOT BE CANCELED.

It has been suggested by some that these debts should be canceled by our Government. I have no sympathy with such a view. I do not believe that any of these foreign Governments would suggest such a proposition. By reason of these loans and our own active participation in the war Great Britain has not only preserved herself and retained her vast commerce, her vast navy, her merchant marine, but has also added untold territory and wealth to her domains. The same is relatively true of France and Italy. In addition, all these nations have the obligations of Germany and Austria for tremendous sums in reparation. In a smaller way this applies to all the other nations involved, except prehaps Cuba and Liberia. Czechoslovakia sprang up after the war, Minerva-like, as a full-grown nation, and all because of America's participation in the war and America's financing of her Government after the war. Belgium and Rumania were restored, largely increased in territory and indemnified. I take it that not one of these Governments would for a moment refuse to give long-term bonds for their principal and would gladly pay the interest to the Nation that furnished so large a part of the money to defend and protect them if the United States definitely told them to do so.

But it is said that we ought to cancel this debt because of what France did for us in the Revolutionary War. I acknowledge that debt to the limit, but our Government has more than paid it back. She has paid it back a thousandfold, because by the use of her money and her men she has preserved and enlarged the French Republic and saved its Government from destruction by Germany. I am reliably informed that while our Army was in France fighting for the preservation of her Government and her people we were charged for everything taken, injured, or damaged; that large rentals were charged for all our depots and warehouses; that rentals were charged for all of our camps; that if fruit trees or other trees were destroyed or injured in battle we were charged for the damages. It has been charged that we actually paid rent for the very trenches which were used by our boys in defending France, and that she charged our soldiers one price for all goods sold them and her soldiers and her people a less price; but I am constrained to believe this is not true. It surely can not be true. Under these circumstances surely there is not even a sentimental reason why we should cancel this debt of honor that France owes us. I say these things not in condemnation of France, but in justice to America. In other words, France, having treated our aid in the war as purely a business matter, it would be unbecoming in us, as I look at it, to treat it in any other way. Indeed, we are precluded from treating it in any other way if we maintain our self-respect. In order to carry on the war we taxed our people to the limit. On the other hand, France taxed her people very lightly, comparatively speaking. For these reasons it seems to me that nothing but a maudlin sentimentality would suggest the cancellation of these debts. The French people are not taxed as heavily as the American people are to-day. Our own people are standing a burden of taxation greater than taxation in France because of this war. She, too, is spending tremendous sums on her army and navy; she has received back Alsace and Lorraine. She has received tremendous reparation obligations from Germany, and there is no reason why she should not also pay these debts that she owes us.

Again, it is said that we ought to cancel this debt due us by Great Britain because of the great expense that the war has been to Great Britain; that she bore the financial burden of the war up until the time we went into it; that we are kinspeople, and that we ought to contribute the sum that England owes us, being the sum of four and a quarter billion dollars, for the help of our kinsmen. However, Great Britain did not treat us exactly this way. Naturally, she did everything possible to get us into the war. She was intensely desirous of having our aid. At the same time, after we declared war she charged us a very large price and wanted to charge us a much larger price for every soldier that she transported across the ocean in her defense. She charged us high rates for every ton of freight carried to maintain our armies. In other words, she treated us in a business way, and her ships made enormous profits out of our participation in the war. When our troops landed in England we likewise had to pay for camps and fields. While the war was on she was greatly interested in our building up a merchant marine so that we could supply our armies and hers with American goods, but as soon as the war was over she went into a trade war with us and a rate war, and that trade and rate war has been going on ever since, and it is perfectly plain that she intends, if possible, to compel our merchant marine, as a world carrying merchant marine, to leave the seas. I am reliably informed that to-day the most active kind of rate war is going on between our merchant marine and England's, and all the time that this is going on England is being aided, in part, by the $200,000,000 in annual interest that she is withholding upon these debts. At the same time she is adding tremendously to her merchant marine and to her navy.

Another reason why the loan of Great Britain especially should be collected and the interest promptly paid is the attitude of Great Britain on the subject of oil. It must be remembered that it was American oil that gave the English Navy such a tremendous advantage in the war with Germany. England could not have maintained herself without this oil supply. The United States has provided no restrictions upon her acquiring oil in the United States. Her nationals are permitted to buy such oil fields as they desire on equal terms with Americans. Now, what is England's attitude toward us? It is directly the contrary. She debars foreigners from owning or operating oil-producing properties in the British Isles, colonies, and protectorates. She denies foreigners' participation, ownership, and control of petroleum companies. She denies to British oil companies the right of selling their properties to foreign owned or controlled companies. She prohibits the transfers of British oil companies' stock to other than British subjects or nationals. She controls the tremendous oil fields of Persia and will not permit Americans to purchase oil lands there. Since the armistice she has denied to American vessels the right to obtain oil from British stations.

By the recent San Remo agreement she and France divided the oil interests of Mesopotamia, she to get 75 per cent and France to get 25 per cent. America is excluded. When we remember that naval vessels propelled by the use of oil are 3 or 4 knots per hour faster than the coal-propelled vessels, and when we remember that naval vessels and merchant marine can take supplies of oil anywhere on the seas, it is easy to see what this policy of England means. And yet we are aiding Great Britain in all of these designs by releasing her, temporarily at least, from the payment of $200,000,000 per year interest that she owes us.

Under these circumstances, as it seems to me, it would be idiocy on our part to cancel these very just debts. I say these things not in criticism of Great Britain but in justice to America. Great Britain is treating the matter as a business matter. She is treating her relations with America as business relations. She is doing everything possible to obtain and control the world's trade. She does not want America as a rival on the seas. On the other hand, every thoughtful American must know that our merchant marine must be built up if we are to retain our place as a world power and if we are to distribute our products in the markets of the world. It is a matter of business, not a matter of sentiment, and these enormous loans by us to Great Britain should not be dealt with in the manner in which apparently our Government is dealing with them.

INTEREST ON THESE LOANS.

The next question is, Should the interest be paid? The Secretary of the Treasury in his report says:

> The reasonable and proper course is to proceed under the terms of existing law which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to fund the demand notes into obligations with a distant maturity at a rate of interest at least equivalent to that borne by our own bonds, coupled with authority for the time being to defer interest payments.

The italics are mine.

The Secretary of the Treasury needs no new authority to fund this indebtedness into long-time bonds. He was directed to do that in the four acts of Congress which authorized these loans. He should not have the authority to defer interest payments. The interest payments should be made as and when due. In order that no injustice may be done, the resolution that I have introduced provides that the past due interest and future interest up until November 15, 1921, be funded into bonds and that thereafter interest shall be paid in advance when due. If a settlement fixing an earlier date than November 15, 1921, can be had, it should be done by all means. This is giving the several Governments ample time in which to make their arrangements to pay this interest. This interest will amount, annually, to not less than $500,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury should not be given authority to defer these payments. The law requires him to collect them. Apparently he has made no effort to collect interest on these obligations. If he has made such efforts, he does not say so in his report. It is not within his powers to disregard the law and make an appeal to Congress to change it to accord to his views or to give him power to suspend it at will. I do not understand why these long-term bonds have not been secured before. I surely do not understand why the Secretary of the Treasury has failed to collect interest on the loans. He does not state by what arrangements it was suspended, if any, or whether it was just a clear case of default. That information should be given to Congress.

Mr. President, our tax burdens are heavy. We need this $500,000,000 per year. If it were collected, we could raise the exemptions on incomes from $1,000 on single persons and $2,000 on married persons to $3,000 on single persons and $4,000 on married persons, and have a surplus of $300,000,000, or we could reduce the excess-profits tax nearly one-half, or we could remove all of the petty annoying sales taxes and other small taxes that are trying upon the people and still have a surplus.

Again, it is claimed that these nations are not able to pay the interest. I call attention to the fact that after the war was over the United States sold surplus war supplies to Belgium, in round numbers, $27,000,000; to Czechoslovakia, $20,000,000; Esthonia, $12,000,000; France, $400,000,000; Latvia, $2,500,000; Lithuania, $4,000,000; Poland, $57,000,000; Rumania, $12,000,000; Russia, $406,000; Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, $25,000,000; in all, $563,000,000. Interest has been very generally paid on these sums, according to the Secretary's report. But on the war loans it has been suspended, indicating apparently that there is some belief on their part that it will not be collected.

That England is able to pay the interest on her obligations there can be no doubt. It has not been long since she advanced $50,000,000 to Argentina, of course, with a view of better commercial and trade relations with Argentina; and I have been informed that she has advanced Germany large sums with a like view. She is spending an enormous sum in building and maintaining her merchant marine and building and maintaining her navy, and surely under such circumstances there can be no question about her ability and willingness to pay. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1920, she spent on her navy $765,586,080 and on her army the stupendous sum of $1,968,300,000, and yet she ignores her debt of $200,000,000 per year to us.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] was talking a while ago about disarming. I noticed in the papers yesterday that Lloyd-George was talking about disarmament. These figures do not sound much like disarmament. Seven hundred and sixty-five million dollars for a navy. That is half as much again as America spent on her Navy during the present year. Talk about our outstripping England in naval building by 1923! How can it be thought of for a moment in view of these figures? Seven hundred and sixty-five million dollars for her navy last year and about $2,000,000,000 for her army. It is a subterfuge when they talk about disarmament, when the appropriations reach the enormous sums that are here shown.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McKELLAR. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator.

It is a most surprising thing that a great nation like England has defaulted on her interest for loans that have been made to protect her empire. It is almost unbelievable that she had let her interest go by default. The same is relatively true of France. In any event, an annual income from this source of $500,000,000 would lessen the tax burdens of the American people to a very great extent.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I think it is due to Great Britain to state that she has signified her desire to reduce her armament and also to reduce her army. But the Senator must keep in mind the fact that since the armistice Great Britain and France both have been compelled to maintain very large armies. I am not justifying Great Britain's conduct by any means; but the Senator will remember that she has been compelled upon a number of fronts to maintain a very large military force. France and England to-day are maintaining military forces in Germany, in Silesia, and in other parts where, under the Versailles treaty, the obligation would rest upon them or upon the Allies so to do.

I think the Senator's figures with respect to the amount expended by Great Britain for her navy for one year are rather excessive.

Mr. McKELLAR. I got them from the RECORD. I had them verified by the librarian. The figures of $765,000,000 for a navy in her last fiscal year are verified by me by sending to the library and having the figures verified there from figures in the possession of the library. There can not be any doubt about that amount having been expended.

That does not look to me like disarmament; and I will say that any nation that can spend $765,000,000 for her navy just after the war through which England has gone is able to pay the interest on her debts due us for the protection of her empire.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I think that a portion of that amount was to meet obligations theretofore incurred rather than to aid in the construction of new vessels. I think the Senator will find upon investigation that the amount actually devoted to new vessels, either of the capital-ship type or even down to the smallest type, will not amount to the sum which the Senator states.

Mr. McKELLAR. I give the figures as contained in the law passed by Parliament; that is, I am informed by experts at the library that that is true. They show the actual appropriations and exactly how they were to be expended. I do not know but $765,000,000 for a navy in peace time is a very considerable sum, and no nation ought to plead poverty that has the money to spend that much upon a navy.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is the British fiscal year the same as our fiscal year or does it correspond with the calendar year?

Mr. McKELLAR. The British fiscal year ends on March 31 and ours ends on June 30. That is the difference in the fiscal years.

Mr. President, I go one step further. On pages 44, 45, and 46 of his report the Secretary of the Treasury sets out for the information of Congress sources of about $2,000,000,000 in additional taxation, composed largely of increases on income tax, corporation tax, and various other kinds of taxes. Evidently it was in the mind of the Secretary that because of decreased business and the accompanying decreased incomes that the Government would not derive as much taxes the next year as it is deriving now, and he therefore suggests these sources of increasing our taxation. Our taxation should not be increased a dollar, and it will not be necessary to increase it if we collect this interest on our foreign notes, even though we do not collect as much from excess profits and incomes. We should cut down the expenses of Government and decrease the taxes, rather than increase them. We should make every edge cut, so to speak. We should trim every appropriation bill. It is monstrous to talk about increasing the present burdensome rate of taxation. It is a pity that the Secretary did not devote more time to informing Congress how we could collect the money due us rather than seeking out additional sources of taxation.

Mr. President, although our taxes are burdensome in the extreme, the fiscal agent of the Government now comes along and hands us a list showing how we can raise $2,000,000,000 more from the people. Hardly a passing thought is given to the question of how we can collect the $500,000,000 that is due us. If we had the current interest paid to us as and when due, of course, even if our Republican friends are more extravagant than we have been, we should still have the money with which to pay without increasing the taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. It will be impossible for the Republican administration to be more extravagant than the Democratic administration has been.

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be impossible. I hope they will cut down the appropriations, but I say that it is more likely, unless these honest debts are paid, they will have to increase the taxes, even as the Republican majority are now undertaking to increase our taxes. Of course, an increase in the tariff means an addition to the burden of taxation borne by the American people. It is just another form of taxation; it is just another source of taxation that the Secretary of the Treasury omitted, and will probably result in an addition of $500,000,000, or even more than that. But why do that, when we have this money honestly and justly and fairly due us?

Mr. President, I do not know how far the propaganda in favor of canceling the foreign debt or canceling the interest on that debt is going. Much has been said about a bonus to our soldiers. The Secretary of the Treasury said it is impossible to pay a cash bonus at this time. I do not know what our Republican friends are going to do about that. I do not know whether they are going to pay soldiers a cash bonus or not. As they are in charge of the Government, they can do so if they will or not do so, just as they see fit.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator tell us who it is who has suggested the cancellation of the debts of foreign countries to the United States?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Secretary of the Treasury in his report states it has been suggested that it ought to be done, and there exists the remarkable situation where no one is trying to collect the debt, which makes it seem that some such course is extremely probable.

PAST DUE INTEREST TO SOLDIERS.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives has passed a bill giving to the soldiers of the late war a bonus amounting, it is estimated, to something like a billion and a half dollars. The Secretary of the Treasury has stated that it will be impossible for the Treasury to furnish this amount; that if we issue bonds for the amount, it will be difficult to sell them; that the finances of the country will be very much endangered if we undertook to pay this very considerable sum in cash to our former soldiers. This bonus bill has not been reported in the Senate yet, but it will unquestionably be reported, and no doubt it will be reported favorably, and no doubt it will pass this body and become the law—either that bill or some bill of like character.

In the resolution which I have offered the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to fund into interest-bearing bonds the past due interest, due from foreign governments, as of date November 15, 1921. At that time the past due interest will amount to something like $1,200,000,000. There is no reason why these bonds for the past due interest should not be taken and delivered to these soldiers in proper proportion. If this were done it would relieve the Treasury of the immense burden which would be placed upon it by directing a cash bonus. The taxpayers of the country would not object if this portion of the indebtedness due us by foreign governments should be paid to the soldiers. It would be very fair that this portion of such indebtedness be paid to the soldiers directly in view of the fact that these soldiers defended and protected the very governments which issued the bonds. It may be that our Government would have to guarantee these bonds; but at all events, to my mind it is the fairest and best method at this time of paying the soldiers a bonus. I take it that the foreign governments will be, indeed, glad to know that a portion of their bonds were to be used in this way. It would relieve the Government. It would relieve the taxpayers, and be the least objectionable way of paying a very just debt.

In addition to the foregoing if the soldiers themselves throughout the country are interested in the collection in part of these foreign debts there is not likely to arise any sentiment in this country that will cause the cancellation of these just obligations. Insidious propaganda has been started looking to the cancellation of this indebtedness. The soldiers of the country having an interest in the bonds would not countenance this propaganda. If we are to pay a bonus, and I think it is generally agreed by a great many of our people that we should pay a bonus, this seems to be the least burdensome way of paying it, and in addition, it is manifestly a fair way to pay it; it being remembered that we get no reparations and no indemnities from any of the Central Powers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to say in reply to one observation which was made by the Senator from Tennessee, that if there is any propaganda looking to the cancellation of the debts due by our allies and other nations to the United States I have not learned of it. I have not received a single letter or suggestion from any source favoring that proposition, nor have I seen any publications which advocated such a course. I do not believe that there is any sentiment in the United States in favor of canceling the debts which our allies owe the United States, and I do not think that those nations desire it.

If the Secretary of the Treasury has made an observation upon that matter I think it grows out of rumor, and perhaps some irrelevant and impertinent statements made by thoughtless or hysterical persons, whose utterances are of but slight consequence. I do not think that we need have any apprehension in regard to appeals being made by European nations to cancel the obligations which they owe the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, if I understand the Senator, he thinks that these debts ought not to be canceled and that we ought to collect interest at the earliest possible moment?

Mr. KING. I agree most heartily with the Senator that we should collect the amounts due as soon as our allies can pay them. However, we can not close our eyes to the chaotic situation in Europe and to the financial collapse of many of our debtors. Europe is practically bankrupt, and we have been urged to legislate to enable the people of Europe to purchase our surplus products. The war finance bill which we passed a day or so ago recognized the distress of Europe and sought to provide a means by which our products could be sold in Europe. It would be absolutely impossible for us to collect anything from Russia, with Lenin and Trotski and the soviet government in control; indeed, they have repudiated the obligations of Russia to the United States. I have no doubt that when in Russia a government representing the people is established and begins to function, Russia will promptly acknowledge her obligations to the United States and will take steps to meet them at the earliest date possible.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that in the resolution that I have offered, which I trust he will read with care to-morrow, the debt due from Russia is specifically excepted from any action at this time. I understand that situation; but the debt of Russia amounts only to the pitiful sum, comparatively speaking, of $187,000,000, which is not very much in comparison with the $10,000,000,000 due us from the other countries.

I think the Senator will agree with me that any nation that is able to appropriate for her army practically $2,000,000,000 in one year and for her navy $765,000,000 in one year should be able to pay interest on her debts.

Mr. KING. There is no question in regard to that, but this much must be said: That France, Great Britain, and Italy have undertaken largely the liquidation of the postwar problems in Europe. We have not done so; we have practically withdrawn from Europe; we refused our assent to the Versailles treaty and our allies were compelled to assume the burdens and responsibilities of enforcing the provisions of that treaty. There were problems of tremendous importance that had to be solved and burdens that had to be borne in connection with the liquidation of the war, and Great Britain and France have largely borne those burdens. Speaking for myself, I feel that our country and the world are under obligations to Great Britain and France for what they have done in attempting to stabilize Europe since the armistice and to bring peace and order to the distracted and suffering people of European nations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. One further observation and I will yield. The Senator also knows that Czechoslovakia, to which he refers, the Jugo-Slav Nation, Poland, and other nations which have been erected since the armistice, are having the utmost difficulty to maintain themselves. It seems quite certain that within the next six months Poland will be subjected to such pressure that, unless she receives support from the allied nations, she will scarcely be able to maintain herself against the assaults of the bolsheviki. Already the bolshevists are massing their forces upon the western front of Russia for the purpose of assailing not only Poland, but Esthonia and Latvia and perhaps other nations which have been established. Armenia has been overwhelmed by the Turks and bolsheviki and other conquests will be attempted. Turkey is still militant and is fighting Greece and menacing France and England in Asia Minor. Greece will be pressed by the nationalist régime in Anatolia and will have difficulty in maintaining her new boundaries. The United States can not collect at this time the sums due from Europe. We will have to be patient with our debtors for a while; but if any nation can pay, it should pay. It is only fair that all of our debtors should, and all of them ought to, place their obligations in the form of bonds bearing a fair rate of interest. We should see to it that Europe's debt to the United States be properly represented and properly protected and that payment be made as soon as possible consistent with just and humane principles and policies.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that Poland does not owe us any of the debts referred to, and that Czechoslovakia owes us only the comparatively small amount of fifty-odd million dollars, the interest on which is small and the payment of which would impose practically no burden upon her at all. The trouble is that apparently since 1919, for some reason that has not been explained by the Secretary—I hope he will explain it, for there must be some explanation—foreign nations have apparently quit paying interest. I do not understand why they should quit paying the interest on their loans unless it be that some of them expect to put these debts in a hodgepodge and let America pay her part of them. That has been suggested time and again by public men, but I for one do not want that understanding to go abroad. I want the European nations to know that while we have been generous in lending them the money, and while we have been generous in waiting until they got on their feet, so to speak, that we have no intention whatsoever of canceling their debts. It would not be fair to the American people. The tax burdens of this country now are larger than those of France. France did not raise by taxation much of the money expended by her during the war; she raised it by bonds. She has glided over the duty of imposing heavy tax burdens upon her people. There is no reason why she could not pay these debts, and for these reasons I have introduced this resolution. I think it is timely. I think the American people ought to have this matter arranged for them; and surely if ever there was a time when we needed the money it is at a time when the Secretary of the Treasury points out that a tremendous increase must be made in the tax burdens unless we get this money.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. HARRISON. I imagine that the Senator is going to make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. I rose for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to ask the Senator a question before he makes the motion to adjourn. The adjournment will be until Monday, will it not?

Mr. SMOOT. It will. That order has already been made.

Mr. HARRISON. Can the Senator tell the Senate what is the plan on Monday? Is it to have a real session or to adjourn soon after the Senate convenes?

The reason why I ask is because there are a good many Senators away on both sides—I know a good many on this side—and there are several who are here to-day who want to go home to spend Christmas. Is it the intention of the Senator and those on his side of the Chamber to try to transact any business on Monday?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we are going to have the emergency tariff bill referred to the committee, and to make that absolutely sure I hope there will be a quorum of Senators here. I will say to the Senator that there is nothing especial to go on with upon Monday, with the exception of the reference of that bill to the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. It is the intention, then, to try to refer it to the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. To the Finance Committee, so that they can go on with hearings on the bill if they desire to hold them.

Mr. HARRISON. Can the Senator tell us whether the Committee on Finance intends to hold hearings on that bill?

Mr. SMOOT. My opinion is that they will not hold hearings on it; but of course the committee will meet, and Senators on that committee will have ample time to discuss the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Now may I ask the Senator whether on Monday, the 27th, when we convene, it is the intention of the Senator and others on his side of the Chamber to ask the Senate, when it adjourns, to adjourn over until the following Thursday?

Mr. SMOOT. Either to that day or Wednesday.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator allow me to make the suggestion that we can get unanimous consent through now that when we adjourn on Monday we shall adjourn until the following Wednesday or Thursday?

Mr. SMOOT. I should not care about having that done now, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. Would the Senator object if I should ask unanimous consent to that effect now?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I should object, Mr. President. I want the Senator to take my word that that is what we intend to do unless something unforeseen happens.

Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 27, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 23, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. WALSH, Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of the ages out of whose all-inclusive love come a thousand blessings day by day to Thy children. The swift flight of time has brought us once more to the anniversary of Thine own best gift to the world, heralded by an angelic host singing "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." It arouses all that is best, purest, and most generous in the hearts of men, illustrated by a hundred charitable societies which make glad the hearts of millions. It fills the home with love, peace, and happiness in gifts received and distributed. We pray that the Christ child may be born in millions of hearts to-day that greed, bickering, and wars may pass away. A peace pact, formed spontaneously out of the hearts of thinking men, that disarmament may set in and relieve millions of the burdens of taxation and make every home throughout the world happier and life safer, and peace crown all the world through the teachings and sublime character of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BLAND of Missouri was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of sickness and business.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On December 21, 1920:

H. R. 12887. An act establishing the liability of hotel proprietors and innkeepers in the District of Columbia.

On December 22, 1920:

H. R. 13264. An act to provide for the award of a medal of merit to the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States of America.

REREFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 4296 be rereferred from the Committee on the Territories to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is it about?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is a bill to amend the national prohibition act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In what respect?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Making it applicable to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. GARNER. Why should it not go to the Committee on the Territories?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Because it amends the prohibition act.
Mr. GARNER. It has to do with the Philippine Islands.
Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is true.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does not the Committee on Insular Affairs deal with those questions?
Mr. MANN of Illinois. It should go to the Committee on Insular Affairs.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If it does not go to the Committee on the Territories, it should go to the Committee on Insular Affairs.
Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is where it belongs.
Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is an amendment of the code.
Mr. MANN of Illinois. All laws relating to the Philippines are amendments of statutes of some sort.
Mr. GARNER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that he interview the chairmen of the Committee on the Territories and the Committee on Insular Affairs.
Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have seen the chairman of the Committee on the Territories.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing for it to go to the Committee on Insular Affairs, but I am not willing that it should take the course suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement by former Secretary McAdoo touching the financial situation.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement by ex-Secretary McAdoo touching the financial situation. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, is all the hot air to go in the RECORD hereafter?
Mr. GARNER. Well, this gentleman has had something to do with the finances of the country for the last four years, and I think his suggestions touching the financial condition of the country are of some value.
Mr. MANN of Illinois. I regret to say that he had more to do with it than was good for the country.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. FESS. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether that was not put in the RECORD by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY]?
Mr. GARNER. If it was, I will not insert it again.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the tariff bill passed yesterday.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.
There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday next and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may have leave to address the House for 10 minutes on the last census and the reapportionment by Congress based thereon.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that on Monday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, he may have leave to address the House for 10 minutes on the last census and the reapportionment made thereon. Is there objection?
Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the gentleman will not press that request. There has been quite a bit of criticism in the House of late for fixing specific dates for addresses. I think beyond question the gentleman can get his time on Monday. I do not think there will be any difficulty about it at all.
Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15344) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, and pending that I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to two hours.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the pension appropriation bill, H. R. 15344, and pending that he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours. Is there objection?
Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, can the gentleman give us any information as to what is the program of the House to-day? Is it intended to adjourn immediately after the passage of this bill?
Mr. CANNON. I have no knowledge about that. I suppose the suggestion of a want of a quorum after this bill is passed might bring an adjournment.
Mr. WINGO. There is no objection to this bill, but a good many Members were delayed yesterday, and if it is understood that the House will adjourn after the passage of the appropriation bill it would be some accommodation to them.
Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think my colleague desires, if he can, to have opportunity to pass an invalid pension omnibus bill, which would naturally come up to-morrow.
Mr. WINGO. The gentleman understands there is another bill which has the right of way, which will provoke a great deal of discussion. If there is an understanding that that will not be taken up and that to-day will be confined to these appropriation bills, I have no objection.
Mr. MANN of Illinois. That will not come up to-day.
Mr. MONDELL. My expectation is that we will dispose of the pension bill, and that a unanimous-consent request may be made then to pass an omnibus pension bill. We do not contemplate any other business to-day.
Mr. WINGO. Then we are to confine ourselves to-day to matters about which there is no controversy?
Mr. MONDELL. Entirely.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15344) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.
The motion was agreed to.
Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the pension appropriation bill, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.
The Clerk reported the title of the bill.
Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen can obtain a copy of this bill with the report at the desk. The report fully explains the bill and contains other information that will be interesting to the House and prove a labor saver to the individual Member who has not given attention to the matter.
This bill calls for appropriations amounting to $265,000,000, a reduction of $14,000,000 from the appropriations for the present fiscal year.
The decrease is not an item of economy for which the committee claims any credit. It is due to the decrease in the number of pensioners.
Death has taken 35,000 of the veterans of the Civil War in the last year, and more than 120,000 in the last five years.
The committee has no pride in presenting this decreased appropriation for pensions.
It is still a large appropriation, but it represents one of the most sacred obligations of the Government—one we can not ignore if we would, and one we would not ignore if we could.
It represents the debt of gratitude the people owe to their defenders, and they will willingly pay that obligation, now as in the past, and in the future as in the present.
This bill does not represent the full extent of our obligation to the defenders of the Nation. It carries the pensions for those who were in wars prior to the great World War.
But a small number of men engaged in the war with Germany are cared for in this bill. The obligation to the millions who were enrolled in the Army and Navy in that war will be met by other appropriation bills, for compensation for death and disability, for medical and hospital services, for vocational education, for maintenance of soldiers' homes, and for administration of these agencies.
These appropriations will be larger than those in this bill, and the total appropriations to meet the obligations to the defenders of the country will amount to $575,485,490.
It is a large amount this Congress is called upon to appropriate to care for the men who surrendered their places and opportunities in civil life to sacrifice health and life for the common welfare, but we can not and dare not talk of economy in meeting such an obligation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There is just one item in the bill about which I desire to ask the gentleman. The last clause of the bill provides that during the next fiscal year the Government may expend $500,000 for examining surgeons.

Mr. CANNON. That becomes necessary because of the fact that the Fuller bill increased the pensions of those who are entirely helpless. The $500,000 is to meet such expenditure, for the pay of surgeons for full investigation of the various claims. I may say to the gentleman that so long after the Civil War, those who survive in the main are entirely helpless.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the very reason I asked the question. We assume that the present survivors are practically helpless. That being the case, why is it necessary to have such a tremendous overhead on this item of examining surgeons when possibly their action will be taken for granted?

Mr. CANNON. Nothing is taken for granted by the Pension Office and never has been heretofore. The strictest examination is made. These veterans surviving from past wars, prior to the World War, are dying very rapidly. They are scattered all over the country and are making applications, and after the most careful estimates these appropriations to pay the overhead charges are made, not only as a matter of justice to the claimants but as a matter of protection to the Government itself.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know how much overhead charge there is for every dollar that actually goes to the service men who are receiving rehabilitation to-day?

Mr. CANNON. The sundry civil appropriation bill and possibly the legislative bill will carry those appropriations. This bill does not.

Mr. BLANTON. I was raising the question because I was in hopes that the gentleman's party was going to relieve the Government of most of this unnecessary overhead which seems to be connected with every expenditure of every fund that the Government appropriates. I understand now that we have numerous men on the pay roll drawing salaries from the Government compared with the service men who are receiving rehabilitation in this country.

Mr. CANNON. I fancy the gentleman is laboring under a mistake, but let that be as it may. There are large expenses that will have to be borne on account of the Lehlbach bill, though there is no appropriation in this bill for that.

Mr. BLANTON. The Lehlbach bill?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; for annuities, retirement in civil life. I would not speak disrespectfully of the civil employees, but this bill is to provide for those who defended and preserved the Government by their service, and while the Pension Office, possibly under the law and the order of the President, will take care of the annuities of those who retire, and so forth, the gentleman can get information touching that point from another source. I did not want to undertake providing for the civil pensioners in this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not now objecting to what our war survivors receive.

Mr. CANNON. And we have not done so. The sundry civil appropriation bill no doubt will take care of that.

Mr. BLANTON. It is the question of the overhead that I am fighting.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman desires to make a motion to reduce this amount, which has been arrived at after careful inquiry from the Pension Office, well and good. The pension officials said that this amount was necessary for the protection of the Government on the one hand and the relief of those who are entitled to the increased pay, who are totally disabled, on the other hand.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. The overhead charges referred to by the gentleman from Texas on account of the vast number of employees in the War Risk Insurance Bureau have been created by agents of his own party, not by agents of the Republican Party.

Mr. BLANTON. But they are paid for by money that we appropriate.

Mr. CANNON. I just want time enough to say that this bill does not carry anything for such overhead charges or otherwise. The sundry civil appropriation bill and possibly the legislative bill will report the appropriations that may be necessary to care for that, as well as appropriations that may be necessary to care for the annuities to civil pensioners—for that is what it amounts to—people who never were in the Army. However, this House after full discussion, the Senate agreeing, enacted that law. I did not want in this bill to mix, if I may be allowed the expression, the sheep, from my standpoint, with the goats—and I do not want to be understood that I am speaking disrespectfully at all of the civil employees.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. On the item which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] mentioned, is it not the rule that the examining surgeons, who are rendering service in the department for which the gentleman is appropriating, are not overcharging the Government and are not being overpaid?

Mr. CANNON. In my judgment they are not being overpaid.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I simply desire to call attention to the fact that the Acting Commissioner of the Pension Department states in his letter, which is in the report, which any Member may procure, that during the first five months of the present fiscal year the number of claims requiring medical examination amounted to 72,120. Does not the gentleman from Illinois, after his long experience in this House, hold vigorously and tenaciously to the view that before complaint is made here about an appropriation carried by the report of a committee to a bill thoroughly investigated some elements of fact should be stated upon which the complaint might be based?

Mr. CANNON. Well, that is a matter for each Member to settle for himself. Full information is given in the report. The committee, both the subcommittee and the full committee, approved this bill and ordered its report. In my judgment, the Democratic Commissioner of Pensions, who is responsible for this estimate, after inquiry made his case. The hearings can be had, and the report fully explained the bill, and while I am perfectly willing to answer any questions I can, gentlemen can get the information in less time than I can give it to them, because it is in black and white.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. CANNON. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. It seems to me that the position of my friend [Mr. CHINDBLOM] is that whenever one of the department heads comes before a committee and says thus and so, that I want $500,000 for this and it is necessary, that the membership of the House should vote the people's money out of the Treasury to carry out that program and accept that statement without any question at all, and that they must vote for large sums to carry out the wishes of the department heads whether it is necessary or not.

Mr. CANNON. I have a very high respect for the gentleman and approve of his industry, and at times his courage in protecting the Treasury, but once in awhile I think he goes off a little bit half cocked. [Laughter.] I will say—and it meets my approval at times, but there is no necessity for it on this occasion. The matter has been thoroughly investigated, and we believe that the debt that we owe to the men on the Union side in the Civil War, who are dying by the wholesale and becoming helpless, shall not be halted when they make good their claims under the Fuller bill. The War with Spain is cared for. The Pension Office administers that law, and I may say in passing I voted for that law, but for between 50 and 60 years the Union soldiers of the Civil War had to trace their disability from service and injuries, wounds, disease contracted in the line of duty, and yet for the War with Spain, for the first time in the history of the Government, we provide a service pension for those who were engaged in that war. One of them or many of them might be attacked by disease or disability not contracted in the line of duty, and yet under that law the gentleman voted, and I voted, that they get a service pension, not for injuries received in that war or diseases contracted in that war but for injuries that may be received to-day not at all connected with the war. Oh, the committee has finally investigated and reported this bill, and it is for the House to approve the bill on the one hand or amend it on the other if the majority desires to do so.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly, I will yield for a question.

Mr. HASTINGS. I was going to ask as a matter of information, and I make my inquiry of the gentleman knowing he is very familiar with it, these surgeons who are provided for are located conveniently throughout the country, are they not?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and many in the office.

Mr. HASTINGS. But they are located all over the United States?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. And convenient for an examination of these applicants who are provided for under the Fuller bill?

Mr. CANNON. In most instances you may say that as a general rule that is the case.

Mr. HASTINGS. And the Fuller bill is the occasion for the increased appropriation in this item?

Mr. CANNON. In part.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it not also true that these surgeons only receive a fee of $2 for examining these men, and if they were not soldiers they might charge $10 or more for such examination?

Mr. CANNON. However that may be, I do not know. I am not fully up in the charges by surgeons. Travel pay is provided for, and in many instances there is something for travel pay. After all, I do not think the experts are being paid an unduly high price. Now, if there are no further questions, I have taken all the time that I desire, and will yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE]——

Mr. McANDREWS. Mr. BANKHEAD would like to have about 10 minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] about 5 minutes, and those are the only requests for time I have.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will yield to the gentleman from California later, and the minority may yield time now.

Mr. McANDREWS. I desire to yield some time and these gentlemen desire to get through. As I understand, the gentleman from California wants to get in an hour, if possible, and wants some of our time. The only requests for time I have now are for 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CANNON. Then I reserve the balance of my time. The gentleman is entitled to an hour in his own right.

Mr. HASTINGS. It has not been provided.

Mr. McANDREWS. I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is a matter that does not relate to this pension bill which I think is a matter of sufficient importance to the ex-service men of the country to call to the attention of members of the committee, and particularly to any such members of the Committee on Military Affairs as may be present. It will be recalled that we made provision that to every man who was discharged from the service there was issued certain equipment, including overcoat, service uniform, and certain other articles of standard equipment. Now, under the national defense act of 1916—and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] to this proposition—under the provisions of section 125 of the national defense act it was provided that the men who were discharged from the service would only be allowed to wear their uniforms on occasions of ceremony, but Congress evidently intended by the act which was passed on February 28, 1919, to extend that privilege to the ex-service men, because in that act (H. R. 13336, 65th Cong., Feb. 28, 1919) it provided:

That any person who served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war may, upon honorable discharge and return to civil life, permanently retain one complete suit of outer uniform clothing, including the overcoat, and such articles of personal apparel and equipment as may be authorized, respectively, by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, and may wear such uniform clothing after such discharge: Provided, That the uniform above referred to shall include some distinctive mark or insignia to be prescribed, respectively, by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, such mark or insignia to be issued, respectively, by the War Department or Navy Department to all enlisted personnel so discharged.

Under this law ex-service men could wear the uniform at any time or place they desired.

Now, in the naval appropriation act which was approved June 4, 1920, section 8 undertakes to repeal the act of February 28, 1919, and to reinforce the provisions of the original section 125 of the national defense act of 1916. Under that, as now construed by the War Department and the Department of Justice, orders have been issued by the Department of Justice to make arrests of all men not now in the service who are found wearing the uniform of the United States, whether they were honorably discharged from the service or not, and a number have been arrested, as I see by the Birmingham papers, of my State.

I find upon investigation of the RECORD this morning that the naval bill, so far as that feature of it was concerned, was passed without any discussion. The effect of this section 8 of the naval appropriation act is to reinstate the provision that these ex-service men, honorably discharged from the service and furnished with this uniform and equipment, are prohibited from wearing them except on occasions of ceremony. While as a matter of fact technically section 8 of the naval bill did not repeal section 125 of the national defense act, because it refers to the act as having been approved February 28, 1918, whereas the act, as a matter of fact, was approved February 28, 1919, so that technically it was not repealed, yet by construction of the Department of Justice and the Judge Advocate General of the War Department it is repealed, and strict orders have been issued for the prosecution of all men wearing this uniform.

Now, that might appear like a rather trivial matter to bring to the attention of the committee or to the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs; but in these times, with winter coming on, and considering the high price of clothing, affecting possibly 4,000,000 of our young men in this country, it is not in its real analysis a matter of inconsequence; and it seems to me, on mature and full consideration, that this attempted repeal of the right given these men to wear the uniform which the Government issued to them should be remedied by the necessary legislation.

That is the reason why I desire especially the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], because he is on the Committee on Military Affairs. I do not know what reason actuated the Committee on Naval Affairs in inserting that provision in the naval appropriation act, because it was a measure that affected matters not exclusively within their jurisdiction.

I assume that possibly it was predicated upon the fact that some people may have worn the uniform as a disguise, or in order to conceal their real identity and give them some apparent evidence of respectability for the purpose of imposing on the law of the country, or upon the people of different communities. But even if that were true, it seems to me that as a matter of justice and of humanity, if you please, to the great multitude of ex-service men to whom the Government has issued these uniforms, remedial legislation should be enacted that would give them the right to wear that uniform with such distinctive marks as might be designated—and the Secretary of War did designate a red chevron to be worn on the sleeve between the elbow and the shoulder—in order that during the rigors of the coming winter these men might have the right to wear these uniforms when they saw fit.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will be glad to.

Mr. MONDELL. I am very much interested in what the gentleman says. I agree with him fully that if the departments are interpreting the law as the gentleman asserts, there should be legislation on the subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can assure the gentleman that there is no question about that interpretation, because I called up the Department of Justice and the office of Gen. Kreger, the Acting Judge Advocate of the War Department, and both branches of the Government are giving the interpretation to this act that I have just suggested to the committee, and in pursuance of those instructions arrests in certain parts of the country are now being made. You gentlemen will hear from your respective districts within a few days, if you have not already heard, that arrests are now being made. Some eight or nine men, according to the Birmingham Age-Herald that I received this morning, have been arrested by orders of the district attorney because they are wearing the uniform issued to them by the Government of the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Surely Congress never intended that they should be denied the right to wear the uniform which Congress provided they should retain.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Section 8 of the naval act, which I have referred to, reads:

That section 125 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916—

That is the one that limits the wearing of the uniform to occasions of ceremony—

shall hereafter be in full force and effect as originally enacted, notwithstanding anything contained in the act entitled "An act permitting any person who has served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment and to wear the same under certain conditions," approved February 28, 1918—

The act was approved February 28, 1919, as a matter of fact—

Provided, That the words "or the Secretary of the Navy" shall be inserted immediately after the words "the Secretary of War," wherever those words appear in section 125 of the act approved June 3, 1916, hereinbefore referred to.

There is the authority, I will state to the gentleman, that the Department of Justice and the Judge Advocate General of the Army are acting upon, contending that although there is a clerical misprision or inadvertence in the repealer here with reference to the year, yet by legislative intent and construction

Congress doubtless intended by the passage of this act to place that restriction upon the wearing of the uniform. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. McANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, a few days ago the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] raised the point of order that the measure reviving the activities of the War Finance Corporation was out of order because of the fact that it might raise revenue; that while that was not its primary purpose, still it might do so, and that it was therefore obnoxious to that provision in the Constitution requiring all bills raising revenue to originate in the House of Representatives. I realize that it is now an academic question inasmuch as the measure has already been enacted by the House, but it is a question that will probably be raised frequently in the future; and inasmuch as somebody has suggested that the House acted as it did because of the fact that the agricultural interests were concerned, and did not take time to consider the question on its merits, I think it may not be amiss to read an excerpt from a decision from the United States Supreme Court. In the case of the Twin City Bank v. Nebeker (167 U. S., 196) a question was presented which I think is identical in substance with the one that was before the House at that time.

It seems that under the act of June 3, 1864, provision was made that national banks of this country might issue circulating notes by depositing certain bonds with the Treasury Department. The preparing of forms and dies and the actual printing necessarily cost some money. In order to take care of that cost the Senate of the United States placed on the bill an amendment which taxed the national banks issuing those notes a sum to cover the expense of the dies and the forms and the printing of the notes. In order to be sure that there should be a sufficient amount thus collected in the form of a tax they made the tax more than was necessary to cover the actual expense, providing at the same time that any excess of tax should be covered into the Treasury of the United States. One of the banks of this country tried to avoid the payment of the tax, claiming as their excuse for not wanting to pay it that the amendment was placed on the bill in the Senate of the United States, that it was a revenue measure, and that all bills raising revenue, under Article I, section 7 of the Constitution, must originate in the House of Representatives.

Frequently it is the case that the kernel of an article can be stated in a single sentence. The Supreme Court of the United States, Justice Harlan rendering the opinion, decided that specific case, and I will read the deciding sentence of the case.

Mr. Justice Story has well said that the practical construction of the Constitution and the history of the origin of the constitutional provision in question proves that revenue bills are those that levy taxes in the strict sense of the word, and are not bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue.

The tax was sustained by the court on the ground stated.

In this particular measure a tax was levied to pay certain expenses. The main and primary purpose of the bill was to provide for the issuing of circulating notes. There was a provision in the measure that there should be a tax, which tax more than covered the expense of issuing the notes and the forms and dies that were used in printing the same. The provision was that the excess should be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and that was done. That presented a direct issue, the same one which was raised the other day, and I think this fully justifies the House in its decision. I just wanted to call attention to that case. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire some more time?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No.

Mr. CANNON. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE].

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I am strongly in favor of the bill that is before the House. I believe that proper care in the way of pensions for those who serve their country in war is one of the most important matters that Congress has to deal with. I believe that the future success of our country, when it shall unfortunately be thrown into war, will be greatly influenced by the manner in which we treat the soldiers of America. Our country has in all its history been thoughtful and tender of those who have bared their breasts to the storms of war, who have taken their lives in their hands for their country, and it is well that this should be so. It is not, however, my intention to speak upon the subject of this bill further than I have already done.

During the summer just past a number of Members of this House and certain Members of the Senate made a trip to the Orient, and it was of so interesting a nature that it has occurred to me that it might be of some value to Congress that something be said about this trip. I will omit any reference to the earlier part of the journey across the ocean and take up the subject of our experiences and observations in China.

Going to China, to one who has never been in the Orient, is like dropping off the earth into an entirely different world. The ways of the people and all the conditions over there are so different to those that we are accustomed to that everything in regard to it was to me most interesting. It is a most wonderful country. The Chinese figure their population at 440,000,000 in a country perhaps one-third larger than continental United States. Although one may know that China is a vast country, yet it is a surprise to realize its extent by traveling over it. We went into the interior of China, traveling by railways about 2,500 miles. We entered at Shanghai, which is some 600 or 700 miles north of the southern boundary of China, and which is about on a line with New Orleans. The farthest point north that we reached in our journey was Mukden, in Manchuria, which is on the parallel of New York, and there are still some hundreds of miles farther north.

THE GREAT YANGTZE RIVER.

On the 5th of August, 1920, just a month after sailing from San Francisco, the Great Northern was approaching the mouth of the greatest river of Asia, navigable for 2,000 miles, the Yangtze. Like the Mississippi, it has a vast delta, and discolors the ocean with its silt for a great distance, probably 50 miles or more. The first glimpse of Asia is in the form of a large group of islands, known as the Chusan Islands, to the south and east of the river's mouth. The islands are rocky, not large, and most of them show but little vegetation. The first signs of approaching land consist of numerous Chinese fishing boats, with square sails made of matting stretched out on bamboo poles. These boats are about the size of those in the fishing trade off the southern California coast, and in lieu of the gasoline engines with which our boats are equipped each has a big pair of eyes painted on the bow, so that the craft may look out for and avoid approaching danger, and also to enable it to observe and locate the schools of fish. These painted eyes are said to be very efficacious, and no Chinese fisherman would sail on a craft that was so poorly equipped that it had no eyes. It would invite disaster and be very bad luck.

The Yangtze is so wide at the mouth—26 miles—that the shores can not be seen on either side, and several miles must be traveled up the river before the faint dark lines are seen that indicate land. Many ships are met going out to sea, those flying the Japanese flag being more numerous than the American, British, and all others combined. As the river narrows one can see that the delta lands, as would be anticipated, are extremely fertile and intensively cultivated. The deep green of tall, vigorous crops extends in every direction as far as the eye can reach, with many villages well built in the Chinese fashion.

THE CITY OF SHANGHAI.

The city of Shanghai is not on the Yangtze proper, but on the Whangpoo River, a much narrower stream, which empties into the Yangtze 13 miles below the city. The Whangpoo bears an enormous commerce, and is crowded with craft of every description, from the ocean liners to odd-looking barges, and hundreds of sampans.

After a brief stop at the quarantine station, where health officers came aboard to see whether there were any cases of contagious disease on our ship, we proceeded to the Standard Oil Dock, 4 miles below the city. There all passengers, with their luggage, were transferred to a small steamer, and, accompanied by a welcoming committee, proceeded to a landing at a busy point on the Bund, which is the name given to the city's beautiful parklike front on the Whangpoo. Back of the park is a wide cement-paved street, faced by very fine buildings, which are the homes of the great Asiatic banking institutions, large corporations, popular clubs, and so forth. The buildings are not skyscrapers, but are from three to five or six stories in height, built more in the European than the American style of architecture, and very stylish and attractive.

We were greatly surprised at the enthusiastic and spontaneous character of our reception. There were thousands of Chinese people gathered, possibly from curiosity, and representatives of the municipality and of the Province, beside the American consular officers, committees of patriotic Chinese organizations, and so forth. It was an awfully hot day, and a correspondingly hot task to get located in the waiting automobiles to be taken to the hotels. Our smiling Chinese hosts, fine large men, most of whom spoke excellent English, helped us the best they could. But with the crowds of people, the men stripped to the waist and the smaller children stripped to the soles of their feet, the swarms of jinrikishas, and the loud shouting in Chinese, which seems a necessary accompaniment of any important undertaking in China, it made the transfer a very hot job.

We went direct to the foreign office of the Province—that of Kiangsu—where we were formally received by the civil governor, the military governor, the commissioner of foreign affairs, and the other officers of the Province. It is one of the peculiarities of China that each of the Provinces has a foreign office, in addition to that of the central government. Such a reception in China always includes refreshments on a very generous scale, and this was far from being an exception. These include tea and cakes of all sorts and usually soda water, lemonade "silent" water (distilled), and sometimes wine and liquors. The bad character of the water throughout China affords an excuse if not a reason for drinking other potables. The water in general use for bathing, etc., is not considered safe to drink, and at the rooms in hotels there is always a bottle of drinking water, called "chow" water. Typhus and typhoid fevers and cholera are the diseases most common and most feared.

As soon as our reception was over, about 6.30, we went to the hotel and registered and endeavored to "settle down" and get ready for a great dinner. Our luggage was in one big pile—about a carload of it—in the basement of the hotel, and I risk nothing in saying that it was another hot job getting it out. The cellar was like a damp furnace and was stuffed with shouting, half-naked coolies, who would pack your pieces of luggage to your room after you had been so successful as to retrieve them from the dreadful pack. It was an hour to test the courage of the bravest men and the patience of the gentlest women. The hour finally passed, however.

By the time that we had cleaned up and cooled off the hour for dinner had arrived—9.30 p. m. They permitted us to dress informally, but it was a very swell affair. It was presided over by a former minister of foreign affairs, and one of the speakers was the first President of the Chinese Republic, Dr. Sun Yat Sen. He spoke nearly an hour and made some startling statements, one to the effect that he had brought on the war between the north and south of China for the purpose of frustrating Japanese designs. Another was C. T. Wang, one of the two Chinese commissioners to the peace conference at Paris, who, with Dr. Wellington Koo, now Chinese minister at Washington, refused to sign the treaty because of the Shantung concession to Japan. He is a very capable and logical man, quite young and prepossessing, and everybody predicts that he will cut a large figure in China in the future. There were 300 or 400 people at the dinner, including members of the fine American colony, prominent Chinese in official and business life, as well as our own party.

We remained in Shanghai until Monday, August 9, and had a very full program. It is an active business city, considerably Europeanized. There are thousands of small Chinese shops, but there are also great Chinese stores of all sorts—jewelry stores as large as those of our most important American cities, silk and embroidery shops, and very large and well-stocked department stores. One such is a one-priced store, at which you may buy or not, without the customary haggling that is the rule generally in China. Usually it is absolutely necessary to haggle, as the seller invariably asks two or three times and perhaps ten times what he expects to get.

The streets of Shanghai are most animated and the scenes astonishing to an American who sees them for the first time. Pretty nearly everything is done by human power. It is true that there are street car lines with small crowded cars and a good many automobiles, but the great bulk of street transportation is by jinrikishas, the power for which is a lithe coolie, who gets between the thills and trots off with his "fare" at a surprising speed. They rarely cease from a steady trot, and then only in climbing a hill or in case of an interruption of traffic by congestion or otherwise. The vehicle is somewhat like a grown-up baby carriage, and on smooth asphalt-lined pavements like those of Shanghai is a decidedly comfortable means of conveyance. There is a carriage top, which may be up or down, as the passenger may prefer, but in the glaring sun and intense heat experienced in China one almost invariably insists on having the top up. The rikisha man is usually stripped to the waist and his legs and feet are bare. As he steadily and patiently trots along the perspiration stands out on his brown body and arms, and often his head and face. At first one has some compunctions about riding behind these human ponies at the low fares that govern them by municipal law, but as their occupation is their only way of earning a living one concludes that it is a poor way of displaying sympathy to curtail their employment. Shanghai swarms with them by the thousand, and there they are the principal means of locomotion, while in some cities they are the only means.

But the propulsion of rikishas is only one of the many uses to which human power is put on the streets of Shanghai and other Chinese cities. Wheelbarrows with side seats are used for cheaper human transport. All freight and transport business on the streets is done by men. Thousands of men carry huge loads suspended from the two ends of a strong bamboo pole, or one big load in the middle of a bamboo, with two stout, half-naked coolies at each end. Then there are the enormous wheelbarrows, with large wooden wheels, on which a single man will carry an incredible load. Sometimes he will have a helper, often a little boy, who, with a rope over his shoulder attached to the barrow, will tug away and do his share in towing. The next larger means of transport is a big two-wheeled cart, with two men working around the cart and the load, and from four to six others tugging away at separate ropes. They proceed with a mournful sort of cry or song and move a quantity of heavy goods or rocks sufficient to make a good big truck load. I do not remember to have seen a single auto truck or one drawn by horses in Shanghai. When one considers the fact that this is a great commercial city, handling a vast volume of commodities of every description it will be realized what is done there by human power and strength alone.

The policing of Shanghai is largely done by tall, hairy-faced Sikhs, wearing red turbans and a khakilike uniform. They carry a stick about 2½ feet long, which they handle something like kings are supposed to handle a scepter when in position as traffic officers, resting it on the right hip and pointing out at an angle of about 40 degrees. They are extremely businesslike and stand for no nonsense. When they wave their sticks or their hands traffic either stops or proceeds, as may have been indicated. There was always one of these tall, unemotional chaps in front of the hotel to look out for the hotel guests coming and going in autos or rickshas. When a man would come out of the hotel looking as though he wanted a conveyance the ricksha men would come rushing from the opposite side of the street with their machines like a school of fish after a crippled minnow. It was the duty of these Sikhs to keep them in order, and I saw them on two occasions cuff ricksha men who rushed in too swiftly, and no gentle cuffs, either. Unlike an American cabman, they put up no argument.

With two or three exceptions like this, I saw no violence of any sort in China. With all the crowding on the streets, occupied by countless thousands, I never saw a man strike another, and I saw only one case of a heated argument, and that was between two ricksha men in Peking. There was much talk, but that was all. In America one would have thought that there was going to be a "scrap," but the bystanders evidently knew better and were apathetic.

The River Whangpoo, which constitutes the harbor of Shanghai, with its hundreds of quaint craft and its beautiful bund, is sufficiently interesting to engage more extended description. There is everything, from the stately liners from Europe and America to the humble fishing craft and boats carrying fruit and vegetables, with their square matting sails, and a large population on the water.

While there is a large variety of fruit in China, due to warnings from all people of experience, we did not eat much of it. We were cautioned not to eat any fruit or vegetables uncooked, as there was danger of dysentery or cholera. I did, however, test nearly everything once. Fine and even brilliantly skinned apples were quite dry and punky inside. The peaches were better, but not up to ours at home. Pears are very fair. Watermelons, some red and some yellow inside, taste very well, but are especially dangerous to Americans in hot weather.

Our second day, Friday, August 6, was given to entertainments more or less formal. In the morning our Chinese friends took us to the spacious grounds of their athletic association, where we saw some remarkable athletic work in Chinese boxing, sword and spear contests, and so forth. After that we went to a Chinese cotton mill, where they recently put in American machinery and were having great success. We took luncheon with the American Chamber of Commerce, a splendid body of business men, who told us of some of their difficulties in establishing and conducting American business enterprises in China. In the early evening we were the guests of 21 associations, mostly Chinese public welfare organizations, at a luncheon. There were several hundred people present, ladies and gentlemen, in a large Chinese restaurant.

On Saturday, August 7, the Great Northern sailed back for America and took about half of our party, who could not wait for the Madawaska, which would not sail from Yokohama until September 10.

On Sunday, August 8, a very hot day, we rested in the forenoon, and in the afternoon took rickshas to the house of Mr. Tong, a former minister of the treasury, who talked to us about China's finances and the consortium, to which he was opposed. Mr. C. T. Wang, the able young man that I have heretofore referred to, was one of those present.

A GREAT DAY IN HANGCHOW.

Monday morning, August 9, ended our stay in Shanghai, which was marked by great cordiality, not only upon the part of our countrymen, 3,500 of whom live there, but especially on the part of the Chinese of all classes, large delegations of whom saw us off at the station with a Chinese band and a company of Chinese soldiers.

At 7.30 a. m. we took a special train, furnished by the Chinese Government, for Hangchow, four hours' travel to the southwest. The cars were compartment cars, built on the European model, with a corridor running along one side of the car. The seats can be made into berths for sleeping at night and are quite comfortable. The attendance, also Chinese, was excellent.

This trip to Hangchow, being our first penetration of the interior of China, was most interesting. All this section is delta soil and extremely fertile. It is a great silk-producing country, and mulberry trees are grown very extensively, as well as sugar cane, tea, cotton, and wheat. Rice is the principal product. The cultivation is most intensive and everything under such cultivation responds vigorously. I never saw such growth anywhere before. Not a rod of ground is left uncultivated, except the graves of the dead, which are marked by mounds of earth scattered about the fields. Chinese regard the graves as sacred and will not have them violated or the ground used for any purpose, although they frequently cultivate between the graves even when quite close together. These graves I observed all over China, and they seem to cover more ground in the north than in the south. Very few animals were in evidence, showing that all parts of cultivation are done by men and women alone.

Hangchow is a city of over 700,000 population, and we were told that it is more essentially a Chinese city than many others; that is, has fewer foreign residents. We were not at all prepared for the enthusiastic reception that we received. It appeared that in honor of the Americans, whom they regard as the great friends of China, they had made the day a holiday, and I believe that it is no exaggeration to say that there were 150,000 of them at the railway station when we arrived. There was a sea of brown faces and half-naked bodies, eager, apparently, to catch a glimpse of those Americans whose country had done so much for China in refusing to assent to the Shantung award, and in other ways. They were not noisy, but their eagerness made a vivid impression on the party.

Bands of music, a body of Chinese soldiers, and Chinese officials met us on the platform. The provincial officials, which are something like our State officers, cut quite a figure in China. There is a civil governor and a military governor of each Province, and I have no doubt that the military governor should go first, so far as real power is concerned. The Provinces have always exercised a stiff "State's rights" power, even under the Empire, but under the Republic they are still more assertive. The military governor of a Province who can get together a large army and manage to feed and pay it has a substantial strength that will not bend to the wishes of the Republic, which practically has no army of its own. This Province of Chekiang has a population of 17,000,000 people.

When we got off the train we were conducted to waiting rickshas, over 100 of them, each decorated with a little American and Chinese flag. There was a great bustle of getting into them, but we were soon trotting off through the dense crowds of people and through very narrow streets, not more than 10 or 12 feet wide, with hundreds of shops on each side, all open in front and Chinese smelling. That is a peculiar smell—a little close and as though something had been burned—but you get it all over China. Sometimes there is a little paving in the street and sometimes not. These stores are of all sorts, but mostly of food. The baker will have some odd-looking confections on a wooden or metal tray, none too clean looking, and the fact that there is a good deal of dust and many flies around does not seem to disturb him or his customers. Our procession passed through miles of these streets—it was a very hot day—and then we came to a beautiful lake, called Westlake. There we transferred to a fleet of wide, flat-bottomed pleasure boats, with canopies, and were rowed across the lake. On the other side we found as many sedan chairs as would accommodate the party. This was a new experience. Each chair had three bearers and they would spell each other. They were pretty cunning. I got out to walk up a hill to ease up on them, and the bearers went ahead and I saw them no more. So I walked in the hot, tropical sun about a mile and got thoroughly heated up. Our route was about 3 miles up a canyon to a celebrated Buddhist temple. Near the temple the canyon exposes some bald rock faces, and on these large numbers of the figure of Buddha have been carved, some of them hundreds of years ago, with a good deal of skill.

In the temple were 500 figures carved in wood and covered with gold leaf, they being the disciples of Buddha. Each one of the 500 is different in expression and appearance and indicates a different character from the others. They are said to be several hundred years old and they certainly indicate great artistic skill. They are two or three times larger than life size. This temple and all the surroundings are very beautiful and impressive. It is said to be much more than 1,000 years old.

We returned to the lake in the chairs and crossed again on the boats and were taken in rickshas to a large silk mill, where 1,700 people were employed. We saw the whole interesting process, one feature of which is to take the threads from the cocoon. The cocoons are placed in pans of boiling water, and Chinese girls deftly fish them out and unwind the thread from the cocoon and wind it on a spindle.

That evening we were the guests at dinner of the Silk Guild, there being many silk mills in Hangchow. They entertained us with music on many ancient Chinese stringed instruments. The president of the guild made the speech of welcome and I responded for the congressional party. We reached our train about midnight, pretty tired, but with the consciousness that we had, despite the heat and bustle, spent a wonderful day with the hospitable people.

Our train passed through Shanghai in the night and proceeded to the ancient city of Nanking, where we arrived at 11 in the morning of Thursday, August 10. During the night we were frequently awakened at various stations at small cities by the Chinese bands playing American airs, and, looking out of the window, would see the welcoming committees of our hospitable Chinese friends, in formal dress, with the invariable body of infantry soldiers at present arms. It did not matter that the tired guests were all in their beds and the lucky ones asleep or that the hour was midnight or 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning—they were there doing their part just the same.

NANKING AND THE MING TOMBS.

When we arrived at Nanking, which is about 200 miles northwest of Shanghai, there was an immense concourse of people at the station, including the provincial officials, the committees, the troops, the bands, and 3,000 or 4,000 students with banners. After introductions and the exchange of cards, which is rather formal and a little tedious with the temperature a trifle under 100° in the shade, we were taken in waiting autos through the principal streets, landing at the governor's yamen, or capitol building, for luncheon. We made a stop at the Drum Tower, which is a fortress and observation point on a hill and several hundred years old. It is mentioned by Marco Polo, who saw it in his explorations of China more than 500 years ago. The streets of the city, and especially those about the station, were thronged with people to see the Americans. As I mentioned, the Yamen is not a single building, but a large collection of buildings, generally of a single story, but some of them quite spacious and all generally artistic in their design and attractive in their coloring. This description applies to temples and palaces throughout China. When we speak of a fine church or capitol in America it usually refers to a single noble building, or at most to a few buildings. But in China a yamen, a temple, or a palace, particularly the latter, is a large collection, a network, or a labyrinth of buildings. There is a great gateway in front, perhaps 40 or 50 feet wide and 20 feet or more high, of imposing appearance, and usually a high wall around the entire grounds, although there may be a still higher and thicker wall around the entire city.

There is an ancient wall about Nanking, for instance, 70 feet high and 30 feet wide at the base, 20 miles around, much of it still intact. You enter the great gate of the yamen and see a handsome building in front, which you think must be the building, with smaller ones on either side, usually offsetting each other. You pass through the first one and see that there is a still larger one beyond and a number of others at the side. This experience continues until you finally reach the heart of the yamen, the temple or the palace, where probably there is a large and beautiful audience hall.

At the governor's yamen we had a reception from the civil and the military governor and afterwards a luncheon. They endeavored here and everywhere to furnish us as nearly as possible American food, though at dinners bird's-nest soup and boiled sharks' fins would often creep in. The soup is all right, made from a gelatinous substance that is gathered from the rocks and looks like a bird's nest, but is not. How it gets on the rocks I do not know. The sharks' fins are boiled until they are soft, and they are esteemed a great delicacy by Chinese; but after two or three trials I passed them up, not because they are unpleasant tasting, but because they do not have much taste of any kind.

We found a very fine lot of American educators and missionaries in Nanking, and indeed all over China. They have a national teachers' college with ample grounds, and at 4 p. m. we visited the students in a huge temporary assembly room on the campus constructed especially for the occasion of poles and matting. Its magnitude may be judged by the fact that it was about 300 feet long, about 150 feet wide, and the top 40 feet high, and there were not less than 4,000 students present, who are preparing to teach all over China, when we entered. Not a single nail was employed in the building. There were some young women, but mostly young men. Nearly all these with banners were at the railway station when we arrived. Their earnestness and eagerness and their enthusiasm for America and their evident belief that our country was China's friend, and capable of all things, was most pathetic and thrilling. This feeling regarding America was manifest all over China. The president of the training college made a fine address of welcome, briefly stating what is being done, and one of our Congressmen responded. They sang a hymn or two splendidly, and we all felt on leaving that a really great and valuable work is being done there.

Although Nanking is quite a large city, it has no good European or American hotels, so the good people improvised the dormitories of the Nanking University into a temporary hotel for our benefit. It being vacation, the students were not there, and we had their rooms. They had sent to Shanghai and obtained 100 little iron beds and mosquito bars and little flat mattresses and pillows about an inch thick, and made of corn husks, I think. We had to divide time with the ladies for the single wash room, and for the first time I shaved without a mirror, and there were some other little experiences that I will not mention. But they did so much for us, with such good humor and kind intentions that I ought not to refer to it at all, except as one of the episodes of the journey. And it was awfully hot, too. Among other things which they brought up from Shanghai were automobiles for the party, there being only 30 in the city.

That night the members of the provincial assembly, which would be comparable to our State legislatures, entertained us at dinner in the hall of the house of representatives, it being the same room in which Sun Yat Sen was inaugurated as the first President of the Republic of China. A very good speech was made by the speaker of the assembly, which was translated into English. The reply of one of our party was translated back into Chinese. These translations doubled the time required and made the speech making after a while something of a terror to everybody but the speakers. I tried to remember this the few times that I spoke. These festivals rarely broke up before 11 or 12 o'clock, and when they did, everyone but the speakers was literally "hanging over the ropes."

After a breakfast in one of the lecture rooms of the college, our party got off for the Ming Tombs, which are a few miles outside the city walls. These tombs are very impressive, because of their great age, their enormous dimensions, and their ornamentation and peculiarity of construction. There are really but three tombs at Nanking, but these are the tombs of the first Emperor of the Ming Dynasty, Hung Hu, and his two successors. The first of these tombs dates from 1393 A. D. The approach to the tombs after passing out of the great wall of the city is by an avenue which leads straight to the tomb entrance. For about a mile the avenue is lined, or guarded apparently, with colossal images cut out of solid granite, of men and various kinds of beasts, commencing with a couple of towers, not unlike Cleopatra's Needle. They are in pairs, each pair of men and beasts being opposite each other, and 300 feet or more from the next couple. As they face each other they are only about 10 or 12 feet apart. The carving is not especially perfect on the horses and the lions, or lion dogs, but is better on the elephants and camels. The horses' legs are thick and clumsy, and their whole contour looks a little jaded, like draft horses after a hard day's work. Another curious feature is that the pairs of animals are alternately kneeling and standing. For instance, one pair of elephants facing each other and kneeling, and the next pair, also elephants, erect. The same with the camels, one pair on their knees, the next pair standing. The men are all erect. They are all colossal in stature, have long beards, heavy swords, rich clothing, and carry a baton in one hand. Then there are some nondescript animals, unlike anything now existing or that probably ever did exist. There are animals part lion and part exaggerated bulldog. These stretch down along the imperial highway nearly to the great entrance to the tombs. Like the palaces and temples, there are several large buildings to be passed through before reaching the tomb proper.

These buildings are as much as 800 to 1,000 feet apart, with broad stone or marble walks leading from one to the other. Each building is reached by flights of stone steps, in the center of which is a marble passage about 8 feet wide, not of steps but of an incline at the same angle as the steps. This marble center was the pathway of royalty, and in imperial days might not be used by common people. It is seen at the entrance to all imperial palaces and places where the Emperor was accustomed to worship. This marble centerpiece is always most elaborately carved, as deep as 2 inches, with a great variety of elaborate designs, the most frequent and notable of which is that of the dragon, which is always writhing in and out of the other designs. As this carving is very old, the marble is worn down some, and the figures are not as distinct as they were when made, but they can be made out very readily.

Returning to the stone images of the men and animals, I was told that their probable meaning was that these magnificent creatures were servants of the great monarch who occupies the tomb, and their purpose was to impress the people with the greatness of the dynasty, which was served by such magnificent statesmen and animals. I repeat the story for what it may be worth. It sounds rather reasonable.

After passing all these preliminary temples and constructions, the tomb itself is in a big hill, perhaps 1,200 feet long and 400 or 500 feet high, which looks like a symmetrical foothill to a high mountain immediately behind it. The hill may be artificial, and I suspect that it is. It is faced by a strong, high wall. Inside this hill lie the remains of the great Hung Hu and his two immediate successors. The hill has never been penetrated, and it is not known what it may contain besides the bones of the dead monarchs, but it is thought that there may be great riches. Although the tombs are not disturbed, there seems to be no great reverence for them. Chinese run up and down on the sculptured marble centerpieces—the imperial highway—on a superstition that it will bring good luck. They also set tables in the temples and served our party with cooling drinks, hot tea, and cakes. This was done everywhere in temples.

Quite near the tombs is a Government agricultural experiment station, of which an American has charge, and he showed us what interesting things were being done along agricultural lines.

After that we returned to the city, attended a chamber of commerce bazaar, and visited the Temple of Confucius. This is an elaborate and beautiful temple of many artistic buildings, such as I have described. It appeared rather neglected, with dust gathering on the images, a condition that marks most of the temples in China.

Our last visit was to a place of intense interest—the examination halls, where under the centuries-old system of classical examinations young men were placed in narrow stone or brick cells for three days and nights, during which time and under which conditions they prepared their examination papers, upon which all their future would depend. There were 27,000 of these cells—some say 30,000—and at stated intervals these were filled with young men to undergo the examinations. They were locked in and not permitted to communicate with each other or with anyone else. The cells, thousands of which remain intact, although a great many have been destroyed, are all alike, about 2½ feet by 4 feet square and less than 6 feet high. I went into one and tried it, and I was a close fit. There was a place in the wall to put a board for a seat and one higher up for another board for a table. Just how they closed the front I could not tell. But they did shut them in, and there was a watch tower in the center overlooking the entire examination halls to see that none of the students should get out or communicate with each other or with anyone else. To remain in those cells for three days and nights must have been a severe test upon the nerves of the students, and on top of that to prepare a thesis and examination papers a difficult task. It is said that only 2,000 or 3,000 out of the 27,000 to 30,000 entrants were accustomed to pass, and that many went insane and occasionally one died in his narrow cell. I can well believe it, as three minutes was enough for me, with the front part of the cell wide open and no examination to worry about. I had to tramp through the weeds to reach the cell, as none of them are in use now, or have been since the institution of the Republic nine years ago.

Before leaving Nanking I should say that it is a city of great historical importance, running back 2,500 years, or to the time of the establishment of the Roman Republic. At various times it has been the capital of China, and its name denotes "the southern capital." It was the scene of much fighting during the revolution, and it was bombarded both by the imperialists and the revolutionists. The city was captured by the Taiping rebels in 1853 and by the British Navy in 1842.

Late in the afternoon we left Nanking, crossed the Yangtze River on a ferryboat, and boarded a new special train, which was to take us through to Peking. It was an excellent train, somewhat better than that which we left. The Yangtze is a noble river, and at this point much reminds one of the Mississippi in its lower reaches. Its muddy waters are of the same color.

THE SACRED MOUNTAIN OF TAI-SHAN.

The morning of Thursday, August 12, found us at the small town of Tai-an, which is the nearest point to the sacred mountain of Tai-Shan. The summit of the mountain, which is referred to several times in the writings of Confucius, is said to have been a favorite resort of the great philosopher for contemplation. For several hundred years it has been the object of the pilgrimages of hundreds of the disciples of Confucius and others. There are several temples on the top of the mountain, which is about 5,000 feet above sea level and 4,500 above the railway station of Tai-an. This is in the celebrated Province of Shantung, where Confucius was born, lived, and was buried. The distance is said to be 13 miles from the station to the top of the mountain, but I should judge it to be somewhat less.

The method of conveyance and the character of the road traveled are most surprising. Rickshas can not go over the road, and wagons and autos still less so. So there is nothing to it but to be carried by men in so-called sedan chairs or litters. When we reached the station at 9 in the morning of August 12 we found just outside 60 or 70 of these chairs—enough for our party and the Chinese officials accompanying us—and fully three or four times as many sturdy Chinese bearers. The chairs were of very crude and simple construction—the seat being made of netted rope—and a top covering of thin cloth on a frame to protect the passengers from the sun, which was extremely hot. The seat would have been very uncomfortable if blankets were not used to cover the ropes.

We went out in a long procession through the narrow streets of the town, lined on each side with the characteristic Chinese shops, our feet hanging down to a sort of stirrup, which is long enough to accommodate both feet. The chairs were more primitive than those in which we rode at Hangchow, and when they were let down to the ground we also were let down flat to mother earth. After passing through the city wall, we proceeded across a plain about 3 miles and then commenced the ascent of the mountain. At first this was gradual, following up a brisk mountain stream. Soon we entered a canyon, which was precisely like many such that I have traversed in California, the stream marking the bottom of the canyon. The trail or road was a wide one, in excellent repair, and as it grew steeper we commenced to make the raises by steps, formed of rock, mostly granite. These steps at first came in flights of 3, 4, or 5, but they increased rapidly in number as the mountain became steeper, until there would be 10 or 15 at a time, then a level place for a way, and then another flight of steps. These granite steps were from 10 to 15 feet long and about 6 inches high. At first you had a sense of insecurity while being carried up these steps, but the bearers would shift their straps over one instead of both bare shoulders and the passenger would be borne sideways; and the bearers are very sure-footed. They and their forebears are said to have been in this business for generations.

Cedar trees line the way for considerable distances, and the stream that I have mentioned exposed the formations, which consisted of granitic schists with inclusions of quartz, and diorite. On many of the canyon walls large faces of granite had been smoothed off and inscriptions sculptured upon them in Chinese characters. I was told that these inscriptions, which were made by pious persons of means, sometimes exalted the wisdom and virtue of Confucius and sometimes described and lauded some conspicuous beauty of nature close by, such as the bald canyon wall itself or some fair view, or the loveliness of the mountain stream. There were many small shrines and inscriptions along the way and quite a number of places where pilgrims and bearers might obtain refreshments of tea and coarse bread. At a tea house of better character, about halfway, we all had luncheon. A number of the party turned back here and returned to Tai-an, the heat and discomfort being too great for them.

One of the sights along this holy way, and a distressing sight it is, is the beggars—men, women, and children, with all manner of human afflictions. They expose their diseased and deformed bodies and limbs in the most horrible way in order to excite compassion. Beggars you see all over China, and they even have beggars' guilds that regulate the industry. If a merchant in a city refuses to give anything, they discipline him by keeping great numbers of their guild in front of his place of business until his customers will no longer go there, thus ruining his business.

As we approached nearer the top of the mountain the grade became steeper and the steps almost continuous. For the last half mile before reaching a great entrance gate they are absolutely continuous. Altogether the raise equals 4,500 feet vertically and there are 7,500 stone steps. When it is considered that this highway has been in constant use from a time several hundred years before the time of Christ it is astonishing that the trail is so good as it is. Thousands of devout pilgrims have gone over these rocks on their hands and knees, and the stairs show the wear from these and from the thousands of bare feet that have climbed them. For the last 400 or 500 feet at the top on each side of the trail great chains attached to iron posts of evident age—they being considerably decomposed by rust—were doubtless placed there to enable pilgrims to assist themselves by pulling themselves up with their hands. The granite steps are much more worn along the outer edges next to the chains than elsewhere, significantly showing that the chains have been thus used to such an extent that the bodies of pilgrims have perceptibly worn down the solid granite.

After passing the great gate at the head of the pass the holy way continues and there is still quite a raise before reaching the top of the mountain and a group of temples there devoted to Confucius. Here we had luncheon in one of the temple buildings.

The view from this point is very beautiful, and Confucius was quite right in selecting such a place for solitude and reflection. On one side the mountain drops off very abruptly several thousand feet and an inspiring view is had of the wide and fertile valley below and the Yellow River in the distance, probably 15 miles away. It reminded me greatly of that sightly drive in the mountains above San Bernardino, approaching Squirrel Inn, on the way to Little Bear Lake, and known as "The Rim of the World."

It took us over five hours to go up the Sacred Mountain, but our bearers made the return down trip in three hours. They would fairly trot down those great flights of steps, which they so laboriously climbed in the earlier part of the day.

ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTION AT TSINANFU, CAPITAL OF THE PROVINCE OF SHANTUNG.

At 9 a. m. of Friday, August 13, we reached Tsinanfu, capital of the Province of Shantung, and found a particularly enthusiastic greeting from provincial officials, students, soldiers, and thousands of people. The city has about 300,000 population, and being in Shantung, the Province taken over by Japan as successor of Germany, the people are very much stirred up over the situation in which they find themselves. As the American Senate refused to ratify the clause of the peace treaty which approved the award of Shantung to Japan, the people seemed to entertain a pathetic feeling of gratitude to America, which they lavished upon the visible Members of the American Congress. There is a large Japanese barracks directly opposite the railway station, with a considerable contingent of Japanese troops, but they modestly remained out of sight throughout the stay of the American party in Tsinanfu, and altogether I saw but two Japanese officers on the street and no Japanese soldiers at all. During our entire stay in China the Japanese took no part in the receptions of or entertainment to the party, but reserved their attentions for the time when we should have passed out of Chinese into Japanese controlled territory, that being the railway station at Mukden, Manchuria, when we crossed the station plantform from Chinese soil to Japanese-controlled soil on the other side.

The student movement was particularly noticeable at this capital, although it is a strong patriotic movement everywhere in China. We were expected to arrive at Tsinanfu at 11 p. m., but we laid at Tai-an station until 7 in the morning. The Students' Union and the girls of the normal school, to the number of 3,000 or 4,000, remained at the station in expectation that the train might yet arrive until 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning. They then went to their homes and were back again before our train arrived, which was about 9 o'clock in the morning. We went all over the city and visited a garden attached to the municipal buildings, a sort of park, and afterwards the Shantung Christian University, a very fine institution of learning, supported by the various denominations and ably conducted by a cultured Englishman. We made a hurried examination of the museum of the university, which was large and most interesting.

From the university we were taken to the governor's yamen, where we were formally received by the military governor, Tien, and the civil governor, Chu. Afterwards we had tiffin in the palace. Then we went to a military compound, at the invitation of Gen. Ma Liang, who figured prominently in the very recent military struggles about Pekin. Gen. Ma looks like a soldier, and has had much to do with installing in his army a system of military athletics of a very vigorous character. About 50 or 60 men participated, all commissioned officers. There was a peculiar kind of boxing, which employs the feet as well as the hands; wrestling, something like the Cornish kind, but with a jiujitsu addition, which compels the vanquished to flop or have his arm twisted off; fights between men with swords against spears and with short knives against both. Then a man with a sledge hammer broke a slab of hard rock, 7 or 8 inches thick, which rested on a man's back, and others broke heavy pottery on men's heads. It was a wonderful exhibition of skill and endurance. Gen. Ma is said to be a devoted Mohammedan, and he was on the losing side in the recent struggle about Pekin.

Then we had the inevitable tea at the Girls' Normal School, where we were guests, not only of the students but of the chamber of commerce and half a dozen other local organizations.

We then went to Ta Ming Lake, which is a lotus-covered lake many acres in extent, perhaps 100. The flowers were in blossom, and with the elephant-ear leaves the water, which was shallow, was very little in evidence. These great lotus lakes are seen very often in public parks, about palaces, and elsewhere in China.

We boarded wide, flat-bottomed boats, with a canvas top to keep off the sun, and were poled through water channels to a garden with many attractive pleasure buildings on the opposite side. Here another luncheon was spread. We were often given a half dozen of these luncheons a day besides the regular three meals, tea and cakes being the principal feature, but with soda water and lemonade always, and sometimes with other palatable drinks.

That evening the governors had us at dinner, the place selected being the largest Chinese theater, and a play, with acrobatic performances and other forms of entertainment, was given during the dinner. It was after 11 when the party returned to the train, thoroughly tired after a fearfully hot and most strenuous but interesting day.

The capital of Shantung will always be remembered for its patriotism to China, its affection for America, and for its generous hospitality. The civil governor, in his address at tiffin, wanted the United States "to adopt a definite policy toward China."

During the night we proceeded northward, and at about 9.30 a. m. arrived at Tientsin, a city of nearly a million and a half of people. We were met by the usual hospitable officials, bands, bodies of soldiers, and by Col. Morrow, of the Fifteenth United States Infantry, and officers of his staff, their regiment being stationed at Tientsin. We stayed only a short time, as we would pass this city again after our visit to Peking, and would give it a short visit again.

There had been considerable lack of rainfall in northern China, and the crops did not look so well as they did in the southern part. It was said that this will result in great suffering and hunger this winter.

There was a constant repetition of the evidences of good feeling the Chinese entertained toward this great country.

As an illustration, they had taught the military bands, of which there are a great many in the country, to play what they supposed to be American airs. We had Senator HARRIS, of Georgia, along with us, and curiously enough two of the airs which the band seemed to like best were "John Brown's Body Lies Amouldering in the Grave" and "Marching Through Georgia." We told Senator HARRIS that this must be a special tribute to him. [Laughter.]

At every station we came to would be the military governor of the Province, the civil governor of the Province——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I have not started yet. [Applause.]

Mr. EAGAN. Does the gentleman want some more time?

Mr. OSBORNE. I would like some more time.

Mr. EAGAN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. OSBORNE. I would like half an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCANDREWS] has 45 minutes remaining.

Mr. EAGAN. I will yield the gentleman 30 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 30 additional minutes.

Mr. OSBORNE. As I was saying, at every station there would be all of these polite officials with a band of music and a company of soldiers who would present arms and officers who would salute, polite people with cards that they wanted to exchange. On one side there would be a place where they served tea and mineral waters and all that sort of thing. They would have those places open whether we stopped or not. I waked up at 11 o'clock, 12 o'clock, 1 o'clock, and one morning at 3 o'clock in the morning hearing the band play "Marching through Georgia." There was the military company and the band and the polite officials when we did not stop at all, and they were staying up until 3 o'clock in the morning to do that courtesy while the party was passing. Very often some of the speeches of these Chinese officials would be very touching, indeed. They would state the very great respect they had for our Government, how the American Government had refused to accept the award that was given during the Boxer troubles when, in fact, that award of some million dollars is being used to send their Chinese students to our educational institutions in this country. There are several hundred here now and they are sending every year several hundred students. They would tell us about that, entertaining the idea that our great country was a country where justice and righteousness prevailed and where we did justice to every man and every nation. They were particularly impressed with the justice of our country toward China itself. They said with their dealings with foreign countries that the United States was the only country that had not taken advantage of them and had not taken from them some of their country, and that that fact endeared our country to them. Often reference was made to the Shantung matter. They were very much interested in the passing of the German title of Shantung to Japan. The fact that one of the branches of this Government had refused to approve the Shantung award seemed to strike them most favorably, and they thought that they had friends in the United States, and in some way they hoped that they could get us to help them out of their troubles. Now, while I am sure I have time I will say one thing. I think it would be great wisdom on the part of our Government to maintain with China that wonderful feeling of friendship which it now entertains for us. It is not limited entirely to political considerations. They want to buy our stuff. There was a great boycott on in China of Japanese goods which pretty nearly paralyzed Japan, because China is their great near-by mart, and I saw one illustration of that. I thought I had it in my pocket, but I have not, and that is a box of matches which were made in Japan. There had been placed on the outside covers, the bottom and top, a label reading "New York cigarettes," they being cigarette matches. One covering had partly come off and showed the Japanese label. The Japanese had labeled the box "New York cigarettes," which gives you an idea of the state of their minds on the boycott. The Chinese want to trade with the United States and can not get the stuff. We have some laws that injuriously affect our foreign trade that ought to be changed. Americans in that country were bringing our attention to it all the time.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. OSBORNE. I do.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to inquire what impression our Christianity has made upon them over there—whether they are still simply idol worshippers—and as to the administration of the laws under the Republic, whether they have prohibition there, and woman suffrage; and if so, how those laws are enforced?

Mr. OSBORNE. The Christian religion is making considerable inroads, but it is small compared with the enormous population. But the missionaries are treated well by the people, and they are making considerable progress. They do not have prohibition or woman suffrage, although they were for a long time in recent years governed by a woman—the Empress Dowager. The Government of the Republic of China is a structurally weak Government. The Government of China was weak as an empire. Their whole atmosphere for several thousand years has tended to that result. One is impressed with the idea that the general belief tends to the doctrine, resist not evil. It is a sort of Quakerlike state of mind that they are in. Their Government is not strong because it is divided up into many Provinces, and the Provinces have a sort of exaggerated "State rights" idea and practice.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. Certainly.

Mr. HICKS. What does the gentleman mean by a "Quaker-like" attitude of mind?

Mr. OSBORNE. Nonresistant. That is the impression made upon me.

Mr. FOCHT. That is the Confucian religion, is it not?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes; that is the result of it. The Confucian religion is a code of ethics, however, rather than a religion.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Did you have any conversation with any of these people in those countries in regard to the proposition of sending our missionaries over there to convert them to the Christian religion, which, of course, means that we will all go to heaven and be in the same place hereafter, and at the same time not permit those people to live with us on this earth? What do you think about the consistency of that? Have you had any conversations with them in regard to it?

Mr. OSBORNE. I had no conversations with them on the subject. However, I will say this, that during all the time I was in China—and while I was there I talked with hundreds of Chinese, with the President of China, governors of Provinces, legislators, and others—and I never heard a complaint from them about the exclusion by this Government of the Chinese coolies; not one single complaint. I believe that they recognize that the laws of the United States excluding Chinese coolies is justifiable.

A WEEK IN PEKING, THE ANCIENT CAPITAL OF CHINA.

We arrived at Peking at 2.30 p. m. of Saturday, August 14, and the entire congressional party were conducted to the Grand Hotel de Peking, where rooms had been reserved for us. This is said to be about the best hotel in the Orient, and it seemed very pleasant to have a good-sized, comfortable room with a regular bath. A middle-aged, dignified Chinaman in a long white robe, a superior kind of nightgown, with two or three younger subordinates, was always on duty in the hallway, subject to call by the bell. This white robe is something like a dress suit in America—it is worn only by gentlemen in full dress and by servants and waiters. There is another garment much in use in the Orient that was new to me. That is the white mess jacket. It is worn with white trousers, is made like the usual dress coat, but it is minus the swallowtails or any other sort, and stops at the hips like an Eton jacket. I first met it in the Philippines, but it is quite generally used throughout the Orient, and looks like it might be very comfortable. The hotel is about five or six stories high, is built of brick, and quite modern in construction. The lobby is very ample, and there are 8 or 10 little stands where Chinese dealers sell curios, silks, and so forth.

We all went in rickshas to the American Legation, where we were given a reception by the United States minister to China, Mr. C. R. Crane. There we met many Americans, some connected with the legation, but more in business or in missionary and educational work. The legation consists of a number of buildings in a walled inclosure, with quite large grounds—not so large as the British, the French, German, and many other legations, all being in the same neighborhood and adjoining each other. In fact, a high wall incloses all the foreign legations and embassies, and this wall, about 25 feet high and 20 feet thick, was the scene of desperate fighting during the Boxer rebellions in 1900, when the German ambassador was killed and the Japanese ambassador wounded.

From the minister's residence we went to Central Park, which was illuminated in honor of the congressional party by the College Clubs of North China, and a buffet supper was served. There was an immense concourse of people, and while our party was seated—it was in the open air under the trees—the great body of people stood. There was a speech of welcome by Dr. Tsur, a very able college president, responded to by Representative HARDY of Texas. Then came wonderful juggling and acrobatics and a funny shadow play something like Punch and Judy.

THE GREAT WALL OF CHINA.

The following morning, Sunday, August 15, we all got up early for a trip to the great wall of China. It was a beautiful, clear morning, though hot. We went by special train due west of Pekin, traveling three hours, but I do not think that the distance is more than 50 miles. We had two very fine private cars, one of which is the personal car of the President of China, Hsu Shih Chang, and the other was the imperial car of the late Empress Dowager. The latter was the more elaborately furnished and decorated car. Yellow—the imperial color—was used in great profusion. The abundant draperies were all in yellow silk, and the chairs were upholstered in that color. There were two or three drawing or sleeping rooms and the balance of the car was thrown into one large and very handsome salon.

To reach the great wall we crossed a wide and fertile valley for 30 or 40 miles, toward a mountain range, and passed many towns and large villages. Soon we entered the foothills, and through winding canyons plunged directly into the mountains, until we reached a station called Nankou. Like all railway stations in China, and also in Japan, even in small places like Nankou there is a long and substantial platform of stone, built up to nearly or altogether the level of the car platform. The Chinese officials had provided a sufficient number of sedan chairs, bearers, donkeys, and drivers to accommodate the party. Amidst a good deal of shouting and talk, without which it does not seem to be the proper thing to start any sort of man-power enterprise in China, some got into the sedan chairs, among them myself, and the younger folks mounted the donkeys, about the size of a burro, and we were off for the great wall, about a mile and a half away. We followed the railroad track a little way, our bearers crossing a railroad bridge on the sleepers where a misstep would have been most disagreeable, and then we branched off into a canyon, between steep, high hills, almost mountains, on a rough, rocky trail. Pack trains of donkeys loaded with loose hay, which takes lots of room on a trail, driven by Chinese coolies with wide-brimmed conical hats, were going in the same direction as ourselves, and made the task of our bearers more difficult, by pushing by with their room-consuming loads, and crowding them off the trail.

We came at last to a great gateway built of stone and brick, 30 or 40 feet high and 60 or 80 feet long. This is called the "Gate of Banishment," and I presume that its name indicates its purpose. The great wall itself is about 500 or 600 feet farther on, with another gate, not so large and striking as the first—this first gate being an "apron" to the real gate—the usual cautious form of entrance. This is in the bottom of the valley or canyon, and through this gate pass the many caravans of camels and horses, laden with goods from the Far East, Mongolia, and Thibet, for the market of Peking. This also was a favorite point of attack upon the wall itself in past centuries of savage tribes from those same distant provinces. They were not always successfully resisted, and the Mongols once captured China and placed a dynasty of their own upon the imperial throne. The people inside the wall were peaceful and industrious agriculturally; those outside were savage and hungry barbarians, to whom the rich and productive fields of the Chinese were an overpowering invitation to ravage and loot. These conditions were those that caused the building of the great wall 2,000 years ago.

From the view which I had at the highest mountain point that I reached I could imagine how the rich garden of China spread out before the eyes of those hungry savages must have looked to them from still greater mountain heights. Looking toward Peking, the view may be compared to that which may be obtained from Mount Lowe or Mount Wilson over the San Gabriel and the Los Angeles Valleys. There is the same fertility and richness of appearance, although, of course, the crops are not the same. The Asiatic savage, however, saw a far more extensive area of productiveness than can be seen from Mount Lowe.

The great wall itself is most impressive, and it is in a remarkable condition of preservation. Of course, it has not been used for defensive purposes for many years. The Chinese themselves invented gunpowder, and that did away with the value of the wall as to its original object. But it is surprising to see how little the main wall is decayed. The top was originally castellated with spaces between the castellations, probably to afford the defenders an opportunity to fire their arrows or spears through the spaces at the enemy and then to dodge behind the castellations themselves. These castellations have largely fallen down, like the chimneys in an earthquake country; but the solid walls themselves are very little breached and stand as firmly as though they had been built a few years ago instead of 20 centuries. One evident reason for this is the engineering skill that devised the walls and located them on the crests of the ridges dividing water sheds, so that no water could get under the foundations and undermine them.

From the "Gate of Banishment" in the valley where we intercepted the wall, it ran up the crest of the ridges in both directions to the tops of the mountains and as far as we could see. The wall does not run exactly straight, but necessarily takes a winding course to keep at the top of the ridges, but its general course at this place is north and south. I got up on the wall—which is not difficult, as there is a sort of inclined runway to the top—and walked a considerable distance on it. Bastions, or watch towers, on the top, which probably sheltered the defending soldiers, occur about every 500 feet, and, while they are not so well preserved as the wall itself, their arches are still intact, and the structures are in a fair state of preservation. The wall at the top at its narrowest parts is 20 feet wide, and it gradually widens toward each bastion to 30 feet and then narrows again and widens toward the next bastion. The filling between the outside walls appears to be rock and earth, with a pavement on top of brick of large size and an earthen color.

One looks at this immense construction with astonishment and awe. When we reflect upon its immensity, and that every mile of its length was a marvelously big project in itself, that it averages about 30 feet in height, almost perpendicular, and that on the low side it is often 50 feet in height, that it was constructed about 200 years before the birth of Christ, when facilities for heavy construction and the handling of great weights were presumptively very inferior to those of the present day, that the great wall is 2,000 miles in length, and that most of it is in rugged and almost inaccessible mountain ranges, we can but be astounded and filled with wonder as to the means and manner in which this incredible work was done and under what genius of engineering.

I took pains to measure the great blocks of granite that constitute the outer facing of the great wall. They are 5 feet in length, 18 inches in thickness, and 3 feet wide. In the distance they look like bricks, and in the mile or so of the wall that I could see there were thousands of these great slabs. How vast a number there must be in the 2,000 miles of length! How did they cut these great blocks from the quarries, and how transport them up the rugged mountain heights and put them in their proper places in the wall?

Where the wall runs steeply up the mountains, the top is frequently built in the form of steps. I noticed that the wall was much higher on one side than on the other where the hill abruptly fell away on the low side, the top maintaining a consistent grade.

Little Chinese boys on top of the wall had their pockets full of arrowheads of metal, which they claimed to have found around the wall, presumably fired in battles in bygone centuries. Some of our party, despite the great heat, made long trips on the wall, and were pretty red and hot when they got back.

Without mishap of any sort we returned to Peking.

SIGHT-SEEING IN PEKING.

Of all the cities of China Peking is the most oriental and most interesting. There is the atmosphere that comes from reading oriental books. Such street scenes as are described in the Bible might well happen here, like that of the beggar and Lazarus. But above all, it is the land of the Arabian Nights. Aladdin and his wonderful lamp would be easily located here, while a Haroun al Raschid undoubtedly would find many wonderful things in his nightly strolls about the narrow streets of the city. Doubtless there are many times Forty Thieves prowling about the city, and if concealed in big jars waiting for the most convenient time to commence their nefarious operations, there is many a gentle Chinese maiden who would not hesitate to fill the jars with hot oil and thus put an end to the 40 careers and the plot to despoil the house and its virtuous owners.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, right there will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Did the party discover any of those thieves behind the counter there as we have them in this country?

Mr. OSBORNE. There were not so many behind the counters in China as we have become accustomed to here at home. [Laughter.]

While we were in Peking a drama of unusual interest was in progress. Shortly before and while we were in the southern part of China several battles had been fought in the neighborhood of Peking and Tientsin, between the troops of the Anfuites, the party then in power in the Chinese Government, and their opponents who claimed that the Anfuite officials were in collusion with the Japanese in despoiling China. The Anfuites were defeated, and their leaders, some of them members of the ministry or cabinet, and other high officials, were at their wits ends to save their lives or at least not be taken prisoners. The American, British, and other foreign legations declined to receive them in asylum, believing that they could not legally do so; but the Japanese ambassador did receive them in the Japanese Embassy buildings—nine of them—and they were cooped up there, but a short distance from our hotel, while we were in Peking. Pictures of the culprits—who but a few days previously were all-powerful in China—ordering their arrest and offering rewards therefor were plastered about the city, some of them close to the Japanese Embassy, and Chinese soldiers were on duty close enough to the gate to see that they did not escape.

Our week in Peking was a most active one, as there are so many interesting things to see, and our Chinese and American friends desired us to see as many of them as possible. On Monday, August 16, we were taken to the legation to see an inspection of the legation guard of marines. It looked pretty good to see a smart body of American marines, with the American flag at their head, going through their evolutions on a smooth parade ground in this distant part of the world. Minister Crane and the legation staff were present. After the parade we inspected the barracks—all inside the American compound—and found them airy and comfortable and spick and span. The men stand at "attention" when visitors go through their barracks, but that did not prevent me from speaking to several of them.

We then went up on the wall that encircles all the foreign legations, and walked along the wall about a mile. It is about 20 feet high and pretty nearly that width at the top. There is considerable vegetable growth on the top except in front of the American legation where it is kept clear of all weeds.

Our autos met us when we came down from the wall, and we were taken to a wonderful structure and attendant buildings in the middle of a great park called—

"THE TEMPLE OF HEAVEN."

At the first gate to the park we were stopped by the guards who evidently expected us to all get out and walk through the park. It was very hot and on request we continued in the machines through a great park of very old arbor vitæ trees.

The most notable building in this temple is the central one, that in which the Emperor was accustomed to offer prayers for good crops at least once a year. A Chinese friend translated the meaning of its name for me as "The Praying for Good Year Place." In case of severe drought it was also the custom of the Emperor to repair to this beautiful temple, with all possible pomp and ceremony, and pray for rain. As rain usually comes after long drought, his prayers were nearly always favorably answered. So the natives had great faith in his efficacy, and it is said this year, when there is quite a drought in the north of China, many of the suffering farmer folk mourn the fact that there is no Emperor to pray for rain.

The two features that constitute this temple one of the most beautiful structures that I have ever seen are its wonderful coloring and its exquisite symmetry. Perhaps it should be stated the other way, but as one approaches the temple and obtains the first glimpse of it through the archway of an intervening structure, this marvelous coloring first attracts the eye, and the architectural symmetry is only observed after passing through the arch. I have an insufficient knowledge of the details of architecture to properly describe it, and can only say that it was so charming and pleasing to the eye that I could not see in what respect it might be improved. It is not a large building, but its proportions are extremely pleasing. The coloring of the outside of the temple, which is very ornate, is a blending or combination of lapis lazuli blue and gold.

The building is approached by three marble terraces or stages, which are circular and extend completely around the building. Each terrace has a marble fence, it might be called, or balustrade, exquisitely carved, and the terraces are about 5 or 6 feet above each other. The main approach is by a wide marble walk, the central 4 or 5 feet of which is elaborately carved with dragons and other objects, and which runs at an incline on reaching the steps. This central marble pathway was reserved for the Emperor, and none but royalty were permitted to walk on it.

The inside of the "Praying Place" is as beautiful as the outside. The general effect of the coloring is similar and very harmonious, but there are a greater number of colors used.

The temple is pagoda-shaped—round—and the interior is even more beautiful than the exterior. I noticed in the color scheme gold, blue, green, red, and purple in various tints. There is an immense amount of carving of most elaborate designs, upon which this coloring is lavished. There are 15 tall pillars, of great height and size, colored a dark red, ornamented with gold, the interior four pillars being of immense size. There was a throne in the center on a raised platform, where the Emperor prayed, reached by nine marble steps. Red and gold figured more extensively about the dais of the throne. At the foot of the steps was a circular piece of marble, which was called "The center of the world," everything being presumed to radiate from this point on the world's surface. Another curious fact is that the Temple of Heaven is on a straight line and exactly opposite the Emperor's throne in the Imperial Palace in the Forbidden City, 3 or 4 miles away, on the opposite side of the city. An avenue runs directly through the city, from one end to the other. The Chinese are remarkable in their conception and execution of great plans of construction, of which the Temple of Heaven and its relation to the imperial palaces of the Forbidden City is a conspicuous example. I was greatly impressed with the beauty and grandeur of the Temple of Heaven and wish that I could give you a more adequate description of it than is conveyed in this imperfect sketch.

With others of the party I had tiffin, which is the oriental for luncheon, at the legation with the first secretary—Mr. Ruddock—and his wife.

In the evening we all dined with the Chinese minister of foreign affairs at the foreign office, a very fine affair, attended by the principal officers of the Chinese Government and their wives and daughters and by the American colony.

Tuesday, August 17, was spent in sightseeing. We visited the Llama Temple, which is an ancient and very beautiful temple; Coal Hill, which is an artificial hill in the imperial gardens in the Forbidden City, originally built to hide a supply of coal when the city was threatened with a siege a long time ago. Now it is crowned with a beautiful temple, colored a peacock green and yellow. We also went to Baihia, the imperial garden, in one of the many buildings of which we attended a reception given to the party by the President of China, Hsu-Shih-Chang. The President is about 65 years old; weighs about 180 pounds; has a very gray mustache, a kindly face, and is somewhat bent. He wore a Chinese costume with a sort of black silk blouse or short coat. After being introduced, I talked a little with the President through an interpreter. His wife, a little woman plainly dressed and but little younger than the President, and their two young daughters were also present, and we were all introduced to them.

I shall not attempt to describe all these wonderful and beautiful temples, but I will briefly speak of two, the Temple of Confucius and the Llama Temple.

THE TEMPLE OF CONFUCIUS

is a very stately edifice, but of marked simplicity. In the central hall are the tables and tablets of Confucius, which have been the objects of worship of thousands of pilgrims. In one courtyard of this temple are 10 celebrated stone drums, bearing poetical inscriptions commemorative of the hunting expeditions of one King Shun, who reigned from 827 to 781 B. C., and in another is a series of stone tables on which are inscribed the names of men who attained the highest literary degree for the last five centuries.

THE LLAMA TEMPLE.

This temple, situated in the Tartar city, is in a well-preserved condition, although it shows signs of age. Some of the monks or "Llamas" were in attendance. They dress in picturesque costumes and are presumed to lead the lives of hermits, spending their time in meditation and worship.

One evening we were given a regular Chinese dinner, with bird's-nest soup, shark's fins, and all the Chinese delicacies, followed by a Chinese theater party. It was very hot and we sat in a garden in the open air, the stage only being under cover and inclosed. The stage was hung with very rich and gorgeous curtains, but there was no scenery. There were at all times three or four and sometimes more attendants on the stage assisting the actors in one way and another with their costumes and properties, but they are not supposed to be seen. The most vigorous and exciting military struggles may be in progress, accompanied by the full strength of the orchestra in producing piercing and blood-curdling sounds, and the attendants go about in the most matter-of-fact way in the performance of their duties. All this is quite surprising to an occidental theater goer. The play that we saw was historical, and the principal actor, Mei San Fang, a man who took a woman's part, was said to be the most popular and high-priced artist in China. He took the woman's part admirably. The villain was a most ferocious villain, and everyone could tell at once that he was a villain all right, as his face was painted black. Thus no room is left for doubt as to the villain's real character. Similarly, the good man in the play is painted white, and there you are.

The hosts at this Chinese dinner and theater party were very influential Chinese gentlemen, and included Dr. W. W. Yen, Mr. Chow Tsu-chi, Admiral Tsai Ting-Kan, Dr. Wang Chung-hui, and Admiral Hsu Chen-ping.

THE SUMMER PALACE.

On Wednesday, August 18, our party visited the beautiful summer palace, erected under such unfortunate conditions by the late Empress Dowager. This summer palace, the extensive grounds of which embrace a beautiful lake 2 or 3 miles long and a mile wide, was destroyed by the British under Lord Elgin in 1860, to punish the Chinese for imprisoning Sir Henry Parkes, who had gone to Peking to negotiate a peace treaty. I saw the foundations of the destroyed palace building which are not on precisely the same site as those erected by the Dowager Empress. These are on the side of a range of hills overlooking the lake, and in a much more imposing position.

The summer palace is 11 or 12 miles outside Peking, in a northwest direction, reached by a good macadamized road, suitable for automobiles. We passed through several large villages or small towns, with the usual swarming activity of small, open-front shops, and the streets filled with transportation traffic, for the most part handled by man power, either borne on men's shoulders, suspended from bamboo poles, or on high wheelbarrows or two-wheeled carts. We passed the foundations of the old summer palace, acres in extent, which were all that were left by Lord Elgin in his work of destruction, which are situated on the plain before reaching the present summer palace, or palaces, on the hills, for there are a large number of beautiful buildings. We entered the palace grounds, which were never opened to the public until 1914, through a large and beautiful "pailou," or gate, with three arches and a marvelously carved and colored structure above the panels. There is a roof, or more properly there are several roofs, on the ridges of which are a number of miniature images of wild animals, lions, tigers, and so forth, and a large hen with the figure of a man on her back. These same figures are very frequently seen on the roofs of palaces and other public buildings in China, and I learned at the Rockefeller Foundation, where they are erecting buildings in the Chinese style and where the ridges of the buildings are ornamented with these same figures, their story and significance. It appears that many centuries ago there was a very wicked Emperor in China who delighted in oppressing his people. He was never so well pleased as when he had devised and put into execution some new method of torture or murder. His soldiers were taught to belabor the people with their swords, to loot their houses, to mistreat their women, to maim and wound the children, and even to massacre the populations of whole towns and villages. This oppression finally became so bad that the people revolted and drove the wicked Emperor from his imperial city into the forest, where he lived for many years. But even that did not cure him of his wickedness and his desire to inflict pain. In the forest his only neighbors were the animals—the wolves, the tigers, and the lions—and he found ways to be cruel to them. He would through his cunning find their homes and capture their baby lions and tigers and wolves and carry them off and torture them, so that their cries would be most distressing to their parents, and finally he would kill them. This went on for some time, until the animals could bear it no longer. So they all got together and drove the wicked Emperor out of the forest, he being unfit to occupy it with them.

It is doubtful if he would have succeeded in getting out at all had he not in his flight, closely pursued by the animals, encountered a large and swift hen. He quickly got on her back and rode off, the animals keeping up their pursuit. It is to commemorate this event that the procession appears on the ridges of the roofs of the palaces in China, and I presume that it was intended to remind succeeding emperors that they must not be wicked and oppressive to their people, under penalty of being driven out of the country on the back of a hen. Whether the wicked Emperor really succeeded in getting away and saving his life through the kindly efforts of the hen I was not told. It will always be a question with me, as I would think that the lions, the tigers, and the wolves, being so swift, could catch a hen, no matter how big she was or how fast she could run. But on the roofs of China she is always well in the lead and apparently about to jump off the roof, she being close to the edge, with the wicked Emperor on her back.

But now that we have passed through the wonderful gate let us look around at the Summer Palace. First we went to a landing at the lake, where three or four houseboats were ready for our party, and were rowed or poled through acres of lotus plants with thousands of blossoms into the open lake and across to a temple directly opposite and about a mile away from the Summer Palace proper. The buildings, which are very beautiful, are situated on a fine hill, which rises quite abruptly from the lake. This is called "The Hill of Longevity," or "The Hill of Long Life." This is only one of a series of hills that extend around the lake. Temples and pagodas are frequent on these hills, usually erected in sightly places. One of these is the "Jade Fountain," where there are numerous springs of pure water. Why it is called "Jade" I do not know.

The lake itself is a fine body of water and is the center of the attractions of the Summer Palace. There is a little island out from the shore, to which a beautiful camel-back bridge is built, called "The Bridge of Seventeen Arches," its construction being of white marble.

There is also a marble ship, to which we recrossed the lake and which we visited. Many functions are given on this ship, which has two decks but which has never floated. In fact, it is not only firmly attached to the shore, but it has a firm rock foundation in the bottom of the lake, which, by the way, is called "The Kun-Ming Lake." The palaces are roofed with yellow and green tiles. The emerald green of the hills and valleys, the beauty of the lake, the artistic and unique architecture of the palaces, the marble boat, and the bridges all combine to make the Summer Palace one of the beauty places of the earth. The Dowager Empress evolved a marvelous combination of nature and art, at a vast expenditure of national funds—said to be not less than $50,000,000 or $60,000,000—but in doing so she betrayed her country into the hands of its enemies. This vast sum of money was placed at her disposal for the purpose of building up the navy of China and to make it equal to modern requirements. Instead she used it to build the Summer Palace. In a short time war broke out between China and Japan—China without a navy, Japan with a very good one. The result was not long in doubt, and China lost a great war, partly, if not altogether, because of the pride and folly of a foolish woman.

TWENTY-SEVEN YEARS' WORK.

On our return from the Summer Palace we visited the Tsing Hua College, which has 700 or 800 Chinese students, who are preparing to become teachers or professional or business men. The college grounds and some of the buildings were once the palace of a Chinese prince. It was vacation time, but several of the students were there, and they were a bright lot of young men and women.

I met there Dr. Chauncey Goodrich, who has lived in China over 50 years as a missionary, teacher, and translator. Dr. Goodrich, with assistants, made a complete translation of the Bible—Old and New Testament—from English into Chinese. The work, which was completed two years ago, took 27 years. The result is now in printed form. Our party had a delightful visit with Dr. Goodrich, who is a mild, modest, scholarly man, a native of Boston, whence he came to China when a young man. We also met his good wife, who has been his constant companion in his great work.

THE TRAGEDY OF OUR JOURNEY.

A feeling of great depression rested on the congressional party all this day. In the morning we were shocked beyond measure to learn that Ida May Vare, one of the daughters of Congressman VARE, of Pennsylvania, who with her sister Beatrice had been ill with tonsillitis since our arrival in Peking, had passed away at 4 in the morning. Both girls had had a severe fever, which had been very persistent, and Mr. VARE was greatly worried, and had had the best physicians in Peking in consultation. We did not look for a fatal ending, however. We had solemn funeral services in the American Legation at 6 in the afternoon, the casket being covered with floral pieces.

OPIUM IN CHINA.

This evening our congressional party received a delegation of the International Anti-Opium Society at our hotel—the Grand Hotel de Peking. It appears that while it was supposed a few years ago that opium traffic in China had been stamped out, it has been renewed through dealers from Japan, and that it is again getting a strong foothold throughout the country. The situation was intelligently presented by British and American gentleman and Admiral Wu of the Chinese Navy.

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION SCHOOL.

On the morning of Thursday, August 19, we visited the Rockefeller Foundation Medical School, many of the buildings of which are in course of construction. Chinese architecture is being used with wonderful effect. The tiling of the roofs is green instead of the yellow which is the attractive and distinguishing color of all imperial buildings. The green roofs, so extensive in number and area, can be seen from all high points. The school will doubtless be the best medical school in China, and can not fail to do much good in studying and combating the peculiar diseases of the Orient. Dr. H. S. Hamilton, a capable American, is in charge. Seven million dollars is being expended on the site and buildings.

THE FORBIDDEN CITY.

From the foundation we were taken to the Forbidden City, from which until recent years all common people were excluded. The high wall is still around the Forbidden City, and it can be entered only at the gates, where soldiers are stationed. The tiled roofs of all the buildings are of the imperial yellow. There are literally hundreds of fine buildings in this great inclosure, with marble walks from one to another. We visited the throne room, probably the most magnificent of all. In this throne room it was the custom of the Emperor to receive in audience ambassadors from foreign countries and other very distinguished visitors. It is a wonderful room, magnificent and symmetrical in proportions and brilliant and harmonious in coloring. The roof is supported by great numbers of pillars, 40 or 50 feet in height, all colored a deep red. The throne itself is intact, much gold and blue appearing in the colors. All through the Forbidden City are great numbers of miniature landscape gardens.

One of the great sights in the Forbidden City is the National Museum, and our congressional party was specially favored by being permitted to visit it. The exhibits are in three buildings and consist of collections of Chinese antiques made through many generations by the Emperors of the Manchu dynasty. They are closely guarded because of their great value, which is estimated at not less than $30,000,000. The collection consists of the finest and rarest specimens of porcelain, cloisonné, jade, bronze, and other valuable antiques, including the property of former Emperors of China brought to Peking from the palaces at Mukden and Jehol. Our visit of a couple of hours was much too brief.

The Chamber of Commerce of Peking was our host at a luncheon given at a palace known as the Chun Hsin Tuin. I was designated to respond to the address of welcome, which was made by the president of the Peking chamber in Chinese and translated. My response also was translated into Chinese. I made the subject of commerce between the two nations my theme.

While at the throne room the palace now occupied by the boy Emperor was pointed out to us, only a few feet away. The lad is now 13 years of age and is being educated by excellent tutors. The Chinese are a curious people—a Republic which carefully brings up and educates one who may in the future get into power and punish its leaders. He lives isolated and must be a lonely little chap.

This evening the legislators only were invited to dinner by the American minister, Mr. C. R. Crane, at the legation. He gave us much information on current events in China, which of late have been very exciting. We were much interested in the narrative of the military attaché of the legation, who had just returned from the rescue of an American missionary from a noted bandit chief in a western Province of China.

Friday, August 20, was our last full day in Peking, and our good Chinese hosts had thoughtfully left it free from engagements. Thus we could devote the day to whatever each individual might desire. Some went shopping, purchasing souvenirs for the folks at home; some devoted the day to farewell calls on the American officials and other friends in Peking.

DEPARTURE FROM PEKING.

On Saturday morning, August 21, all were up early about the Grand Hotel. It was the first cool morning that we had experienced since leaving San Francisco.

We were soon at the Chienmen Station, which is near the great gate to the city of the same name. Many of our Chinese hosts were assembled there to see us off. An excellent special train was ready, the same that we had used since leaving Nanking. The good-byes were soon said, and we were rolling out of one of the most interesting cities of the world. Here history goes back so far that they refer to centuries as we at home refer to decades. With us the time of Christ, less than 2,000 years ago, seems very remote. In China the records for 4,000 or 5,000 years are quite definite and authentic, and it is not uncommon to see in temples, palaces, and museums pictures and objects that date back several hundred years before the Christian era. To an American it gives a sense of world age never before fully realized.

It is about four hours' travel between Peking and Tientsin, through a rich agricultural country. This year there has been a lack of rain, and the crops are very short. Only three or four weeks ago there was much fighting in this territory between the Anfu faction, then in control of the Peking government, and their opponents, headed by Gen. Chang Tso Lin, military governor of the Province of Chihli. This general has had wonderful success. It is said that but a few years ago he was a bandit, with but 15 followers. He now has a large army, variously estimated at from 200,000 to 500,000 men, and has developed not only a capacity for leadership but a sense of justice and good sense quite remarkable in a man of such cloudy beginnings. He is now regarded as the chief military hope of China. Curiously enough, he is a man of frail physique and in poor health. His recent return to Mukden after his successful campaign against the Anfuites was celebrated in that ancient capital with a procession and reception as grand as those formerly given to emperors.

ELEVEN BUSY HOURS IN TIENTSIN.

We arrived at Tientsin a little before noon. The governor and officials of the provincial government, and Col. Morrow, commander of the Fifteenth United States Infantry, stationed here, met us at one station and escorted us to the East Station. We were taken to the American-British-Chinese Club, in a fine building formerly occupied by a wealthy German club, and entertained at luncheon by the American Chamber of Commerce of Tientsin. In every large city in the Orient we found American merchants and business men highly respected and a splendid body of men, pioneers in American commerce, devoted to and enthusiastic for their own country, and doing it credit in every way. At Tientsin this was particularly noticeable. Tientsin is a great commercial and manufacturing city, and one of the seaport gates to China. It has a population of a million and a half and is noticeably cosmopolitan, due to the presence of garrisons of troops of several nationalities. This arrangement was made with China after the Boxer troubles of 1900, when the foreign legations at Peking were attacked by the Boxers and the German ambassador killed and the Japanese ambassador wounded. Tientsin is so close to Peking that troops stationed there would be immediately available in the event of future Boxer or other troubles endangering the foreign legations. So land was set aside at Tientsin for American, British, French, and German troops, and I think Italian also. We have the Fifteenth Infantry there. So Tientsin has military officers of all these nationalities present at all times—except the Germans, of course. Their embassies and clubhouses are vacant all over the Orient, where they were very strong up to 1914. They have paid dearly all over the world for their wicked folly and ambition for world conquest.

At 4 p. m. we had a reception and tea with the A B C Club, the officials of the provincial assembly and government, and other Chinese local organizations.

At 6.30 we were taken to the palace of one of the most distinguished citizens of China and a former President of the Chinese Republic, Mr. Li Yuan Hung. We spent an hour and a half about the extensive houses and grounds, were received by the former President and his wife and children, one a fine appearing young man, the others nice, modest girls. Mr. Li (pronounced Lee) is very highly regarded and impressed our people most favorably. It is said that he is likely to be called to the presidency again. He is very wealthy, engaged in coal mining.

From ex-President Li's home we were taken to a large café called the Empire, where we were his guests at dinner. It was a very elaborate affair. Mr. Li made a speech in Chinese, which was translated. It was full of good sense and good feeling toward America. Mr. SMALL responded. We finished just in time to get our train, which left at 11 p. m. During the afternoon we had an extensive drive about the city with Col. Morrow, who showed us the residences of his officers outside the city in undesirable houses difficult to rent, and thus available for the officers, as their pay is not sufficient to permit them to live in good houses in the city.

A SUNDAY AT THE SEASHORE.

On Sunday morning, August 22, our train drew into the station at Peitaiho (pronounced Petey-ho). From the train windows we could see the waters of the grand old Pacific Ocean, which we had missed for some time, or, rather, the Gulf of Chihli, which opens on the Pacific. Peitaiho is nearly opposite Fort Arthur, about 100 miles east. It is a really beautiful seaside resort where many wealthy people of Peking and Tientsin have their summer homes. At the train to meet and welcome us were as usual the company of soldiers at attention, the provincial officials, the chief magistrate, a number of American residents, and about 100 little boys in khaki from various schools in the neighborhood, all about 12 years old. I was asked to give the boys a talk, which I did. They were in line like a company of soldiers. I told them that we had come from a country far across the sea, where we had many school children like them. That we were greatly pleased that they had taken the trouble to get up early in the morning and come down to the railway station to make the Americans welcome. That we hoped they would give earnest attention to their studies in school, so that they should learn to become good and useful men. That in a few years they and other children like them throughout China would be called to the duties and responsibilities of the men of to-day, and I hoped that they would be so well educated both in books and in morals and religion that they would assist in making their great country even better and stronger than it is to-day. My talk was translated to them, and they seemed to understand it, partially at least. Their teachers, all Chinese, thanked me.

We were taken in a long procession in jinrikishas up a bluff to the residence of an American dentist, Dr. Nye, from Boston, who has lived out there a great many years. Here, overlooking the beach and the sea, we made our headquarters for the day. Most of the people went bathing. There is some surf with rafts for swimmers a little way out.

About 4 o'clock we attended a meeting of teachers and missionaries from all over China—mostly Chinese—in a temple open on all sides. There were several hundred present. They had a choir that sang familiar hymns in Chinese, very sweetly, too. It was impressive to see how intensely expectant they were of something wonderful coming out of America to save their country from the dangers that threaten it. This feeling was manifest all over China. Representative HARDY of Texas made them an excellent and eloquent address.

Later, at 6 p. m., again in jinrikishas, we were taken a couple of miles to the estate of a Chinese gentleman of wealth, formerly a Minister of the Interior, Chu Chi Chuen. It is on a high table-land, overlooking and sloping toward the ocean, and Mr. Chu has laid it out most artistically, like a park, with many winding roads. There are several hundred acres in the estate. Mr. Chu, before the light supper in the open air which he had provided, made an address of welcome, and I was called on to respond. I said that I had learned that he, while Minister of the Interior, had taken great interest in the extension of good roads in China. That I had observed that while China was well provided with canals and waterways it was lacking in good roads.

That I hesitated to make a suggestion as to the administration of a country which had endured for more than 4,000 years. But if I were to do so it would be that the construction of good roads and railways were most desirable. My own country had been very active in building good roads during the past 10 or 15 years, and with most excellent results. It enabled the farmer to get his products into the city markets at greatly reduced cost, and at once not only increased the net remuneration to the farmer, but at even a lower price for the product, and reduced the cost to the consumer. That I had been informed that in former times nonaction in road building had been a policy of the Government, on the theory that good roads would facilitate the entrance into the country of foreign armies. While this might be true, on the other side good roads made it possible for armies of defense to rapidly approach the frontiers of the nation, there to meet the enemy before the invaders should have penetrated the country. If this were true, I thought the policy of His Excellency to build as many good roads as possible was the more desirable and statesmanlike one.

A DAY IN MUKDEN, MANCHURIA.

Leaving Peitaiho in the evening we soon passed Shanhaikuan on the shores of the Gulf of Chihli, which is the point which marks the beginning or eastern end of the great wall. The wall commences at the water's edge and thence winds its way westward and southward 2,000 miles. It being night, we could only see the bright electric lights of the town.

In the morning we found our train passing northerly over the plains of Manchuria, which are not so thickly populated or so intensively cultivated as the lands of China proper. Still there are nearly 20,000,000 people in the Province, or an average of 51 people to the square mile, while the United States has but 35. The people are of larger stature than are those of the Provinces south, and they appear to have more horses and cattle to assist them in cultivating the soil. They use the same big two-wheeled carts, many wooden plows, and other heavy and antiquated agricultural implements. The soil seems rich and looks much like that of Kansas and Nebraska, and is well watered. In fact, it has some of the finest agricultural land in the world. They raise wheat, millet, sorghum and maize, tobacco, sugar beets, and fruits. Their largest crop, however, has given our farmers in America some trouble of late years, and that is beans. They raise enormous quantities of them, and I saw great stocks of beans in bags at warehouses at the railway stations and being conveyed thereto. Manchuria can raise beans enough to supply the world, and we will certainly have to raise the tariff bars a little if our American farmers are to continue to raise beans and sell them in the American markets.

Before reaching Mukden at 10 o'clock we passed through a part of the battle field of the great Battle of Mukden, fought between the Russian and the Japanese armies, under Gens. Kuropatkin and Oyama, respectively, a little more than 15 years ago. We came in from the south, and the battle, which was fought over a front of nearly 50 miles, swung north of the city, where it was terminated in favor of the Japanese. This was the last and the decisive battle of the Russo-Japanese War. The armies numbered over 300,000 on each side, or over 600,000 in all, of whom 10,000 were killed on the Russian side and 8,000 on that of the Japanese. This was in the Battle of Mukden alone; but in the campaign about Mukden, lasting three weeks, the Russians lost 97,000 men and the Japanese about half that number.

We pulled into the Mukden railway station at 10 a. m. There are large and convenient station buildings and platforms and a good hotel, all of brick. The railway platform marks the dividing line between Chinese and Japanese jurisdiction, and all we had to do was to walk across the platform to be in Japanese territory. We had been traveling on Chinese Government railways to this point, and on the opposite side of the platform stood the special train of the South Manchurian Railway Co., a Japanese Government railway, for the occupancy of the congressional party, and our luggage was soon transferred to the waiting train and from the jurisdiction of one Government to that of another.

Speaking of railways, this South Manchurian Railway, on which we traveled to the southern extremity of Manchuria and then passing through the entire length of Korea from Antung, at the north, to Fusan, at the south, was the best-built and best-equipped railway that I saw in the Orient. I can say for the Chinese railways, over which we traveled for about 2,500 miles, that they have excellent and substantial roadbeds, ballasted with crushed rock, over which the trains run very smoothly. One feature was especially noticeable. The trains are started without the sudden jerk and yank that so frequently shock us on American railways. Some of our American railway engineers could take a profitable lesson from those of China and Japan in that respect. I do not remember to have experienced a spine-dislocating train jerk either in China or Japan.

The equipment of the Chinese railways is not quite so good as that of the South Manchuria. The train on which we rode would compare favorably for comfort and elegance with any on the best railways in America.

Although we at once transferred our luggage to the apartments that had been assigned us on the Japanese side of the platform, our Chinese hosts, some of whom had been with us from the time of our arrival at Shanghai, three weeks previously, did not release us until 4 in the afternoon. The Japanese welcoming committee, officers of the Imperial Diet of Japan, which corresponds to our Congress, scrupulously refrained from mixing in with the Chinese plans. Local Chinese officials welcomed the party to Mukden, which appears to be a city of from 100,000 to 200,000. I was pleased to find that their plans would take us out to the Imperial Manchu Tombs, a few miles out of the city. Having seen the magnificent Ming Tombs at Nanking, I desired to see these.

The city, like most Chinese cities, is surrounded by a high brick wall, about 30 feet high, 16 feet wide at the top, and 26 feet thick at the base. It is 4 miles in circumference and has eight towered gateways. We took a ride about the city in automobiles, and visited the Manchu Palace buildings, which are surrounded by an inside wall. Here the Manchu throne room is still intact, though the buildings generally are in bad repair. Mukden was established in 1260, and was the Manchu capital before they captured China. In 1628 they made it the capital of China, which it remained for 19 years, when the capital was transferred to Peking.

We were taken outside the city walls 4 miles north to the Peiling Tombs. The road in some places was pretty bad, although repairs had been made on it for our special benefit. Every 100 feet or so a Chinese soldier was on duty and would salute as we passed. This road, we were told, was a favorite place with bandits for their operations, and we were shown one clump of trees, as the road emerged from under a railway bridge, where bandits frequently "stood up" travelers. One young Chinese in my machine told me that some years, like this year, the crops were very small, and the people likely to starve. After stating the distressing situation, he turned and appealed to me, "What else can they do but be bandits?"

A magnificent gate opened the way through the wall of the inclosure to the Manchu Tombs. That meant that further locomotion must be on foot. It was a hot day, but the inclosure has many large trees several hundred years old, and the shade was very grateful. Right in the middle of the inclosure, which probably is from a half to three-quarters of a mile square, or perhaps the length might be a mile, the Chinese had constructed a great square tent of matting, within which they had set long tables on which they served a luncheon.

Right in front of this tent was a wide paved avenue more than 100 feet, leading to the entrance to the tomb, on each side of which were replicas of the great stone animals, such as I have heretofore described at the Ming Imperial Tombs at Nanking. There were the elephants, the horses with their big legs, the lion dogs, the camels, and all. They are not, however, so large as those at Nanking, nor so many of them.

There are many beautiful and picturesque buildings inside the inclosure besides the mausoleum itself.

After luncheon we walked about the grounds, and in due time we returned to the city and bade good-by to our Chinese friends, who had been our faithful and devoted guides for so long. Particularly did we regret to part with Dr. Wang Chung-hui, of the Chinese foreign office. At 4 o'clock he and the others left on our special train for the return trip to Peking, and we were received by the Japanese welcoming committee, which at this point included the secretaries of the House of Peers and the House of Representatives of the Imperial Diet, and other Japanese officials.

Thus ended the most interesting visit to and tour of the Republic of China of the congressional party. It extended from August 5, the date of our arrival at Shanghai, to August 23, when at 9 p. m. we left Mukden—19 eventful days. We traveled about 2,500 miles by rail in the interior of the country, the farthest point south being Hangchow, at about the latitude of New Orleans, the farthest point north being Mukden, about the latitude of New York. The farthest point west reached was Nankou, at the great wall, about 50 miles west of Peking.

We were everywhere treated with the utmost consideration by all classes of people. America seemed to be known everywhere, by the poor as well as by those better situated, and that their opinion of our country was most exalted was universally manifest. That America would in some mysterious way right all the wrongs of the world, and particularly those of China, to which the great Republic had always been a friend, was evidently the thought of educated as well as uneducated Chinese. The tenacity of this belief was most pathetic. As the congressional party were the only Americans in sight, we stood with them for the moment as the representatives of a most beneficent and powerful Nation, their friend, and we received many attentions that we would gladly have foregone if we could without wounding their feelings. We were careful on many occasions to disavow any official character to our visit and any significance beyond our personal desire to see their country and to observe its industry and its institutions. That made no difference in the disposition of their hospitality, and they filled every hour with plans for gratifying our desire for information, or with carefully worked out programs of unique entertainment. To say that they were successful up to the limit of our physical strength would be a most conservative statement.

The Chinese are a truly wonderful people, with many national virtues; that is, virtues that characterize them as a people. I shall not attempt an analysis of the Chinese character here, as this is a simple record of personal observations. I will only say that I left China with regret and with a higher opinion of the country and its people than I entertained prior to this visit.

THE TRIP THROUGH SOUTH MANCHURIA AND KOREA.

After bidding good-by to our good Chinese hosts at Mukden the congressional party at once became the guests of officials of the other great power of the Orient—a power which is regarded with considerable distrust if not apprehension by our late hosts of China. A heavy rain set in shortly after the return from the Manchu Tombs. Our Japanese hosts extended a formal welcome at an elaborate banquet at the Yamato Hotel at Mukden.

At 11 p. m. of August 23 we rolled out of the great Mukden station, headed southerly for our trip through South Manchuria and Korea. If you look at your map you will see that Korea lies directly south of Manchuria, and that it is a considerable distance—several hundred miles—from Mukden to Fusan, at the lower or southern end of the Korean Peninsula.

It rained nearly all night, and in the morning we were rolling along through beautiful green hills and valleys, highly cultivated. About 8 o'clock we reached a broad river, which we crossed on a long steel bridge, which I recognized as one that I had often seen pictures of during the Russo-Japanese War, as the bridge across the Yalu River. It was near this point that the great Battle of the Yalu was fought, which also was a victory for the Japanese. The city of Antung, the point of crossing on the Manchurian side, is a large and flourishing city. After crossing the river we were in Korea, that unfortunate country which is the scene of much agitation upon the part of Korean patriots, and of severe repressive measures upon the part of the Japanese military authorities, who have charge of the country. The visit of the American congressional party seems to have been adopted by the Korean patriots as one which might be taken advantage of for making representation to the American Congressmen to show the injustice of the occupation of their country by the Japanese and the severity and injustices of Japanese rule.

Each Congressman received printed communications on the subject long before reaching Korea. In fact, the first communications came at Honolulu, while others were presented at Manila. At Shanghai, where is located the provisional government of Korea, with a president and cabinet ministry, we received many communications of this character. At Peking a request was presented for a formal appearance of representatives of Korea before the party. As we were in no respect an official body, and had no right directly or indirectly to represent the American Congress, we thought it improver to receive them as a body and formally. But we informed them that as individuals we would be glad to have them call upon us. I did receive an hour's visit from a member of the ministry of the provisional government, and his secretary, both able men, and the latter speaking excellent English and acting as interpreter. They explained the entire situation to me from the Korean standpoint. Their wrongs are real and of a most desperate character. But I confess that I am unable to see how they can be remedied. Japan has taken Korea as a part of the Japanese Empire, and it is now as fixedly a part of it as California, Arizona, and New Mexico are a part of the United States. Many of the Koreans are pretty desperate, however, and when I pointed out the hopelessness of the situation to my Korean visitors they said, "Yes; we know of nothing that can be done, except to protest. We can not do otherwise. We will protest until we are all killed."

While our party was in Peking reports were published in the newspapers that cholera was raging in Korea, and was particularly bad at Seoul. Other reports were to the effect that Korean agitators were threatening to do something desperate while the congressional party was in Korea to make trouble between the Japanese and American Governments. It was even intimated that they might try to bomb the party or the train. Some of the Chinese papers commented on these reports to the effect that the Japanese authorities did not desire the congressional party to pass through Korea and were spreading these reports to scare us off. Whatever may have been the facts, the reports made no impression whatever on the party. We knew that there was some cholera, as there is nearly everywhere in the Orient. But we felt sure that the Koreans would not do us the slightest harm. In fact, we knew that, like the Chinese, they regard the United States as their only possible hope. We thought so little of these reports that we never even had a meeting on the subject.

Undoubtedly the Japanese authorities were very desirous that nothing should happen to us in Korea, but whether they really believed that Koreans might do us harm for the purpose of making trouble for the Japanese Government I have not fully determined. At all events, they took a good deal of pains to make sure that we should see as few Koreans as possible. None were permitted to come near the railway stations, and soldiers were in evidence on every hand. Evidently general military orders were out that they should not come within a certain distance of the stations. Thus at every station there were crowds standing to see the train pass, but at a distance of 400 or 500 feet away; sometimes more. Often these crowds would shout and cheer, but evidently they were in approval and not disapproval of our party and our country. At one place a body of several hundred students, with banners on high poles, had regular yell leaders and cheered for a long time while the train stood at the station and until we had proceeded beyond sight and hearing.

Korea is a country of great beauty of landscape, and in many ways reminds one of California. There are not the broad valleys, like the San Joaquin and the Sacramento, the valleys being smaller; more like the Santa Clara valleys—north and south—hills and all being green and fertile. Then there are the higher mountain ranges in the distance, not so high and imposing as the Sierras, but more like the Coast Range. The people wear curious headdresses of plaited straw, black, round, and tall, but not quite so tall as a gentleman's high silk hat. The elderly men and people of consequence are more given to wearing these headdresses, and also long gownlike coats, generally white, that come down below the knees. They give the impression of men of great gravity on dress parade in their nightgowns. The women also dress their hair very high and with peculiar headdress. These headdresses all have some significance, but I did not learn just what it was. They have the appearance of excellent people, and those that we met were generally bright, intellectually; but in Korea, for the reasons that I have stated, we did not meet many. We traveled all day—Tuesday, August 24—through this beautiful country, for which nature has done so much, stopping frequently at well-built stations, at which uniformed soldiers or police were in attendance, with the constant spectacle of crowds of Korean people—men, women, and children—standing off at a distance and looking wistfully at the train. While they occasionally shouted and cheered, more generally they stood in silence, and we could only guess what may have been in their thoughts. But it seemed to me a silent and impressive protest to the foreign occupation of their country, more expressive than words. I doubt if our party would have been so deeply impressed if the Koreans had been permitted to throng the stations and besiege us with verbal and written petitions and protests.

It was after dark when we reached the first station in Seoul—pronounced Soul or Sole—or Keijo, as it is called by the Japanese. Our train was held in this station about half an hour. Then we went on to the main station, where we were received by representatives of the Japanese local authorities. We noticed a good many soldiers about the station and along the streets on our way to the hotel, but everything was as quiet as Sunday at home. The stores were all closed, and there were no crowds on the street.

We afterwards learned that there had been a great deal of excitement among the Koreans about the coming of the congressional party for two or three days; that the Korean shopkeepers had agreed with each other to close their shops while we were in the city—the Koreans said in honor of our coming—the Japanese said in protest against our coming. Several thousand Koreans had assembled about the main station hours before the arrival of our train, but shortly before its arrival the Japanese military forces had compelled them to leave the neighborhood of the station, and all the streets through which the party would pass while en route to the Chosen Hotel, and that we were held at the first station until this order should be carried out. This accounted for the Sabbathlike calm encountered and the absence of anyone on the streets excepting the soldiers, who fairly swarmed along the line.

We found the Chosen Hotel an excellent hostelry, one of the best in the Orient, owned by the South Manchurian Railway Co., or, going further back, by the Japanese Government. It is but fair to say that whatever the Japanese Government undertakes, it does well. There is no doubt that it has instituted great improvements in Korea, well calculated to benefit living conditions. These include better streets and highways in both city and country; far better sanitary conditions, better mail facilities, and better railways. Admiral Saito, the governor general, is admittedly a mild, humane man. The Japanese wonder why the Koreans are not satisfied and call all protestants malcontents and agitators, and they feel justified in treating all so designated with marked severity. These very excellent improvements, however, are made from Korean money, received from taxes upon the Koreans and their industries. Doubtless the Koreans feel that however imperfect may have been their methods of government and administration, it was their own, and they would prefer to correct their own errors or let them go uncorrected than to have it done by a foreign power. The Koreans have a very ancient history and civilization that dates back to 12 centuries before Christ—over 3,000 years. The Hermit Kingdom, as it is called, has had many vicissitudes, the first 1,100 years recognizing a suzerainty to China, then becoming a nation upon its own account. They had many wars from the outside, but always succeeded in maintaining their identity as a nation. The geographical position of Koren is a strategical one, particularly to Japan, and the respective rights of China and Japan was the cause of the Sino-Japanese War in 1894. Japan won, but Russia and Germany prevented Japan from reaping what she considered the fruits of her victory, and this led to the Russo-Japanese War in 1905. Japan, being successful, established a protectorate over Korea, ostensibly in order to protect herself from future aggressions upon the part of Russia. Finally, a few years later, Japan abandoned the protectorate, and by a rescript of the Emperor formally annexed Korea to the Empire. The Koreans as a whole have resented the annexation, and in a serious demonstration at Seoul in 1919 in favor of national independence the Japanese military authorities repressed the uprising by force, and many Koreans were killed. These events have left a very sore feeling in Korea, and I am sure that they give the Japanese much anxiety. This is the situation under which the American congressional party found themselves in Seoul, the capital of the country.

On Wednesday morning, August 25, we enjoyed an auto ride about this most interesting city. The Japanese have really done wonders in the way of public works in Seoul and have made good, wide, and clean streets. Mountain ranges 40 or 50 miles from the city look much like the Sierra Madres from Los Angeles. We visited the former imperial gardens, now a public park, and took tea in an ornate building overlooking a lotus pond and the park, which were very picturesque and attractive, with many outspreading, grand old trees.

We then went to the palace and throne room of the late kings of Korea. While, of course, it is no longer in use, the Japanese have kept it up in all its former magnificence. The throne room is a large one, where royalty was accustomed to receive distinguished people in audience. I would think it 125 feet wide, 250 feet or more long, and 40 feet high. The sculpturing and coloring are very beautiful, gold, pinks, and grays being most noticeable. There are 18 great pillars to the roof of dark ox-blood red. I noted many very large and beautiful screens. Prince Li (Lee) lives at this palace.

At 1 o'clock we were given a reception and tiffin at the hotel by the International Friendly Society of Seoul, which consisted of Japanese, European, and American ladies and gentlemen. At luncheon it was announced that we would receive calls from Japanese and Koreans in the hotel parlor, but no Koreans appeared, or not more than two or three.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. I will.

Mr. RANDALL of California. There has been some publication in this country of a statement relating to an experience Mr. HERSMAN had in Seoul. Will the gentleman give us some account of that?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes; but no doubt Mr. HERSMAN could tell it better than I. The Koreans had arranged a reception for the party.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California 10 minutes more.

Mr. OSBORNE. At 5 o'clock we had a reception and tea as guests of Baron Admiral Saito, governor general of Korea, at the official residence. The admiral is a very benevolent-looking gentleman, rather stout, of about 60. He speaks good English, and I had a talk with him. He had been to Washington many years ago. I later heard of the Hersman episode, and again went to him and told him that I had been told that he had one of our colleagues in jail and that I hoped that he would have him released as soon as possible, as he was not at all dangerous. He laughed, but made no reply, and I am not sure that he then knew the facts. My own information at that time was incorrect, as Mr. HERSMAN was not really in jail and perhaps not in actual or even constructive arrest.

The Hersman episode made quite a stir at Seoul and throughout Japan. It came about in this way: The Koreans had planned a reception to the congressional party, to take place at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium at 3.30 p. m. of the day we were in Seoul (August 25). On this morning, I am informed, the Japanese authorities consented to this reception and stated that they had no objection to it whatever. Later in the forenoon, however, the Japanese recalled their consent and ordered that the reception be not given. Mr. SMALL, our chairman, announced that the Koreans would call on us at the hotel instead. I received a copy of the program of proposed exercises, which seem to have been innocent enough.

The program reads as follows:

PROGRAM.

"America"	The Seoul Band.
Introductory remarks	The chairman.
Address, Welcome	Hon. Yi Sang Chai.
Presentation of souvenir
Response	The guests.
"Auld Lang Syne"	The Seoul Band.

This was all, and it seems scarcely grave enough to constitute an international episode. To this was attached about 140 names, under the heading "Reception committee." The first 10 names will give an idea of the entire list. They are as follows:

Ahn, Kook Sun, director Korean Economic Association.
Byen, Yung Chin, secretary Korean Labor Mutual Aid Association.
Byen, Yungman, lawyer.
Ahai, Ki Dco, secretary People's Society.
Chang, Choon Chai, director Korean Trading Co.
Chang, Do Bin, editor Seoul Magazine.
Chang, Duk Choon, editor Dong-a Daily.
Chang Do, lawyer.
Chang Duk Soo, editor in chief Dong-a Daily.
Chang, Tait Sang, capitalist.

Going through the list, this seems to be a fair sample of the occupations of the signers. There were teachers, preachers, physicians, business men, farmers, and other respectable occupations represented.

Notwithstanding the reception had been called off, many Koreans did not receive the notice, and the Y. M. C. A. auditorium was well filled when the hour arrived.

My colleague, Hon. HUGH S. HERSMAN, of California, although he was aware that the reception had been called off, thought he would drop into the Y. M. C. A. and see how the Koreans looked. Accordingly he rode down the street and walked into the hall. He was cordially received and was asked to make a little talk. This he did. He said that we had been in China and he had been glad to meet the people there. He was now in Korea, and was glad to see the people and look into their eyes. We were going to Japan, and he would be glad to see the people there also. His friendly greetings and best wishes went to the people of Korea. This was the substance of his talk, which was received with applause. When he sat down an elderly Korean made a response, whereupon the audience applauded vigorously. Thereupon a body of Japanese soldiers, or police officers, rushed into the room, placed everybody under arrest, and began to beat up the Koreans. Against this Mr. HERSMAN protested, but without avail. Several Koreans were badly beaten up. Then the officers wished to remove him from the room, but he refused to go unless all the Koreans were released. At first the officers would not do this, and he remained for more than an hour, when the Japanese released the Koreans, and Mr. HERSMAN came away with Mr. Miller, the American consul general at Seoul, and Congressman PORTER, who had just come in.

Mr. HERSMAN undoubtedly thought it was all right to drop into a Y. M. C. A. headquarters anywhere. Whether it was wise for him to go there in the circumstances is a subject for individual opinion; but that he did the courageous and manly thing, like a regular American, after he got into the row, is certain.

At 8 p. m. we took our departure for the south. The Hersman episode appeared to have doubled the show of officers and soldiers on the streets as we rode to the station, but we saw few if any Koreans. Although we spent but three days in Korea, it was sufficiently interesting and strenuous to mark it on our memories for a long time.

CROSSING THE TSUSHIMA STRAITS.

The following morning at 7 o'clock, Thursday, August 26, we reached Fusan, a city of about 65,000 population, at the southeastern extremity of Korea, in a rather sharp rainstorm. The mayor of the city and other officials met us, and were very kind and polite. Fusan is the southern gateway for the commerce of Korea, and is quite a busy city. The railway station would do credit to any city of similar size. It is close to the docks, of which there are two long ones besides many other accommodations for smaller vessels. The entrance to the harbor looks much like the Golden Gate at San Francisco.

We were soon transferred to the Japanese steamship Shiragi Maru, of about 3,500 tons burden, and quickly started out into the harbor to cross the Tsushima Straits, 112 miles wide, to Japan proper. The bay is lined with beautiful green-covered hills, almost mountains. There are two or three small islands just outside the entrance. About 30 or 40 miles out was a large island, reminding me much of Santa Catalina, but far greener in color.

It was in the waters of the Tsushima Straits that the great naval battle was fought between Admiral Togo and the Russian Admiral Rojentsvenski, in which the fleet of the latter was completely destroyed.

AT SHIMONOSEKI AND ON THE INLAND SEA OF JAPAN.

Late in the afternoon of Thursday, August 26, after crossing the historical Tsushima Straits, we sighted land on the Japanese side and were soon in the excellent harbor of Shimonoseki. We were met several miles out by a considerable convoy of launches gaily covered with large and small American and Japanese flags and full of Japanese and Americans belonging to the welcoming committee, who had come out to welcome our party. There was much waving of hats and handkerchiefs. I thought I discovered a familiar figure well in front of the crowd at the landing, and I asked a Japanese near me if that was not Baron Kanda. It was, and I hailed him before we landed. He had changed but little in the 11 years since I had last seen him. He and Count Terashima, of the House of Peers, and three members of the House of Representatives—Mr. Takezawa, Mr. Higushi, and Mr. Tanaka—had come down from Tokyo as a part of the welcoming committee of the Imperial Diet, equivalent to our Congress, to meet the party. All these are very cultivated gentlemen, and all speak good English. We were taken into the Oriental Hotel, which is close to the dock, and served with refreshments, in the meantime being bombarded by a battery of cameras in the hands of newspaper photographers. The Japanese photographers are very adept. They seldom ask you to pose, but just shoot away at any old time. The entire welcoming committee of the Imperial Diet was as follows:

House of Peers: Prince Yoshihisa Tokugawa, Marquis Masaaki Hachisuka, Count Seiichiro Terashima, Count Nagayoshi Ogasawara, Viscount Tadashiro Inouye. Mr. Toshitake Okubo, Baron Naibu Kanda, Baron Tanetaro Megata, Baron Yoshiro Sakatani, Baron Chuzaburo Shiba, Baron Renpei Kondo, Mr. Tetsukichi Kurachi, Mr. Tsukei Sugawara, Mr. Soroku Ehara, and Mr. Eikichi Kamata.

House of Representatives: Mr. Teijiro Yamamoto, Mr. Toshiro Shimada, Mr. Gohei Matsuura, Mr. Kiroku Hayashi, Mr. Fusujiro Ichinomiya, Mr. Motokichi Takahashi, Mr. Koreshige Tsunoda, Mr.

Taichi Takezawa, Mr. Wachi Seki, Mr. Kotaro Mochizuki, Mr. Takeo Tanaka, Mr. Hideo Higuchi, Mr. Etsujiro Uychara, Mr. Shigemasa Sunada, Mr. Minori Matsuda, and Mr. Kosai Inouye.

Baron Kanda made a very clever speech of welcome and I made the response. I was received like an old friend, Baron Kanda having made special reference to my kindness to the commercial commissioners of Japan in 1909, when I spent more than two months with them.

The harbor and city of Shimonoseki were the scene many years ago of a historical incident well remembered in Japan of interest to Americans. It was at a time when the feeling in Japan against all foreigners, following the opening of the country by Commodore Perry, was still very strong. There were several wooden warships in the Shimonoseki Harbor—American, British, French, and possibly others. The Japanese fired upon them from the adjacent hills without, however, doing much, if any, damage, and their fire was soon suppressed. In punishment of this attack Japan was compelled to pay large indemnities in money to the various countries—several millions to each one. This was at a time when Japan was very poor and the payment was difficult. All the nations received their award, but the United States returned its portion—$3,000,000, I think—on the ground that no actual damage had been sustained, and it was expended in bettering the port of Yokohama. This act of our Government gave America great credit for fairness in Japan, which has not altogether worn off yet.

About 9 o'clock we returned to the Shiragi Maru, and during the night traversed the least interesting part of the voyage through the Inland Sea of Japan.

In the morning of Friday, August 27, we were steaming through a most enchanting scene of calm waters, dotted in every direction with islands of emerald green, large and small. Some of the islands rose to heights of 500 to 1,000 feet above the water, and whenever it was possible they were terraced and cultivated to the very top. Not only were they cultivated wherever possible, but to me it seemed that they often accomplished the impossible. Rice was the principal crop, and its very vivid green outlined the cultivated acres, while the terraces looked like successive stairways on the mountain sides, often very close together. Such care to utilize every rod of available soil is noticeable all over Japan.

The Inland Sea is so full of small shipping, generally sailing craft, that it is rare that some of them are not in sight, and often a great many. They are quaint in design, but more have canvas sails than in Chinese waters, where the sails are mainly of matting. There are great numbers of fishing craft, the Japanese waters being very prolific in fish of many varieties and of excellent quality. They fish both with nets and with hook and line.

A DAY ON THE SACRED ISLAND OF MIYAJIMA.

After winding our way among these enchanting islands until about 10 o'clock, we stopped for the day at the "sacred island" of Miyajima (pronounced mee-adj-ee-mah) and the little town and summer resort of the same name, one of the most noted of the many in Japan. Many of these islands have Buddhist and Shinto temples and shrines, and the peculiar gatelike-looking structures, which are often seen in Japanese pictures, called "torii," are often seen on the beaches and along the roadways. I think that "torii" means gate, but they are not real gates in the sense that they open and shut, but they are intended to signify gates, and they have some religious significance as well.

We were transferred from our steamer to a good-sized launch and made the complete circuit of the island, about 10 miles, before landing. It was a most delightful and picturesque trip, notwithstanding much of it was made in a rainstorm. We were well covered, however, and the gentle rain added to the beauty of the scene. While we traveled close to this island we passed dozens of smaller ones, all interesting and beautiful.

A little before noon we landed at the little wharf at Miyajima and walked through the main street parallel with the beach about a mile to the very excellent hotel set in a grove of fine old trees. The street was lined with neat little shops, most of them devoted to the sale of curios, postal cards, pictures, and all sorts of things, but with a sufficient number selling foods, fruits, vegetables, rice cakes, and fish. All the fish were strange to me.

One delightful thing is noticeable all over Japan, that trees are planted, cultivated, and protected in the most careful way, and this must have been done for hundreds of years. Often a tree has stood in the line of an elaborate and costly wall, or perhaps the wall would partially take in the tree. Does the tree come down? Not at all. The wall is built around it, so as to inclose and preserve it, or is partially built around it, as the case may be. This love of trees and the works of nature is most pleasing, and it seems to be a national trait of character. No tree is ever destroyed when it can be preserved.

In the park about the hotel were many deer, quite tame, and so accustomed to being well treated and petted that they would come right up to one to be fed rice cakes, sugar, and dainties.

One of the sacred rules governing Miyajima is that no human being shall be born or shall die on the holy island. This rule is rigidly enforced. Prospective mothers are promptly removed. Death is not so easily controlled. Very sick people are taken away; but I was confidentially told that if the grim reaper stole a march, his victim was not considered legally dead until the remains were well clear of the island.

Along the beach for a couple of miles at regular intervals of about 100 feet were stone structures of pleasing shape that excited my curiosity. They proved to be street or beach lights, but are called "stone lanterns." They are about 4 or 5 feet high and have a little reservoir inside near the top for oil. In the evening we were taken back to the ship by two transfers, first in small launches to a larger one and from the larger launch to the steamer. The town was well illuminated and the hundreds of stone lanterns along the beach were lighted in honor of the Americans. The lights in the town and on the beach, duplicated by the reflections in the water, composed a fairylike scene as we steamed away in the darkness.

IN KOBE AND KYOTO, THE ANCIENT CAPITAL OF JAPAN.

The Inland Sea is about 300 miles long, mainly between the two larger islands of the Japanese Empire, varies in width from 2 or 3 narrow straits to 40 or 50 miles, and laterally extends east and west, or a little northeasterly and southwesterly. The great sea is divided into several smaller seas where the waters widen out, named respectively the Seas of Suo, Iyo, Aki, Huchinada, Bingo, and Harima.

On the morning of Saturday, August 28, we were passing a succession of beautiful green islands. I recall nothing that I have ever seen that in marine scenic beauty quite equals the Inland Sea. The Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence are something like it, but the Japanese islands are more numerous, and their high cultivation and remarkable verdure give them the preference for beauty. We were in this network of fairy islands until about 2 in the afternoon, when we entered the open waters of the Sea of Harima. A couple of hours before dark we sighted many flourishing-looking towns on the main island to the north of our eastward course, and we saw many towns while we were passing through the small islands. The impression is constant of a very great population.

Kobe, which soon came into view, is one of the great seaports of Japan, and a city of about 700,000 population. It has a fine harbor and a long water front of several miles. Passing in front of the city, one sees great shipbuilding and manufacturing plants, and at the Kobe Shipbuilding Co.'s works some of our American freight ships were built under contract during the World War. The showing of shipping in the harbor from all parts of the world was great. There were large crowds to meet us, and as we were working up to the wharf I recognized Mr. T. Tamura, who was one of the Japanese commercial commissioners of 1909 and is now president of the Kobe Chamber of Commerce.

From the steamer we were taken to a hotel close by, passing through the railway station. There we were entertained and dined and photographed by the newspaper men until time for our train to leave for Kyoto, 47 miles away. At about 8 o'clock we went to the train, one running on regular schedule, on which two cars had been reserved for us. This was our first experience on a strictly Japanese railway. They differ from those of the United States in two respects. They are all of narrow gauge, and as the cars are narrow they run long seats on each side of the car, facing inward, from one end to the other, instead of seats across the car, as with us. In nearly all railway trips in Japan that we made, which I think aggregated 1,000 miles or more, we had special cars and were quite comfortable. Nearly if not all regular trains carry first and second class cars, and some third class, with the station of destination, in Japanese and English, posted on the outside.

All have side seats. I have passed through a good many of them, and when crowded they look something like emigrant cars in our own country. Men and women make themselves comfortable by taking off as many clothes as possible, including shoes and sandals and short socks made like mittens, with a separate section for the big toe. This is necessary in order that the sandal may be securely fastened to the foot, the fastening cord passing between the big toe and the four others, which all go in a group together. Some eat from little paper boxes of boiled rice and other food, which is sold by boys on the railway platforms. Others stretch out and sleep. Often I have seen the little Japanese women—all in native dress—sit on their feet on the long bench with their backs to the inside of the car and their heads bent way down into their laps, sleeping soundly. With all sorts of odd-looking bundles and containers, the scene is a striking one to an American who has never seen it before. The Japanese eat fish a great deal, and the smell of different kinds of food in the cars is not appetizing. But there is not the bad odor of bodies that one might anticipate, as the Japanese are, as to their persons, a cleanly people and bathe a great deal. They keep their clothes in good order, and it is remarkable to see in the cities, except among the hardest-working coolies, the cleanliness, neatness, and often the richness of the native dress of all classes of people.

Kobe was only a fishing village up to 50 years ago, when it was opened to commerce. The harbor has been made what it is to-day by dredging and other improvements and even greater are contemplated by the prefectural and national governments.

A JAPANESE GARDEN OF EDEN AND AN ADAM AND EVE.

While it was merely a fishing village, it has a history in Japanese folklore running back to the Japanese Garden of Eden and a Japanese Adam and Eve. The gods placed these progenitors of their race on the island of Awaji, along the shore of which we passed, in sight of Kobe. These two, then the only people in the world, met on the seashore. The woman, Izanami, shouted a greeting to Izanagi. But he was displeased with the woman for speaking first and turned around abruptly and walked around the island until they met again. This time she held her peace and he was satisfied. They created the smaller islands of the Inland Sea by plunging their spears into the sea bottom and pulling them up above the surface. They were the parents of the human race.

We made the 47 miles from Kobe to Kyoto in the evening darkness and could not see the towns or country. But the great number of electric lights in every direction spoke of a dense population in the country, while large concentrated areas of light indicated considerable cities. About midway we stopped at Osaka, which is a city of over 2,000,000 population and exceeded only by Tokyo, which has about 3,000,000. I saw a Japanese gentleman dash onto the platform and he made directly for me. He was the third one of the Japanese commissioners, and he had come 300 miles that day to meet and welcome me to Japan.

At 10 o'clock at night we arrived at the Kyoto station, where we were met by the governor of the Province, the mayor of the city, the president of the chamber of commerce, and many other officials and dignitaries. There is on these occasions a general exchange of cards. Mine had long before given out, but all the members had 200 or 300 printed in China, in English on one side and in Chinese on the other. These I used until they were all gone. There were two hotels in Kyoto, between which we were divided—the Miyako, on the hill, and the Kyoto, in the business part of the town. I had a very fine room at the latter, with high ceiling, elegant Japanese furniture, a large trunk room and clothes closet combined, and a good bathroom. The service was excellent and prompt, though it was at first a little disconcerting to ring for a bell boy to take my shoes to be polished and to have a young lady in an elegant Japanese costume tap gently at the door and make three very low bows before receiving the unpolished shoes. I never did get quite used to it, but we were in Kyoto only four days.

SHOOTING THE HODZU RAPIDS.

On the morning of August 29 our Japanese hosts were at the hotel with autos and local committees, to which were added several Japanese ladies to look after the ladies of our party. Some of them had attended women's colleges in America, such as Vassar, Smith, and others.

Kyoto is an interesting and beautiful city. For more than a thousand years it was the seat of government of the mikados and is rich in history. Even now all coronations of Japanese Emperors must take place in the imperial palace at Kyoto, and the present Emperor was crowned there. It is situated on a fairly level plain, with a river running through the city, while it is surrounded by mountain ranges on three sides.

Kyoto manufactures silk and many other beautiful things. It is said to be the best market in Japan for the purchase of kimonas, Damascene jewelry and dolls, with the most skillful makers and artists. Damascene jewelry is said to have been a Kyoto discovery. Yet purchasers need to be prudent and to take reliable Japanese counsel, as they may be deceived. No one should go to Japan without visiting Kyoto.

The morning was a beautiful one, and as our machines, decorated with small American and Japanese flags, passed through the streets we were greeted with many "Banzais" from groups of children. It occurred to me that there could hardly be general ill-will toward the United States in this city, or this would not have occurred. Children naturally absorb the friendliness or aversions from the grown-ups and can not easily be induced to reverse their attitude, and there was a continuous shouting of "Banzai!"—which means "Ten thousand years" of happiness. It is the all-embracing greeting of the Japanese and includes everything that we mean in English when we say "Good luck!" "Happy Days!" "How!" or "Hurrah!" The streets of Japanese cities, and particularly Kyoto, are wide and more modern and sanitary than generally are those of China. This does not mean that there are not many very fine and beautiful streets in Chinese cities, but it refers to the less important streets in the more crowded parts of the cities. The aggregate of business in these smaller streets is immense, because of the vast number of small shops. We passed that imperial palace where the Emperors have their coronation ceremonies. It is in a fine park and has a wall about 10 or 12 feet high around it, covering an area of possibly a mile square. The gates were all boarded up, excepting one, where there was a small military guard.

Soon we were outside the city on a good raised macadam road about 20 feet wide, passing through the greenest imaginable fields, mostly of rice, but including all sorts of crops, among them many sweet potatoes. There is one kind of vegetable quite common that has a tall stalk about 3 feet high and a large elephant-ear leaf. They told me that it was a giant raddish and was very palatable. It looked to me more like a big turnip or yam.

We crossed a few miles of these fertile plains, and after crossing the Hodzu River, a quite considerable stream, we entered the foothills and commenced to climb a mountain. We made the ascent of several miles by a winding and picturesque way, when we again struck the Hodzu River, at an elevation of several hundred feet higher than at the bridge. Here we left the machine and took the boats which were to carry us down through the mountain gorge to the valley below.

The boats were flat-bottomed, quite large, about 22 feet long, 6 or 7 feet wide, coming to a point at the bows. There was a cloth or canvas covering to protect the passengers from the sun, which was quite hot. We had about a half-dozen of these boats, well filled with the members of our own party and of Japanese committeemen and a few Japanese ladies. It was a very gay party as they took their places in the boats, not knowing just what was going to happen. Each boat was manned by three or four sturdy, bare-footed Japanese boatmen, with long bamboo poles, except the steersman who handled a broad-paddled steering oar.

From the landing place we shot out into the swift stream, and were soon plunging down a narrow and steep rock-lined canyon. For most of the way the channel was quite narrow, and the water foamed over the hidden rocks. It evidently required great skill and a knowledge of every yard of the churning river to avoid wrecking the boats and ducking if not drowning the occupants. There was an opportunity for shipwreck in nearly every rod of the several miles of rapids, and occasionally the boats would ship some water, which the passengers would receive in their laps, notwithstanding the skill of the boatmen. That we avoided striking great rocks at a hundred places seemed almost a miracle. Much work has been done in many places in banking up the rocks and straightening the stream. A railroad ran along the banks or walls of the canyon, frequently plunging through a tunnel where there was not sufficient margin of land outside the river for the road.

The water was cool and perfectly clear, and there are plenty of trout in the river. Numerous Japanese fishermen with broad conical straw hats and long bamboo poles were standing on the rocks and fishing in the swift places as we passed. I ate some of the trout and they were excellent.

In the distribution of the Japanese ladies we had a very modest, well-dressed lady in a Japanese costume, and able to speak a little English, Viscountess A—, in the boat in which I rode. As we neared a point where another stream came into the river I heard the boatmen repeat a short phrase in Japanese two or three times. I asked her what the words meant. She thought a moment and said, "It means where two rivers are fading together." Another stream came in at this point which was the subject of their comment.

After several miles of this exciting navigation we drifted into smooth water above a dam that had been built across the river. Here there are extensive and beautiful groves. It is called Arashiyama, and many picnics are had here after shooting the rapids. From here the boatmen tow and pole the boats back to the head of the rapids for other passengers. It must be a laborious work.

We found our machines at Arashiyama, and were soon back in Kyoto at a wonderful exhibit of the Nishyrin Textile Fabrics, where luncheon was spread.

A VISIT TO NARA.

On Monday, August 30, we visited Nara, one of the most interesting and beautiful spots in Japan. It is two hours' ride by rail from Kyoto. It is at quite an elevation, and all the temples and palaces are in a vast park. The hotel was of Japanese architecture, with high ceilings and unstained native woods. Its wide porches overlook a little lake.

Nara, which was the capital of Japan in the eighth century—1,200 years ago—has many objects of interest, but the principal ones are three—the deer park, the giant Buddha, and the great bronze bell in the Temple of Nara.

There are tame deer all over the neighborhood for 2 or 3 miles. We were taken in a procession of rickshas, and people with great trays of thin rice cakes gave handfuls of them to us to feed the deer. They would come right up to the rickshas and nibble the rice cakes from one's fingers. We went to a park where there was a long porch fronting a meadow, where we were seated. We saw two Japanese open a gate several hundred feet away when a great drove of deer—200 or 300—came rushing through like a flock of sheep, all spread over the meadow, to where we were seated. We were above them, so they could not get on the porch, but several went down among them and fed them on the ground.

The next notable sight is the giant bronze Buddha—Daibutsu. It is in a large temple now, although for several centuries it was uncovered, a tidal wave having torn away its former covering. It is a marvelous piece of casting, especially when it is considered that it was done in 749 A. D.—1,171 years ago. Its height is 53½ feet; length of face 16 feet and breadth 9½ feet; mouth, 3 feet 8½ inches in breadth; shoulders, 28 feet 8½ inches in breadth. There are 966 curls on the image, each a foot high and 7½ inches across. The halo forming the background is 83 feet high, 25 feet across, and 5 feet thick. All this is of solid bronze. This is the largest image of Buddha in Japan. I later saw the Kamakura Daibutsu, which is considerably smaller.

The third most notable object in Nara is an enormous bell in the Temple of Nara, which can be rung once for a small fee. Reverent pilgrims and tourists keep it booming very frequently. It is hung in a low belfry, and is rung by pulling a rope that swings a large wooden clapper.

A REGULAR JAPANESE DINNER.

This evening my friend Mr. Natori gave me a regular Japanese dinner. Other guests were the five Japanese members of the Imperial Diet, Baron Kanda, Count Terashima, and Messrs. Higuchi, Tanaka, and Takezawa. We went to quite a celebrated Japanese restaurant that overlooks the River Kamo. They have open-air dining rooms, built out over the river to catch the air, covered at the top but not at the sides. Upon entering all guests take off their shoes or they are taken off by servants, and slippers put on instead. It is easy to see why this is done, as the floors are of polished woods or are covered with the softest of matting, all kept as clean as a dining table. Street shoes would seem to be out of place on them. Cushions laid on the matting took the place of chairs, with a low arm rest to lean on. The food in little dishes is placed on low lacquer or hardwood tables with slightly raised sides and less than a foot high. The Japanese gentlemen, all in native costumes, used chopsticks, but I was given knife, fork, and spoon.

Later I learned to use the chopsticks a little, but I did not try at this dinner. There were all sorts of Japanese dainties—thin slices of raw fish, both red and white, on a plate, with a small cup of a dressing that suggested but was not Worcestershire sauce. First, however, there was a delicious soup in a bowl also containing some pieces of chicken. I will not attempt to describe all the features of the dinner. We were waited on by very prettily dressed Japanese girls in native costumes, who would always bow two or three times when they came in and comfortably settle down on the floor in front of the guest whom they were to serve. Afterwards they proved to be quite artists, some sitting down in a row and playing stringed instruments and others dancing a historical Japanese dance. Although they were geisha girls, it was all as decorous and dignified as anyone could imagine, and although they were very graceful I believe they would be considered too slow and old-fashioned for a turn in an American vaudeville show. Their performance would have been entirely proper at a church festival.

THE IMPERIAL PALACE.

Tuesday morning, August 31, we all visited the Imperial Palace. We passed the armed guard at the outer gate, put on slippers, and went through a great many spacious rooms. The impression that it made on me was that the furnishings, which were not complete, and the ornamentation of screens and paneled paintings were all very plain and simple. The throne room, where the coronations take place, was much the grandest room, very large, with very high ceilings. The carvings and coloring are elaborate and brilliant, but harmonious. There are two thrones in the room, one for the Emperor, very magnificent, and another, 50 or 60 feet to the left, smaller and less brilliant, for the Empress. Few foreigners are permitted to see the inside of the Imperial Palace, and especially the throne room.

A LOCAL KYOTO FEATURE.

There was one local feature about Kyoto that interested me. That was the bull cart. They are quite a common sight, much more so than at any other place that I saw—a single black bull with a ring in his nose, sometimes with a sort of woven straw or wicker umbrella stretching from his head down over his back and sometimes with a rope around his hoofs. I also noticed in the grounds of two or three temples and in the public parks bronze castings of a black bull with a rope around his neck. I tried to find out what significance it had—what meant the rope around his neck. I asked the question of one of the Japanese ladies who could speak some English when we passed one of these bronzes, but she did not seem to understand me, and one of our ladies undertook to interpret my meaning to her in this way: "He asks why the bronze cow has a rope around his neck." I am still in the dark as to the meaning of the symbolism.

A DAY'S RAILWAY RIDE IN INTERIOR JAPAN.

On Thursday, September 2, we left Kyoto. Our two or three special cars were on a regular train. I have seldom enjoyed a more interesting day of railway travel. The day was not very hot, and, while there were occasionally showers and some clouds, generally the opportunities for sightseeing were very good. We passed through great varieties of scenery—immediately out of Kyoto great plains of fertility and a beautiful lake several miles in circumference, with lofty mountains in the background at no great distance. We passed through a canyon that greatly reminded me of the Sacramento River Canyon in the neighborhood of Dunsmuir. Then we passed for many miles along the seashore like that along the coast line north and south of Santa Barbara, with islands off in the distance like Santa Cruz and San Miguel, always excepting the fact that the Japanese landscape shows more verdure and more intensive cultivation. There were miles of Japanese fishing villages. Then later in the afternoon we were for an hour or more in sight of the world-famed mountain of Japan, Fujiyama, although the clouds resting along its sides prevented our seeing it all at the same time. It is a wonderful mountain, quite symmetrical and inspiring. I could see a little but not much snow near its summit. In some ways it suggests Shasta, but it is not so massive as Shasta, and Shasta appears to carry more snow at the summit through the summer than does Fujiyama.

At Yokohama, where we stopped early in the evening, about the first person that I saw on the platform was my venerable friend, Mr. Kahei Otani, president of the Yokohama Chamber of Commerce. He wore a long gray beard in 1909, and it has now become still whiter. There were a great many other Japanese and American officials at the Yokohama station.

It is less than an hour's run from Yokohama to Tokyo, and the electric lights showed that it is almost a city right through. At 8.25 in the evening we arrived at the first Tokyo station. There were great crowds at the station, which the police held back so as to give the Americans and their escorts a passage, but we were held several times in the station for heavy batteries of newspaper photographers. The flashlights were going off like the guns on a battle front—dozens of them at a time. We finally got through and into autos—it had been raining—and were rolled away to the Imperial Hotel, where we had already been assigned.

OFFICIAL INTERCHANGES OF COURTESIES.

On Friday, September 3, our first day in the Japanese capital, the Congressmen, with Senator HARRIS, made their official calls in a body. First they called at the American Embassy, where, although we have a fine piece of ground advantageously located, our representatives are housed rather shabbily, especially in comparison with Great Britain, France, and other European Governments. Ambassador Morris was absent in the United States, and the embassy was in the keeping of Chargé de Affaires Bell.

We then called upon the president of the House of Peers, Prince Tokugawa, and the president of the House of Representatives at their respective offices on the grounds of the Imperial Diet. These calls were cordial on both sides, but formal. Our cards were left at all these places and those of our hosts were returned to our hotel the same day.

We also called on the mayor of the city at the city hall, Viscount Tejiri. The viscount we found hard at work in a room alone, and lightly dressed on account of the heat. I had quite an interesting talk with him about the ways of street improvement, sewers, harbors, water system, and so forth, and found him well informed on those subjects.

The Imperial Diet gave our entire party a cordial welcome in the form of a luncheon at our hotel a little after noon the same day. It was a very large and well-managed affair, with 400 or 500 at the bountiful tables, including most of the distinguished men in civil life in Japan, many Japanese ladies in native costume, and American ladies as well.

The premier, Mr. Hara, a tall man with a fresh complexion and a head of ample gray hair, together with all the cabinet ministers, was present, and my old friend, Baron Shibusawa, who had been made a viscount that very day, was only two seats away from me. I sat at the head table, and my neighbor on the right was Viscount Kaneko, a graduate of Harvard, and on the left was the mayor, Viscount Tejiri, who proved to be a graduate of Yale. I have seldom had a more interesting hour than that with these two very intelligent gentlemen, especially with Viscount Kaneko. For 30 years he was an intimate friend of Col. Roosevelt. He was the counselor of the Japanese representatives at the Portsmouth peace conference, which closed the Russo-Japanese War, and he is now one of the imperial council, who personally counsel the Emperor.

When the speechmaking came on, Prince Tokugawa, who is president of the House of Peers, made the cordial address of welcome in excellent English. He is a rather short, stout gentleman with a full, frank face, and is the head of a great historical family. The response was made by our chairman, Congressman SMALL, of North Carolina.

The House of Peers, by the way, which has functions analogous to those of our own Senate, has over 300 members. The Japanese House of Representatives has 485 members.

Another address in Japanese was made by the president of the House of Representatives, equivalent to our Speaker.

An address was also made by Mr. Hara, the premier, in Japanese, which was interpreted into English. The Emperor had that day conferred titles for distinguished services upon, or had made promotions of, quite a number, and Mr. Hara had declined a title in order to remain a member of the House of Representatives instead of thus being translated to the House of Peers, which includes only the nobility.

This terminated the formal official welcome. The remainder of this day we had for seeing the city, or shopping, or for using in any way that we might desire—a respite that was greatly appreciated.

WE MEET MARQUIS OKUMA.

On Saturday morning, September 4, the ladies welcoming committee, made up of the leading ladies of Japan, gave a delightful quiet entertainment—a kind of garden party—at the residence and surrounding garden or park of Marquis Koroda. This "garden" is really a fine park of about 35 acres, with woods, flowers, watercourses, glens, and all the ingenious and artistic landscape gardening that especially distinguishes the Japanese. These gardens have fewer formal flower beds and fields than ours, their places being taken by great trees, green and flowering, green lawns, and a general suggestion of quiet comfort and seclusion. What we call the crape myrtle grows into a tree here, and it gives the touch of bright color to the deep verdure that creates the effect of richness and harmony of color. A rain came up and we were entertained in the marquis's residence, with music on ancient Japanese instruments played by Japanese ladies.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon we were received at Waseda, the country home of one of the great men of Japan—Marquis Okuma—author, historian, philanthropist, orator, statesman, founder of Waseda University, at one time premier of the Empire, and one of the most influential of the "elder statesmen." While he was premier a few years ago an anarchist or violent opponent of his policies threw a bomb into his carriage and blew off one of his legs. Even now, however, at 81 years of age, he is erect, vigorous, 6 feet tall, with a fine face indicating strong character. The only indication of a lack of full physical strength is that a personal attendant is required on account of the missing leg, the place of which is only partially supplied by one of wood or cork. This beautiful home and surrounding parklike garden of about 50 acres is situated in the heart of a congested district that formerly belonged to the marquis and was a part of his family estate. I was informed that he desired to found a university, and did so with means obtained from selling a part of this property, all of which was devoted to the founding and conduct of the Waseda University. This university, I understand, has 7,000 or 8,000 students, and is one of the most useful institutions of learning in Japan. The marquis stood up sturdily during the reception and while he was delivering his address to the party. He and Viscount Shibusawa, very different in physical as well as in mental characteristics, but alike devoted to great ideals, seemed to me the two biggest men that I met in Japan. This does not imply that I did not meet other big men, as in my mind I put Hara, Kaneko, Kanda, Tokugawa, Mitsui, and several others high up in my estimate of ability and character.

I was accorded the honor of making the reply to Marquis Okuma. I took note of the points made by Marquis Okuma as his speech was translated and directed my attention specially to those subjects. His address was intended, in the main, to call the attention of the congressional party, in a courteous way, to the misgivings that the Japanese have as to the treatment of their nationals in the United States. It was not as direct as that, but that was, I construed, the thought behind the words. My reply was intended to give an idea of the question from the United States, or California, standpoint and of the difficulties that attended the mixing of races and peoples. The marquis made a suggestion that the United States and Japan should work together in the East for the benefit of the peoples. To this I replied that the Father of his Country, in his Farewell Address, had cautioned the United States against entering into "entangling alliances" with foreign powers, and that ever since this had been the settled policy of the United States, even where the advantages appeared to be very great. Then I told the bear story—of how the hunter got hold of the tail of the bear and dared not let go for fear that the bear would turn and bite him. I intended this as a suggestion of the difficulties that have come to Japan through their getting hold of Korea and China. The interpreter mixed up the story a little in the translation, which was corrected by one of Marquis Okuma's secretaries; but the Japanese were immensely interested in it, and I could see that they were speculating as to its meaning.

After looking over the beautiful grounds it commenced to rain. Our host had had a large tent put up on the grounds in which to serve a luncheon, to which we repaired. Here were small tables with four persons at a table. I was placed at the marquis's table, and our table talk was interpreted back and forth. He told me that he had not said quite all that he would like to have said, and perhaps he would enlarge it somewhat.

This did not end the day's entertainment. We returned to the hotel, put on evening clothes, and attended a dinner given by Baron and Baroness Mitsui at their beautiful family club, a very elaborate structure on their estate maintained for large entertainments.

After the dinner there was a musical entertainment, at which two Japanese young ladies sang some operatic music—one a soprano and the other a contralto—marvelously well. There was not a particle of accent, and their voices were clear, pure, and strong. Baron Mitsui is one of the brothers of the great house of that name, the largest business concern in Japan. They have railways, coal mines, steamship companies, banks, and about everything.

A DAY AND NIGHT AT NIKKO.

In a country that has hundreds of beautiful places, Nikko and its locality is doubtless the most beautiful of all. There is an old saying among the Japanese that "One can not appreciate the word 'beautiful' until one has seen Nikko." It is situated 91 miles from Tokyo by rail. We made the trip on September 6, with enough luggage to enable us to remain overnight. The country en route is very interesting, agriculturally rich, intensively cultivated, and densely populated. Many phases of the rural and village life of Japan can be observed.

Nikko itself is in the foothills of quite a mountain range, and, having an elevation of 2,000 feet, it was cooler and more comfortable than anything we had before experienced in the Orient. It is so comfortable in the summer that the Emperor spends at least a part of the hot months at his palace in Nikko, and he was at the time occupying this palace, which we passed on our way to Lake Chuzenji. There is a wall around the palace, as is the usual Japanese custom.

Nikko, the town, and the neighboring country is one vast and grand park. There are more of the great Cryptomeria trees here than in any other part of Japan that I have seen. They are a truly grand tree, their foliage, their trunks, and their bark being much like those of the Sequoia, our big trees of California. They have the same habit of decaying a little at the extreme top. But they will not at all compare with the big trees in height or size. The age of some of the largest that I saw was known, as they were planted about a temple at the time it was built, which time was known to be about 500 years. The Sequoias are said by scientists to be 3,000 to 5,000 years old. But the Cryptomerias are mighty fine, all the same, and running out of Nikko there is an avenue which is lined on either side with them for 15 miles.

Nikko is beautiful altogether aside from its temple structures, which are not so numerous as in many other places. But it has one, the most beautiful of all, which is a combined mausoleum and temple. It is not very ancient, either, and was erected by Iye Mitsu, the third Shogun, in honor of his grandfather, Iyeyasu, the first Shogun, and for his own burial place about 300 years ago.

Many years were devoted to its erection and the best artists and artisans in Japan, with 15,000 workmen, were employed on the work for 12 years. More than $10,000,000 in gold was expended on the work, and when the low wages that prevailed in that day is considered, a few sen a day, the enormous amount of work involved may be estimated. The result is a series of temples, one above another on the side of high hills, almost mountains, hardly equaled for the magnificence of their carvings and the beauty of their mural decorations from the brushes of the best artists of Japan. Much fine gold was used in the gilding and gems were crushed to make the colors fast.

There is but one unpainted building in the group, and that is a stable, which is a feature common to Shinto shrines. This building is the object of great interest to visitors, as it has the famous panel on which is carved the original of the "three monkeys"—one with his hands over his eyes, another with his hands over his mouth, and the third with his hands over his ears, the meaning being, "See no evil, speak no evil, listen to no evil."

Another interesting structure is the Red Lacquer Bridge, across the rushing River Doiya. Originally the bridge could only be used by the shogun and a special messenger of the Emperor. Now it is not open to the general public, and I saw no one on it at any time; but priests of the shrines may use it on certain festival occasions.

We took in the great temple and shrines on the second day of our visit to Nikko. The first day we went up the road beside the swift River Daiya as far as the autos could take us. The river tears out the banks very often, and the bed is full of bowlders. In fact, it looks in many places like a California hydraulic mine. At the foot of a high mountain we left the machines and took rickshas for a climb of about 5 miles. Each ricksha had two men—one to pull between the thills and the other to push. I never saw such a fine trail anywhere. It averaged 10 feet wide, with neat stone-lined gutters on the inside and careful arrangements for turning off the water. But there had been a big storm the day before, and even this excellent trail had been torn out in three or four places; but, although it was only a few hours, they already had repaired the breaks.

The scene from the trail was magnificent. We passed several beautiful waterfalls, and when we had nearly reached the top we could look way back and down below into the Valley of the Daiya. And the air! Exactly like that of the California mountains—cool, bracing, and pure. We stopped at one point where there was a waterfall something like the Multonomah Falls on the great Columbia highway at Portland. But, while very beautiful, there was less water than at Multonomah, and they lack several hundred feet of being as high.

A little farther along we came to a wonderful lake called Chuzenji, in the tops of the mountains, 4,500 feet elevation. A good-sized river flows from it that looks like the Truckee, but carries less water. The lake itself is a perfect gem, several miles long, with green mountains rising from its edges. It is full of fish—salmon trout brought from the United States, which thrive wonderfully. There is a hotel and many summer houses. It was nearly dark when our ricksha went down the trail at a trot, the second man with a stout rope acting as a brake.

GARDEN PARTY AT AN ARSENAL PARK.

This afternoon was spent in visiting the wonderfully interesting shops of Tokyo and sightseeing, until 4 o'clock, when a garden party was given at a famous old garden and park adjoining and attached to a great arsenal. The hosts were the Japan Society of America and Japan, which society has a large organization in New York and in some other cities in America. Naturally its membership consists largely of Japanese who have been in America, either as students, merchants, or in other capacities, and Americans who have been in Japan. There were several hundred ladies and gentlemen at this party, both Japanese and American. This is one of those wonderful gardens or parks such as I have heretofore described, with great trees, lawns like meadows, running waters, meandering graveled or stone-paved walks, and every charming effect of artistic landscape gardening. Probably there were close to a thousand people assembled at this garden party, but it would accommodate without crowding several thousand.

THE MAYOR OF TOKYO ENTERTAINS.

The mayor of Tokyo had invited our party to an entertainment this evening at the Hyeno Sei-Koyen, a great café and gardens on the Bund, or banks of the river which runs through the city. In this park are two trees planted by Gen. and Mrs. Grant in 1876. We were received in a large room by the mayor, Viscount Tejiri, and the city officials. Shortly after dark there was a display of quite wonderful fireworks, which were located across the river. The effect of the brilliant and ingenious fireworks was greatly augmented by the reflections on the waters of the river. Additional to jets of multicolored fireballs and rockets, there were set pieces of the Stars and Stripes, the American and Japanese flags crossed, and such words as "Welcome."

After the fireworks we were taken into a large room in the nature of a theater, where an interesting entertainment was given, including Japanese music and dancing. When I speak of dancing it always means that women were the performers, as I do not remember ever to have seen men dancing on the stage in Japan, though I presume that they must dance sometimes. At the side of the drop curtain was a sort of bulletin, announcing what the performance was to be, which read, "Dancing, balancing, and juggles." There was some quite wonderful balancing and "juggles." Altogether the entertainment was unique and most interesting.

SIGHT-SEEING IN TOKYO.

On the following morning, Tuesday, September 7, I went out in a ricksha for a sight-seeing trip through some of the main business streets. This is a good way to see things in a leisurely way, and riding in a ricksha is very comfortable. The ricksha man when he has a passenger is accorded a very fair show on the roadway. He trots along with an American passenger not quite as speedily as he does with a Japanese, as he seems to know that an American will not hurry him up. He emits a sharp "Hi, hi!" to obstructing pedestrians or conductors of other vehicles, and, if light, they usually move out of the way. The rates are moderate, but higher in Japan than in China. The first hour in China is about 50 or 60 cents Mexican; in Japan 1 yen 20 sen the first hour, or 60 cents in American money, and less for the second hour and so on.

Later in the day I took a long ride all over the city with Mr. N——— in his machine. We passed the Emperor's Palace, with an ancient high wall, kept in perfect order, with a wide water moat next to the wall, perhaps 100 feet wide. The mortarless masonry in this and other walls, with irregular-shaped blocks of stone, which has retained its place for centuries, is most remarkable. We passed through narrow crowded business streets, as well as broad avenues and airy and well-kept parks. We drove through the wonderful grounds of some private residences. Among these was that of Viscount Shibusawa, who was down town at his office at the time. His majordomo showed us about the grounds, which are very fine; but his house is quite modest and not nearly so grand as those of many who are not so highly esteemed or wealthy. From a round observatory, open at the sides and large enough to accommodate a goodly company, on a hill which overlooks the industrial portion of Tokyo, he pointed out 20 or 30 high chimneys of great manufacturing plants, all belching forth black smoke, and said: "When Viscount Shibusawa commenced his work in this city there was but one chimney, where you now see all those. It was Viscount Shibusawa who gave the start to all of these great works. He thus gave employment to many thousands, and made this great city what it is to-day. Those smoking chimneys will be his monuments. He has preferred them to a grand house."

At 2 o'clock this afternoon our entire party went out into the edge of Tokyo, or just outside the city, to the residence of Mr. Hyashi, who manages the Imperial Hotel, to a garden party given by Japanese alumni of American colleges and universities. Nearly every well-known college was represented among the hosts. Mr. Hyashi has quite a princely estate, much of it devoted to raising crops. He pointed out that no houses but his own could be seen, the trees along the borders hiding houses in the distance. The hosts numbered 200 or 300, and they had erected large tents for all sorts of stunts.

On Wednesday morning, September 8, the forenoon was clear, and we had another opportunity of looking around this interesting city of Tokyo. This is in the richest and most densely populated part of Japan, and while the city alone has a population of nearly 3,000,000 people, the district about Tokyo has about 5,000,000. The city necessarily spreads over a great extent of territory, as the houses are for the most part but two stories in height. Universally, almost, the roofs of the houses are tiled with a grayish-black tiling. There are many canals running through the city and through the country outside.

THE PAN-PACIFIC UNION.

At 1.30 we all attended a meeting in advocacy of the Pan-Pacific Union, the organizer of which, Alexander Hume Ford, of Honolulu, had been with our party from the time that we were at Honolulu. The meeting was held at the Peers' Club, on the grounds of the Imperial Diet. The object is to organize the nations bordering on the Pacific so far as to foster mutual interests, correct international misunderstandings, and promote peace. There was a remarkable representation of men of influence in their respective countries at this luncheon, from Japan, China, Mexico, and the United States. The addresses all bore upon the subject of peace.

THE Y. M. C. A. IN THE ORIENT.

Throughout both Japan and China we found the Y. M. C. A. very strong and efficient. They are doing a great deal for America, and are served by a splendid force of young men, both native and American. Here in Tokyo they have their own building, well fitted up with gymnasium as well as other equipment, and we were invited to spend an hour there between 4 and 5 o'clock, which we did.

A lady of our party was much pleased to meet here two Japanese ladies who, as girls, had been fellow students with her at Holyoke, Mass. I had a talk with a Japanese gentleman in native costume who is a strong financial pillar of the Y. M. C. A., who had been to Los Angeles several times. He—Mr. Ito—is one of the leading oil producers of Japan, and I found that there is quite a healthy oil development in Japan. He had visited California and other oil-producing States to observe oil methods and conditions.

A BIG COMMERCIAL ORGANIZATION GIVES A JAPANESE THEATRICAL ENTERTAINMENT AND DINNER.

This evening we attended an elaborate entertainment given in honor of the congressional party by one of the large commercial organizations of Tokyo, the Commercial Association of Nishonbashi. Tokyo is divided into districts, and Nishonbashi is one of them. They are larger than wards, and business cards bear the name of the district as part of the address. The Commercial Association is a sort of chamber of commerce. Nishonbashi was evidently an important section, and the entertainment was on a broad and generous scale.

After a reception by the association's officers to our entire party, we were ushered into a theater, which was a part of the Fuquiro restaurant Yamokura, where we found ourselves and where, on a good-sized stage, we were shown some typical Japanese classical dancing, with Japanese music. There was one historical dance, in which the costumes were very rich and the dancing very dignified and decorous. In fact, that will describe most Japanese dancing. This was followed by a dance with a little more action, in fact, I believe it is considered the acme of light-heartedness, in which about a dozen geisha girls participated.

Then followed a Japanese dinner, but with the important modification that the guests sat in chairs at the table, which ran along three sides of a large room. The same geisha girls who had taken part in the dances and many others waited upon the tables from the inside of the quadrangle. The menu was made up of regular Japanese food, including slices of uncooked fish, and served in the Japanese way on little tables placed on the big table. It was a great novelty to the ladies of our party, but there were few who ventured to test the raw fish.

JAPAN'S STATE DEPARTMENT GIVES A LUNCHEON.

On Thursday, September 9, we were to go to Yokohama in response to two invitations, but before going, at 12.30, the Members of Congress only attended a state luncheon, given by Premier Hara at the Japanese foreign office. There was nothing in the foreign office or at the table that was in the least ostentatious or gaudy.

Those present were the premier and all the members of the Japanese ministry, including ministers of war, navy, railways, communications, education, and all the others. They were all middle-aged men of quiet but cordial demeanor, and they, too, left an impression of solidity and ability. The minister of education, Mr. Tokugoro Nakahashi, was one of the Japanese commercial commissioners of 1909.

While it was not at all a cold, chilly party, very sensibly I thought, no speeches were made.

While we were at lunch a noted Japanese artist was engaged in the premier's office in painting favors, which were to be presented to the members of our party as souvenirs. We saw him at work later, and he did it with incredible swiftness and with a few touches of the brush.

After the luncheon the party all left for Yokohama in special cars to meet their engagements there.

The run takes about an hour, and upon our arrival we were taken from the railway station to the city hall, or Kaikwan, as it is called, where a reception and entertainment were given from 4 to 7 o'clock.

The American Association of Yokohama is a live body of men, and we enjoyed an enthusiastic meeting with our own countrymen again, where no interpreting was necessary. There are several hundred bright young American business men in Yokohama of the same superior character that we had found in other oriental cities.

They wished to tell us about some of the difficulties that they labor under in these countries, which could be remedied by legislation. They had four speakers, who presented briefly and concisely four such subjects. We had but one or two speakers, who promised them that we would endeavor to get our laws as they affected our nationals in foreign lands into such shape that they would have a fair chance with their competitors from foreign countries. Congressman HARDY, of Texas, made a ringing patriotic speech.

In the evening our Japanese welcoming committee—Count Terashima, Baron Kanda, Mr. Haguchi, Mr. Tanaka, and Mr. Kakezawa—gave the party another Japanese dinner. As some of our party had something to say about the Japanese immigration question, I explained the subject from the California standpoint as I understood it. I had already done this to some extent in a conversation with Viscount S———, and I was destined to do it more fully on the following day to some of the leading Japanese statesmen.

"THE CALIFORNIA QUESTION."

Saturday, September 10, had been the day fixed for our departure from Yokohama, but the Madawaska did not reach Yokohama until the afternoon of this day and had to put on 2,800 tons of coal for the voyage. As it was raining, this was slow work, and we were told that she would not be made ready to sail before Monday. The morning of this day was devoted to formal good-byes.

Our Japanese welcoming committee had been very careful throughout the three weeks of our visit to introduce no subject of conversation that might be the subject of controversy or inharmony, but "the California question," as it was called, was frequently referred to by others, and the opinions of members of the party, even ladies, was often requested, directly or indirectly. In fact, it was evidently uppermost in the minds of a majority of those we met who considered public affairs at all. The Japan Advertiser, the leading English-language newspaper in Tokyo or Japan, published each day three or four columns of editorial extracts from Japanese papers. Nearly all these extracts indicated considerable editorial ability, and some of them were quite fair. Others, however, in discussing "the California question" were very bitter and either badly informed or purposely untruthful in their statements, all to the detriment of the humanity and good faith of the people of California in particular and of the United States in general. As I was from California, notwithstanding I had so many good personal friends among leading Japanese, I was rather frequently referred to in connection with "the California question," and I finally determined that when the appropriate time came I would give the California side of the question to the best of my ability.

Viscount Shibusawa, Viscount Kaneko, Baron Sakatani, and others wanted to have a meeting, or confidential conference, for a "heart to heart" talk on the subject. I opposed anything in the nature of a formal conference, especially a secret one, on the grounds that we had no authority to represent the American Congress or to make any agreements, and that we ought not to. But whether we did or not, any conference of that sort was sure to be misrepresented. For myself, I was willing to talk to anyone, Japanese or otherwise, and tell them exactly what I thought about any phase of the subject, but I would not go into any conference of any sort, secret or otherwise.

Viscount Shibusawa, however, wanted to talk to us about it, and his secretary told me that it was so much on his mind that he would feel better if he could do so. So he invited the Congressmen to take luncheon with him, Viscount Kaneko, Baron Sakatani, and Dr. Sayda on Saturday.

After the luncheon and we had gone to another room, Viscount Shibusawa, whose remarks were translated into English by his secretary, said that he felt grateful to us for affording him an opportunity to lay before us his views on the questions now pending between the United States and Japan.

He then recounted quite accurately the history of oriental immigration into the United States—how in the early days of the gold discoveries in California labor was scarce and Chinese labor was obtained from China; how for some years such labor was welcome; how later it became unpopular and the Chinese exclusion laws were enacted by the United States; how the "gentlemen's agreement" was made to prevent Japanese immigration; how laws were passed in California making it illegal for citizens of Japan to acquire real estate in that State. Now he was disquieted by reports of the efforts to have enacted still more drastic legislation, which would result in the practical confiscation of the property of Japanese in that State and their expulsion with the loss of their property and even life itself. He hoped that something could be done to avert this threatened drastic legislation.

Mr. SMALL made a brief reply, and Mr. HARDY of Texas suggested that Mr. OSBORNE was a Representative from California—he had heard him on another occasion state the California side of the question, and he thought it would be well if he would now speak on the subject.

I had on two previous occasions—once to Viscount Shibusawa personally and once at a Japanese dinner given by the Imperial Diet welcoming committee—touched on the subject, but not covering all its features. As there were now present some of the leading statesmen of Japan, I determined to speak in entire frankness to them, and to make the viewpoint of California as clear as I was able; not only to them, but to the eastern Congressmen as well.

The substance of my talk was about like this:

I hesitate to comply with the request to speak on what has been referred to as "the California question," as it may appear ungracious in a guest to present views on an important matter in variance with those of his hosts. But the very importance of the subject may overcome the consideration of courtesy, and in this case I believe that perfect frankness and honesty of statement, with a view to a full understanding of the reasons actuating the people of California, is justified.

In the early days of California, as Viscount Shibusawa has stated, labor was scarce, and coolie labor from China was obtained. For a time it was very welcome, as it filled a pressing want. At that time, and for many years thereafter, there was no immigration from Japan. But in a few years the immigration of Chinese was so great that it became alarming. Shipload after shipload of Chinese came at shortening intervals, until it seemed that the Chinese population of California would exceed that of Americans. Then followed the anti-Chinese agitation, resulting finally in the enactment by the American Congress of the Chinese exclusion laws, of the wisdom and justice of which, personally, I entertained no doubt. The immigration of Japanese in appreciable numbers did not commence until about 20 years age, and it attracted no public attention until considerably later than that. When it was proposed to extend the law excluding Chinese laborers to Japanese laborers, Japan had protested, and in lieu of such a law the so-called "'gentlemen's agreement" was entered into, under the terms of which the emigration of Japanese labor to the United States was guaranteed to cease—to be prevented by the Japanese Government. It was the contention of California that the agreement had not been lived up to, especially in recent years; that there had been a marked increase in Japanese population in California was quite obvious. The census recently taken would give the facts relative to this contention in a short time.

As to the treatment accorded to Japanese in California, I am unable to understand the newspaper and other references to ill treatment. The county of Los Angeles, in which I reside, doubtless has a greater number of Japanese residents than any other county in the United States. I have some acquaintance with the leading Japanese, and in my personal experience I have never known of a case of ill treatment. If there were such cases I am sure that they would be brought to my attention by the Japanese themselves. We have in Los Angeles County several thousand Japanese, and I doubt if there is an equal number of Japanese anywhere, not excepting Japan, that are better treated, more prosperous, or more happy.

The question in California is not one of relative superiority of races. Superiority or inferiority of race is not involved or considered. The question is one of difference—radical difference. Japanese are brought up in different environments, different methods of life, different ideals. They do not assimilate with American people, but are what we call "clannish." I do not state that as a fault but as a fact, naturally following the differences that I have mentioned. Immigrants from European countries soon become assimilated with the American people and interested members of the communities in which they live, and the accumulations of their industry go to increase the resources of the community. Not so the Japanese. They associate with each other, and to but a limited extent with their American neighbors. Their hearts and their hopes are in this beautiful country—their native land. When they have accumulated enough money to return with a competence they do return and remove their savings to this land instead of adding it to American resources. So, economically, they are to that extent a drain upon our country.

Neighbors are not desirable neighbors unless they are neighborly, and do the social services to each other that are common to an ideal neighborhood. People whose language and methods of life are foreign and not understandable are not desirable neighbors. In small numbers they are not specially objectionable, but in large numbers they may change the community from a desirable one into one that is positively undesirable, and which Americans seeking places for homes will avoid. It is these indisputable facts that led to the enactment of the California law forbidding Japanese ownership of real estate.

The methods pursued by Japanese in California were about as follows: A Japanese of sufficient means would buy a ranch or farm in the midst of some rich and prosperous agricultural district, generally where fruits are specially prosperous. Soon another Japanese would buy a ranch adjoining and then another and another, until there was a considerable Japanese colony. Japanese stores would appear in the adjoining town or village. The schools would be partially filled with Japanese children, and in many ways the community would take on the appearance of a Japanese community. Adjoining American landowners would be dissatisfied with the conditions and sell out and go elsewhere—and sell at a low figure to other Japanese. Thus the value of real property was affected detrimentally. The further this process went the faster it grew, until some very rich fruit-growing sections of California passed into the ownership of foreigners, who could not even vote on questions of local government. One such community I can name—that of Florin, about 20 miles south of Sacramento—which has become nearly as distinct a Japanese community as though it were situated 20 miles from this city of Tokyo. This is not an isolated case, but it is perhaps the most notable one. California people, observing this process of evolution from American to Japanese communities, see no reason why the same process if unchecked may not operate in a more sweeping way and the entire State come under the same alien control. It is these conditions that brought about the anti-Japanese landowning laws.

When Japan came into the family of nations in the early fifties, her statesmen, fearing that one of the dangers to your country was that it should in some way come under foreign domination, enacted laws that rendered it impossible for Americans and all foreigners to obtain legal title to real estate in Japan. That law, which is a wise one, is in effect to-day, and I nor any other American can legally hold title to an acre of land in Japan. It is true that you have a long-time leasing law, but again wisely your limitations upon its exercise are so stringent that it is nearly impossible for a foreigner to enjoy its advantages. Your nation was entirely within its rights and just discretion in enacting such a law. A nation has the same natural right to say who shall and who shall not own the soil within its boundaries that the head of a family has to say who shall and who shall not come within his family circle. His reasons for so doing are a matter for his own judgment, the validity of which is not to be determined by others. The people of California, which is a sovereign State of the American Union, have the same right in this regard as the people of Japan have. The question is not one of prejudice, but it is economic.

But these laws, regarded by a majority of the people of California as necessary and justifiable, were evaded by some of your countrymen among us in two ways.

First, Japanese who could not hold legal title to land, by forming themselves into a corporation under the corporation laws, could as stockholders in the corporation do so; and hundreds of these incorporations were formed in the State, and purchases of land went on about as before the law was enacted.

Second, Japanese children born in the United States, notwithstanding their parents are not and never will be citizens, become American citizens, under the provisions of the American Constitution. As citizens they can, through the agency of legal guardians, hold property. The California courts have been crowded with applications for guardianship of such infants for the purpose of making purchases of real estate in their name, thus evading the intent of the law.

There is also what is known as the "picture bride" phase of the subject. A young Japanese laborer in the United States, unmarried, desires a wife and family. He sends to some agency in Japan, the exact nature of which I do not know, and informs the agency of his desire. A number of photographs are sent him of young Japanese women who are subject to their order. From these photographs he selects one that best pleases him, and the young woman is shipped from Japan to the United States. He meets her and they are married. Often she works on the farm or in the field like any other laborer. Children born of such marriages, under the constitutional provision that I have mentioned, become citizens of the United States, and may, under legal guardianship, hold real estate; many in California, born in these conditions, do so hold real estate.

I am not fully informed as to the details of the proposed referendum on this subject to be voted upon at the election in November, as it has been presented since my departure from the United States, but I presume that it is intended to fill the gaps through which the present anti-Japanese land-owning law is evaded in the ways that I have described. In the interest of a long-continued friendship between Japan and America, I believe that this law should be made effective and that Japanese immigration should cease. It should not be left open as a cause for irritation.

As to the charge that the legislation proposed will result in confiscation of the property of Japanese, I will say that I would certainly not approve legislation that would have that effect, and no honest men could. But there is a clause in the Constitution of the United States, as there is in the constitution of California, that no resident of the Nation or State can be deprived of property without just compensation and without due process of law. If the proposed California legislation should justify the interpretation which it had been given in Japan, which I greatly doubt, under the constitutional provisions that I have mentioned, the courts would undoubtedly nullify it.

I ask you to remember that our country is not free from very serious problems. Our country is called the "melting pot," upon the theory that all races and all nationalities melt into a homogeneous nationality under our system and come out Americans. Of late we have been learning that this is not altogether true. We have taken into our political system an enormous percentage of foreigners, and many of them do not "melt" and become Americans. They remain an undigested mass in the stomach of our political system, causing many troubles. Many of our statesmen favor an entire cessation of all foreign immigration for a period of years, until we shall at least catch up with our digesting process, instead of going on and taking in new foreign material.

Remember also that in some parts of America we have race questions of the utmost seriousness, which frequently manifest themselves in the ways that we all deeply regret. We do not desire to add other race problems to these that we already have, and think it better to head them off before they have become serious. In this way we believe that we will best serve the cause of peace and friendship between Japan and America.

In thus frankly setting forth the viewpoint of California on this question, as I understand it, I trust that I have not overstepped the lines of courtesy, as I highly value the esteem and friendship of the eminent citizens and statesmen of Japan here assembled.

I was thanked for making the statement that I had made and for its fair tone, but no reply was attempted to be made to the argument in favor of the California view that the statement itself carried. In talking with Viscount Shibusawa, when he called on me at the Imperial Hotel two or three days before, I had gone over this same ground, but not quite so fully. I also made one other suggestion to him, which I did not repeat at this time, as it did not specially apply to the California situation. Mr. SMALL referred to the same matter in his talk, preceding mine. I said to the viscount:

There is one other matter of which I should speak. We of the United States who have some familiarity with Japan know, or think we know, that you and those who act with you favor peace; that your desires are to build up the commerce and industries of your country, to maintain friendly relations with America and other nations, and to foster the arts of peace, that your country may become strong and your people enjoy the fruits of peace. But we also have the idea that, although the element of which you are a leader control the civil government, there is another strong element in the Government in Japan that has quite different ideals, and that this other element in the final analysis has the greater power and controls the actions of your Government. I refer to the military power. We have the idea that the military powers frequently take vital steps in Japan's relations with foreign powers that you and your friends would not yourselves initiate or favor, and that they commit you to harsh and repugnant foreign policies, and having committed Japan they leave you to explain such actions as best you can; in other words, that your military leaders act independently of the civil government and entirely outside their control.

I then told him how in our Government, in times of peace, Congress, representing the civil authority, always had control of the military powers through the ability to grant or withhold appropriations of money for its support.

The viscount's reply was that the military power in Japan was steadily waning. In olden times it had been very strong, but of late years it had been steadily decreasing. He did not, however, say that I was positively mistaken.

One other thing that I told him was about the "picture brides" in California. In reply I was told that this practice had been stopped since last May, I think.

I made one other talk on this subject at a Japanese dinner, and I have since felt relieved that I unburdened my mind on the subject and in the highest quarters in Japan.

The Japanese gentlemen received my talk without apparent annoyance or resentment, and were very cordial in bidding us good-by.

A VISIT TO KAMAKURA—ANOTHER GIANT BUDDHA.

On the morning of September 12 I went to Kamakura, which is about a two hours' ride by rail from Tokyo, on the seashore. It is a wonderfully picturesque old place, with many ancient shrines and temples, many modern villas of Japanese noblemen, and an imperial summer residence. In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries this place was the capital of the Empire.

Another of the three giant Buddhas, or Daibutsus, of Japan, and second in size to that at Nara, is located here. This one is 50 feet in height and 3½ feet less than the one at Nara, but appears smaller. It stands in the open air and on a granite pedestal, and with a background of fine old Cryptomeria trees. The eyes, which are each 4 feet across, are said to be of pure gold. The casting was made in 1252, nearly 700 years ago, and it has been visited by millions of pilgrims.

Another of the sights of Kamakura is the great Hachiman Shrine, one of the most imposing in Japan. The site of the present shrine has been occupied as a shrine for centuries, but the present structure is quite modern—only about 100 years old.

WE SAIL FOR HOME.

Word was passed around on Sunday evening to the few left at the Imperial Hotel that the Madawaska was to sail from Yokohama at 4 o'clock on the following day, Monday, September 13, and that a special train would take us over to Yokohama, leaving at 10 a. m. The Japanese welcoming committee went with us, and many others were at the station to say good-by and to bid us "bon voyage."

On our arrival at Yokohama we went direct to the Madawaska, which was lying at the dock with steam up, to see our luggage aboard and to locate ourselves in our assigned rooms.

Some of our Japanese friends shed tears on saying good-by.

The wharf was crowded with Americans and Japanese as the steamer rather quickly cleared the wharf, turned around, and started out of the harbor—a very busy one, with lots of shipping. Soon we were out in the bay, with many attractive islands to our right and left. It was about dark when we passed out of Tokyo Bay into the open ocean, and our last glimpse shoreward showed the fading lights of several busy towns of a very wonderful and interesting country.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] desire to allot any further time?

Mr. CANNON. I do not. I think the bill better be read.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further allotment of time, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1922, $500,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. Before it is reported I desire to state that I realize that the amendment is subject to a point of order, but I will ask the chairman of the committee to withhold the point for a few minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I shall make the point when it is necessary and withhold it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BANKHEAD: Page 2, after line 12, add a new section, as follows:

"Section 9 of the act approved June 4, 1920, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes,' is hereby repealed."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his courtesy. I presented this matter rather extensively to the committee a few moments ago. I think that the question of providing a repeal of the section of the naval appropriation bill that prohibits ex-service men who are honorably discharged from the service from wearing the uniforms issued to them by the Government is a great injustice to those men.

I feel sure that every member of the committee agrees with me that it is a matter of sufficient importance to justify immediate action of some sort by the House of Representatives and the Senate. I realize, of course, that my amendment is obnoxious to the rule with reference to germaneness and new legislation, but I merely desire to offer the amendment for this purpose in order that the committee to which will be referred the bill or resolution I expect to introduce this afternoon on the subject may have pointed out to it the specific legislation that it is necessary to repeal in order to get relief.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have not traced the origin of this section in the appropriation bill for the maintenance of the Navy. Was section 8 an amendment offered in the Senate or in the House?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not get a copy of the original House bill. I obtained only a copy of the act as it passed and was approved. My impression is that an examination will disclose that the section was not put into the original House bill, but was a Senate amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It clearly would have been subject to a point of order in the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. I found on examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the debate when the House bill was passed that absolutely no reference was made to this section in debate. As it was clearly subject to a point of order, if it had been offered, that convinces me that it must have been offered in the Senate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I agree with the contention of the gentleman, that the law never should have been enacted and should be repealed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was certainly the intention of Congress, as far as this House was concerned, to provide that all honorably discharged men could wear the uniform provided they displayed upon their sleeves some distinctive emblem to show they were in that class.

I am very much obliged to my friend, the chairman of the committee, for his indulgence, and I do not feel like pressing him to waive the point of order. I feel that it would be a very grave infraction of the rules, but it might be justified as a matter of expediency if the gentleman upon reflection might see fit to waive the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Well, after all, this is a pension bill, I will say, and the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs—it was on the naval bill, was it not—having put it on, they had better take it off. In other words, if I should be on the conference committee I would not want to hold this pension bill up in the event it was insisted upon on the other side because it does not belong on this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I want to say I have no possible complaint in reference to the attitude assumed by the chairman of the committee. From his standpoint I think he is thoroughly justified.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was unable to hear the gentleman from Illinois. Does he make the point of order or withdraw the reservation?

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman had better withdraw his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. I will make it, if it is necessary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact I served the purpose I really had in mind and got in the RECORD the section which is obnoxious, I shall ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman withdrawing the amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH, Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 15334, the pension bill, had directed him to report the same back without amendment with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I call up the bill H. R. 15196, an omnibus pension bill, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 15196, an omnibus pension bill, be now considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15196) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. GARRETT. I suppose the gentleman does not mean to dispense with the reading of the bill. I suppose at some time the bill has to be read.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I did not catch what the gentleman said.

Mr. GARRETT. There is no first and second reading of a bill being considered in the House. There is to be only one reading. If the gentleman wants to make his remarks before the bill is read, there is no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 12. I wish to offer an amendment on page 12.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to page 12 of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Page 12, line 11, strike out "$30" and insert in lieu thereof "$20."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FULLER of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I want to ask leave to extend my remarks upon the tariff bill passed last night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks upon the tariff bill passed yesterday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table it may be in order to take up bills on the Private Calendar in the House and consider those bills to which at that time objection is not made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the reading and approval of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, it shall be in order to take up bills on the Private Calendar in the House and consider those unobjected to. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I do so for the purpose, if the gentleman will permit me, of propounding a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair concerning the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the unanimous-consent request made by the gentleman from Wyoming, should the calendar be called and all of the cases pending on it be called through the calendar, then would it be in order thereafter for those cases to be recalled even over an objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would think not under the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Unquestionably not.

Mr. BLANTON. That was held here at one time, gentlemen will remember, and numerous cases passed over objection. If that were the rule in this House, then I would be forced to object, but if it is only that those cases unobjected to may be called I shall not object.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the request..

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The precedent cited by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was on a Private Calendar day.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. That is the distinction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—WORLD DAIRY CONGRESS (S. DOC. NO. 347).

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Acting Secretary of State, with an accompanying copy of a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture favoring legislation by the Congress that will give governmental sanction to the world's dairy congress which it is contemplated to hold in the United States in 1922, and will enable the Government of the United States officially to invite participation of foreign Governments therein.

I invite the attention of the Congress to the commercial and scientific value which the Secretary of Agriculture thinks would accrue to the important dairy industry of the United States by holding the proposed congress, and I ask for the matter the favorable consideration of the Congress.

It will be observed that no appropriation is asked for at this time, but that if the holding of the proposed congress be authorized by the Congress of the United States it may be that the dairy organizations of the United States may, if found necessary, ask the Congress for a small appropriation in addition to the $100,000 which they themselves propose to raise.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
23 December, 1920.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The message and accompanying documents will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered printed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Or the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, it should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I submit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised and understands that similar messages involving matters of like import have been referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. ROGERS. If the Chair will pardon me a moment, I will say that the annual Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill contains 20 or 30 provisions for international congresses of various kinds, such things as have no possible relationship, so far as subject matter goes, to foreign affairs, or to that committee, but because they call for international meetings they are deemed by this House, I think, to present a question of foreign affairs which ought to be within the jurisdiction of that committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Well, with the consent of the House the Chair will defer the reference of the matter until the Speaker returns.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, under the order previously made, until Monday, December 27, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 27, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we would not be true to the trusts that have been committed to us if we undertook the duties of a new day in our own self-sufficiency or if we did less than invoke Thy blessing upon the labor of our hands and hearts. We look to Thee, the guide of all men, the judge of all men, and yet we have been taught to call Thee our Father and know that Thou hast an infinite interest in all that pertains to the welfare of our children. Grant us such measure of grace to-day as that we may do the things that are pleasing in Thy sight to forward the cause that is nearest to Thy heart, the cause of peace and justice and righteousness in the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

COURTS IN CONNECTICUT.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4682) to amend section 74 of the Judicial Code as amended, and I ask for its present consideration.

I will state for the information of the Senate that the bill simply provides an additional day for holding the district court in my State at Norwalk, in addition to the regular terms at Hartford and New Haven. In other respects the present law stands exactly as it is. That is the effect of the bill, and I ask that it be read.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 74 of the Judicial Code as amended be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 74. The State of Connecticut shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Connecticut. Terms of the district court shall be held at New Haven on the fourth Tuesdays in February and September, at Hartford on the fourth Tuesday in May and the first Tuesday in December, and at Norwalk on the fourth Tuesday in April: Provided, however, That suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for the holdings of said court and for the use of the officers of said court at Norwalk free of expense to the Government of the United States."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill for a second reading.

The bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, was read the second time by its title.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the bill is now ready for reference?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce. In support of that motion, I draw attention to the fact that it is a bill whose purpose it is to impose an embargo upon the commerce of imports to the United States from other countries. It is not a bill to raise revenue. Its chief purpose, according to all the discussion, is a bill to regulate the commerce of the United States by erecting tariff barriers against the importation of certain commodities. Under those circumstances it seems to me evident that its proper reference is to the Committee on Commerce and not to the Committee on Finance.

Of course, on the merits of the question I hold very strong views. It seems to me that at this time of all others the country ought not to raise tariff barriers against doing business with any nation in the world. What we need above all other things at this time is to do business with the other countries. We have enormous exportable surpluses in the country. This year our exports will amount to $3,000,000,000 more than our imports.

Our exports can only be paid for in cash or credits or products. It is obvious that they can not be paid for in cash, because we have such a large percentage of the gold of the world that practically speaking no other country in the world can send us any gold. Each of the other countries has impounded all the gold that it has and is clinging desperately to it. There are only two other ways in which the other countries can purchase our products from us. One is by credits and the other is by selling products to us.

We have reached a point where we all realize that credit is approaching exhaustion. During the present year we have sold to the other countries something like $3,000,000,000 on credit, and during 1919 we sold to the other countries $3,000,000,000 on credit. That credit is largely obtained in our banking institutions, and that credit is largely responsible for so exhausting the credit facilities of our banks that our own people have not been able to find adequate credit.

We out in the agricultural regions realize fully the serious need of credit. Our farmers who raise wheat and corn and hogs and cattle have not been able to secure enough credit; and so in the South those who raise cotton and other products have not been able to secure enough credit, and have been compelled to dump their products upon the markets simultaneously, which has resulted in ruinous prices for them.

Now, in this situation, Mr. President, should we erect tariff barriers to prevent the other countries from selling us their products which will go to pay for the things that we ought to export? We have become a creditor Nation to an enormous extent, and we can not afford to erect these tariff barriers against all the rest of the world because we must, if we maintain any degree of prosperity, have a market for our great exportable surplus.

In view of the situation, it seems to me a shocking proposition to bring a bill of this sort into Congress, which proposes to erect great tariff barriers against our best customers and to rush that bill through Congress without a hearing, practically, almost without a meeting of the committees constitued for the purpose of considering such matters.

The bill that passed the House, as is well known, received very inadequate consideration, almost no hearings at all before the great committees. Here in the Senate the machinery is already set to rush the bill through without any hearings whatever, just upon somebody's assumption that the thing to do to bring relief to the agriculturists of the West is to erect tariff barriers against the rest of the world, tariff barriers which must inevitably interfere with the opportunity of the West to sell their products to the rest of the world.

In view of this situation, it seems to me the bill should go to the committee which has in charge the consideration of the commerce of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In a moment I will very gladly yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to ask a question upon the subject the Senator is discussing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to ask what products we are sending to Australia in any way to offset the enormous quantity of wool that is coming in from Australia? What are we turning over to Canada in the way of agricultural products to offset the immense quantity of grain that is coming from Canada and which, as the Senator himself has said, we must export? The Senator spoke of the Canadians being our best customers. Certainly he can not say that Australia purchases a great deal from the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a very fair question; it is a question which the committee should consider and consider carefully; but the Senator from North Dakota is well aware that the trade of the world is not arranged on the basis of selling to any particular country an exact balance of what we buy from any particular country.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator fear that the committee will not give the matter adequate consideration?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, judging by what has already happened and the disposition that has been shown and the reports which are current, I understood that this bill was to be rushed through as an emergency measure and to have little, if any, consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator is drawing conclusions that are not at all warranted. The matter has not come before the committee. I am certain that it will receive adequate consideration by the committee. I do not think the Senator will seriously contend that being a tariff bill, even though it might stop importations in some instances, still it should go to the Committee on Commerce any more than any other tariff bill should go to that committee.

I desired to allay the Senator's fear that the measure would not have fair consideration, and if the Senator will allow me, I wish to tell him exactly what protection, for instance, there is on wheat under the House proposal, in order that he may see that it would not be a very big economic barrier, when the difference of exchange is taken into consideration.

Wheat from Canada, say from Winnipeg, is at present, or was the other day, selling for $1.85 per bushel in Canadian currency, while it was $1.84 per bushel in Chicago at the same time. The difference between the exchange would average about 15 per cent. The 15 per cent would be equivalent to 27½ cents. Now, subtract the 27½ cents from 30 cents per bushel—which the tariff would average per bushel, as the House measure provides—and it would give the American producer just 3½ cents per bushel protection. We lived through the 30 per cent protection, and we got considerable imports. Even that 3½ cents protection per bushel is more than met by the difference between Canadian No. 1 northern wheat and American No. 1 northern, the Canadian requirement being higher than is the requirement for the same grade in the United States, which would make an equivalent for milling purposes, I should estimate, of about 7 or 8 cents per bushel. So when we take these matters into consideration, and also the exchange, with the 3 or 4 cents protection, the American farmer would still hardly be on an even basis with the Canadian farmer.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota and I disagree radically. The idea of protecting the growers of American wheat is either a delusion and a snare or it is a confidence game; it is a gold brick given to them. Our wheat is sold upon the markets of the world, and if we do not meet Canadian wheat in our market we shall meet Canadian wheat in the places to which we export our surplus wheat. It is that export surplus which fixes the price of wheat. This country has raised seven or eight hundred million bushels of wheat—perhaps more—and it has an exportable surplus; it is exporting that surplus, and if the Canadian wheat does not meet our American wheat in Chicago it will meet it in Livorpool or in some other foreign market. The American wheat grower receives absolutely no protection whatever; and protection is not what the American wheat grower needs. What the American wheat grower needs at present is credit, and he needs with it an unfettered trade with the other nations of the world. He needs credit for his products, not only domestic but international. The American wheat grower of intelligence is not going to be deluded by the gold brick which is offered him into believing that this barrier against Canadian wheat is going to enable him to get a better price for his product.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota speaks of Canada. I tell him that Canada is perhaps the very best customer the United States has. To Canada every year we export $800,000,000 worth of products, and from Canada we import only one-half that amount; and yet, while Canada is only able to send to us one-half as much as we export to her, it is proposed to erect barriers against that which she is exporting to us. Such a policy strikes me as suicidal in this emergency.

I realize that there are people who think that the proposed tariff on wheat and corn and sheep and mutton and wool is going to be of some value; but I believe it will do an infinite amount of damage to the United States at this time to begin to erect barriers so as to interfere with trade with the remainder of the world. We have become a great creditor nation; we are almost in the position in which Great Britain has been in the past; and we shall be injured by anything that interferes with our trade. We have not only loaned $10,000,000,000 of Government money belonging to our people to the remainder of the world, upon which they already owe us an enormous balance of seven or eight hundred million dollars of interest, but our bankers and our credit concerns have, as we know, advanced to the rest of the world $3,000,000,000 last year, with another $3,000,000,000 this year, with which to pay for the balance of trade. Now it is proposed to make that task harder and to put a still greater strain upon credit by erecting barriers against receiving their products here to help pay for those things that we ought to sell to them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me see if I understand the Senator accurately. The Senator thinks what we ought to do is to find a market for our surplus of wheat, and that we ought to direct our energies toward marketing the surplus that we now have. Is that correct?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What I say is that this country should be the last one in the world in this juncture to erect barriers against trade with the other countries——

Mr. McCUMBER. I know the Senator said that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Because we have a great exportable surplus. People in other countries of the world are starving for the wheat we are raising here; people in other parts of the world have the utmost need for the surplus cotton that is really rotting in this country at the present time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understood that is what the Senator said.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The people of other nations of the world have urgent need for the surpluses which we have in this country, not only of wheat and cotton, but also of wool. Only a little while ago the agents of Poland were over here and seeking to buy wool in this market, which is supposed to be overstocked. They found no means by which they could secure in the United States the credit which was necessary to buy the wool. They went to Great Britain; the British Government gave those Polish representatives the credit, and the wool was purchased in Great Britain and in Australia. We should be busy, in my opinion, in this country providing individual credit to enable foreign nations to trade with us; but at the same time we are providing that credit we should be very careful not to erect any barriers against their paying us in products.

I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not know but that the Senator had finished. If he has not, I will wait until he has concluded.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am showing, Mr. President, why I think this bill, whose name, in all honesty, should be "a bill to regulate trade and commerce with other countries," should go to the committee that has to do with and examines into matters affecting trade and commerce, and not to a committee that considers measures proposing to levy taxes. The purpose of the bill is not to raise taxes. The enactment of a bill to raise taxes has been by general agreement postponed until the next session of Congress. This bill has not that purpose; it is an embargo bill; it is devised as an embargo bill. It was concluded not to call it an embargo bill, but, in fact, it is an embargo bill. The report on the bill presented by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, as well as the views presented by the minority of that committee, show by their arguments that it is designed to check imports into this country. Therefore, Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the proper committee, which is the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think I have quite accurately followed the reasoning of the Senator. He says that foreign countries are starving for our wheat, and he wants to give them credit in order to help us send our wheat to them. He says the farmers in the West and Northwest want to get rid of their surplus, and in order to do so want to find a market for that surplus. That is true; I agree with that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not aim to quote me in such an inaccurate way. I said that this country needs, above everything else, the unfettered opportunity to trade with the remainder of the world and that every barrier which is erected against the importation of anything from the other nations of the world makes it difficult for us to sell our products of whatever sort they are to foreign countries.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator spoke of the necessity of finding a market and of giving credit in some way to foreign Governments or to their people in order that they may be able to purchase our products. I agree with him upon that. I voted for the bill to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation for that purpose, and we hope that it may assist us along that line. I think that measure may do some good; but before we can get a living price for our products in foreign markets or anywhere else we have got to be able to sell them abroad; we have got to find customers; and if it is difficult for us to find a customer for the 180,000,000 bushels of surplus wheat which we have on hand to export, is not the difficulty added to if we import into the United States 150,000,000 bushels in addition to that, thus increasing the number of bushels that we must export before we can hold our price up to a living standard? That is the situation with which we are met. Mostly on account of the difference in the exchange, we are receiving the entire Canadian surplus of wheat, which amounts to very close to 200,000,000 bushels. At the same time we are attempting to find a market for our surplus, so that it may be sold.

I have before me a letter from a man in my State who operates a large farm and who, of course, has to hire considerable labor. He tells me that the actual cost of raising his wheat this year was about $2.50 a bushel. The market price is $1.17 a bushel at the place where he lives. Of course, he is desirous of breaking even if possible. We do not object so seriously that the farmer should be made the "goat" in all instances, but we object to bearing so heavily upon him that he can not operate his farm at all. We want a little assistance; we want to close the opening of the top of the barrel while we are attempting to draw off a little of the surplus at the spigot. If all the Canadian grain is to come into the United States—I mean all, of course, that is for export—we have increased our responsibility and our export liability.

Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska says that the provisions of this bill amount to a prohibition, to an embargo. The House bill, however, does not amount to anything, so far as wheat is concerned, for it would be practically of little or no value to the wheat farmer. I understood that in the House the bill would provide a tariff of 50 cents per bushel, or 25 cents per bushel with the rate of exchange taken into consideration, which would bring it up to about in the neighborhood of 50 cents a bushel. As a matter of fact, as I have shown you, we would receive under the House bill a protection, if you call it a protection, of about 3½ cents per bushel after making allowance for the difference in exchange. The Canadian wheat would come over just exactly the same. It would pay its small duty, and the Canadian farmer could still undersell the American farmer.

In my State, and in the entire northwest section of the country, all the way from eastern Montana to western Minnesota, which takes in the Red River Valley, I do not think we have more than a quarter of an average crop. Senators can easily understand, then, the extreme hardship in those sections of the country. When they have had to hire labor at excessively high wages, when the thrashing bill itself amounted to more than 30 cents a bushel, Senators can see how difficult it is for the farmers even to live through the winter. They are attempting to hold their grain until they can secure somewhat better prices; but with the Canadian crop coming in and supplying the deficiency, the withholding of their grain from market at the present time is giving them no benefit whatever. The price is still low.

Mr. President, while I could not under any circumstances vote for this bill as it comes over from the House, I hope it will be referred to the committee to which it properly belongs, receive proper consideration in the committee, and that at some time after our reassembling in January it may have full and fair consideration before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I disagree with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that this is an embargo bill. This bill will not prevent the importation of wheat nor other items mentioned in the bill. It is a revenue bill, pure and simple.

Take the item of wool alone: To-day wool comes into this country free. Under this bill we impose a duty of 15 cents a pound on it. There is no question but a limited amount of wool will come into the country with a rate of duty of 15 cents a pound, and will yield a revenue, so the bill is a revenue measure. I might add other items in the bill as to which exactly the same thing is true. It is not an embargo bill in any sense of the word. There will be revenue derived from it; and as far as referring the bill to the Committee on Commerce is concerned, I do not think the motion is made in good faith.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I notice in this bill that unwashed wool carries a duty of 15 cents a pound.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. What was the tariff on unwashed wool in the Payne-Aldrich bill? I am sure the Senator remembers.

Mr. SMOOT. Eleven cents a pound.

Mr. HARRISON. In this bill washed wool has a duty of 30 cents a pound. What was it in the Payne-Aldrich bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Twenty-two cents.

Mr. HARRISON. And the duty on scoured wool in this bill is 45 cents a pound, with a compensatory duty of 45 cents a pound in addition to existing duties on the manufactures of wool. What was that in the Payne-Aldich bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Thirty-three cents a pound. The duties carried by this bill are in the same proportion, as between wool in the grease, washed wool, and scoured wool, as the duties which the Payne-Aldrich bill provided; but I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that a duty of 15 cents a pound will not keep foreign wools out of the United States, but will at least limit their importation.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask these questions merely to show that this bill in every instance carries a larger tariff than was carried in the Payne-Aldrich bill, which the leaders of the Senator's own party condemned, and said was infamous.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is a temporary measure. There never was a condition in the United States such as exists to-day with regard to most of the items enumerated in this bill.

Take wool, for instance, to which the Senator has referred. If there were not another pound of wool imported into the United States for two years, if there were not a pound of wool clipped from an American sheep for the next two years, there is enough wool in the United States to run the mills of the country for that time, with the exception of a line of very fine wools that come from Australia.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. If there is enough wool in this country to last for two years, what good would it do to stop the wool from coming in?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as long as the foreigner can get American dollars for their wool, there will be enough sent in here to last us for three years, unless there is some kind of a temporary duty imposed upon wool. There is to-day over 20,000,000 pounds of wool on the way to our ports and will arrive just as quickly as the boats can land it here.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, if there is two years' supply held in this country now, will the Senator tell us how keeping other wool from coming in at this time is going to help the woolgrower until that two years' supply is used up?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, it certainly will help the woolgrower with regard to next year's crop. It certainly will stabilize the market here to-day, and it certainly will give the American woolgrower a chance to sell his wool in competition with wools that hereafter will come into this country. I want to say to the Senator, too, that if there is a duty placed upon the wools that are coming in here now, the price of those wools will be higher. I do not want to deny it. I want to say frankly that that will be the case.

Mr. REED. So that it will raise the price of wool?

Mr. SMOOT. It certainly will.

Mr. REED. And who will pay that increase?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the ultimate consumer pays only the amount of duty that the bill imposes upon wool, he will never feel it. I will take, for instance, the suit of clothes which the Senator has on. How much wool does he think is in it, and what does the 15 cents a pound duty enhance the price of the suit?

Mr. REED. This suit I got before the war, so I think it has some wool in it; but I think any suit of clothes bought now has very little wool in it. There ought to be some put into it.

Mr. SMOOT. So little, I was going to say, that it will amount to nothing. If you want to get at the cost to the consumer, you will have to find it from some other source than the producer of the wool, at the price at which wool is imported into the United States to-day. I saw an account only yesterday of quarter-bloods of South American wool being sold for 9 cents a pound. On that basis there is not a suit of clothes worn by a man in this Chamber the wool in which will cost more than 90 cents.

The Senator from Nebraska is very much worried over the matter of credits in connection with the exportation of wheat, and says the importation ought to offset our exportation of goods. Let us look at the situation just as it is. Why can not Canada finance her exportations of wheat and not have our market to sell in for cash? What country is there, outside of America, that can extend credits to foreign countries to purchase large quantities of wheat? As long as we are allowing Canada to ship her wheat into the United States, and receive our dollars for it, she is not compelled to extend or worry about credit in any foreign country.

The Senator refers to the question of Poland and England in connection with wool transactions. America did not sell her the wool, he says, because of the fact that she did not arrange a credit. England arranged the credit, and yet England owes us to-day more money than was ever paid by Poland for wool in the interest upon her obligations to the United States. How did she arrange the credit for Poland? Just the same as the United States would have had to arrange it. America did not arrange the credit, but England did. If, however, England had paid us the interest she was owing on her obligations to us, perhaps we could have extended credit without increasing our inflated currency.

Mr. President, it is not a question of making a tariff bill for the future; it is a question as to whether we want to save the industries mentioned in the bill from immediate ruin in many cases. No tariff act that can be passed is going to save half of the sheepmen of this country, because they are ruined to-day. Nothing can save them; but if a measure can be passed here that will at least give confidence to the men that have advanced the grower the money, to carry them on from year to year, so that they can sell a part of their product, it ought to be done; and that is all that this bill can do, if it does that.

Mr. President, as far as the motion of the Senator from Nebraska is concerned, to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce, I take it for granted that there is not a Senator here who thinks this is a proper bill to go to that committee. It is a bill that should go to the Finance Committee, and I have not any doubt but that it will go there.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is an expert on this subject. May I ask the Senator if he is in favor of placing frozen meats in this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly I am in favor of it; and if the Senator would go into the cold-storage plants of the United States, and see the hundreds of thousands of carcasses, if not millions of them, shipped from foreign countries, held in cold storage to-day, I think he would be in favor of it.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to say to the Senator that I am gratified to know that he is, because his party at the other end of the Capitol were not, and they did not place them in this bill, although an amendment was offered to that effect; and I shall be very much in favor of putting such a proposition in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Mississippi will be in favor of putting anything in this bill in order to secure its defeat.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I am perfectly open about that proposition. I am very much opposed to the bill.

Mr. GERRY obtained the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Ohio for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. GERRY. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. The other day the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] discussed very interestingly and very instructively the high price which he had to pay a few days ago for meat.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Which was certainly a very exorbitant price. If the Senator had to pay that price for meat, there are a good many who would have to go without meat in this country, who could not afford to pay it. In view of that fact, does the Senator still think that there should be a tariff duty on meats?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. Mr. President, the question of the cost of meat to the retailer is another proposition. The profits are made in the sale by the retailer to the consumer.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order that this question is not debatable, and I cite this ruling of the Vice President, to be found on page 173 of Volume II of Gilfry's Precedents of the Senate:

> During the morning hour Mr. NORRIS moved to refer a communication from the Attorney General to the Committee on the Judiciary.
> It was a motion to refer a matter to a committee.
> The VICE PRESIDENT (Mr. MARSHALL). The Chair holds that during the morning hour the motion is not debatable.

I submit, Mr. President, in support of that that the entire spirit of Rule VII and Rule VIII, covering the consideration of business during the morning hour, is that it shall be disposed of without debate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to address myself to the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will listen to the Senator from Mississippi on the point of order for a moment.

Mr. HARRISON. Must a Senator address himself to the point of order, or to the subject?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood that the morning business was closed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not closed. On the point of order raised by the Senator from Washington the Chair will state that during a ruling of the Chair March 28, 1914, the following occurred:

> The VICE PRESIDENT. In this connection the Chair desires to make a statement. The Chair was in error in ruling that the question of the reference of a bill to a committee is not debatable. The Chair was under the impression that the question was one of those questions which, under Rule XXII, are not debatable; but the Chair finds that the question is debatable. Therefore the ruling of the Chair heretofore made in reference to the matter will not stand as a precedent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry. Does that apply to a motion made during the morning hour?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I hope that, no matter what committee this bill shall be referred to, full hearings will be held upon it. From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I learn that the bill was introduced in the House with practically no hearings, except some statements from wool and cattle men relating to the bad condition of those industries. The Tariff Commission was not heard, and apparently the committee did not call for reports from it.

When the bill came into the House a cloture rule was placed on it, and it was passed with very limited debate, with the result that many Members were only able to express their views on it subsequent to the passage of the bill, by being granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD. There is no question but that this bill has been very hurriedly conceived and then rushed through the lower House on the ground that it is an emergency measure.

Mr. President, I do not believe that it is wise in any respect to try to remedy economic conditions by putting through ill-considered measures. They are much more apt to create greater harm than they can ever remedy. In fact, from the debates in the House it has been suggested that this bill was not really offered seriously, for the purpose of relieving an emergency, or even in the belief that it would become a law, but rather the suggestion was made that it was intended for political expediency, and when I read the bill over and consider it—and I have had very little time to do that—I am convinced that there must be some such reason for the introduction of such a measure.

It is impossible to write a tariff bill piecemeal. If this bill is passed, putting a new tariff on wool, putting a new tariff on wheat, putting a new tariff on cotton, cattle, and other products, the result is going to be that other schedules in the existing tariff law will have to be rewritten. Naturally an increase in the tariff on raw materials means a decrease in the tariff on the manufactures of those materials.

Mr. President, to show with what lack of system this bill was considered, some of the rates imposed in it are higher than the rates of the Payne-Aldrich bill, and some are lower. There is a new tax on cattle and none on dairy products. There is a tax on wool, when it has already been stated in this Chamber that there is wool in storage in tremendous quantities, and a tax on the importation of sheep. The result undoubtedly will be that the men who hold the wool now in storage, who are not the farmers, will be able to reap a profit out of this bill; the profiteer will again have an advantage, and the farmer will receive no benefit.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GERRY. In a moment. I do not believe that this tariff, passed at this time as an emergency measure, will save the sheep of the country, and if the sheep are killed off, as it has been suggested that they will be on account of the high price of food, the result will be that when the farmer wants to buy them back, with this tariff still in existence, he will have to pay more for his ewes. Now I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator understood that at least 85 per cent of the wool clip of last year is still owned by the woolgrower. It is held by the commission house, and I know some cases where there has been a 25 cent advance on the wool, and in such cases there has been a demand made upon the woolgrower for a return of 10 cents a pound. So whatever advantage comes will come to the woolgrower, and not to the commission man.

Mr. GERRY. I understood that a statement to that effect was made in the House and was contradicted. I do not come from a wool State, and I am unable to argue the question with the Senator from Utah. I have not the information, and I have not had time to look it up. But Members of the House who were familiar with that situation had divergent views upon it.

But it is perfectly apparent, Mr. President, that if the farmer is to be helped in this way, as I said before, there will be a reaction upon the manufacturer; there will be a reaction on the consumer in the cost of his products, and I do not think that there is any bill that has been introduced in this body that would have a worse effect on the people in my part of the country, who are suffering from the depression that has existed ever since the election. They are now suffering from lack of employment, are seeking more than ever a reduction in the high cost of living. The object of a bill of this sort is to place an embargo on certain highly important commodities.

Mr. President, I can not imagine a greater injury that could be done to the thickly populated centers, the manufacturing States, the States where the people earn their living not by the products of the farm but through manufacture and commerce, than a bill of this sort, whose acknowledged object is to raise the price of all those basic commodities of food and clothing which are absolutely essential in order to sustain life.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GERRY. Yes; certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator speaks of its effect in raising the price of food to the people. The Senator was here the other day, I think, when there was reported to the Senate a bill with an account showing where some nearly 2,000 ewes had been shipped from Montana into the market. The condition was so bad that the ewes had to be shipped, and those ewes were first sent on to Denver, then to Omaha, and finally landed in Chicago, and after deducting the cost of shipping, including feed, the owner of those ewes got 32 cents apiece for them. If the price of the ewes had been raised so that he would have gotten even $1 or $1.50, does the Senator think it would have made any difference in the price he would have to pay for a mutton chop? For instance, if the farmer got for the ewe 32 cents, and the Senator pays 50 cents for a single mutton chop, does the Senator think there is any very close relation between what the farmer got and what the Senator pays in a restaurant as the price of that meat?

Mr. GERRY. I will say to the Senator that I know the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee made that argument in the House when the bill was up for consideration. Naturally there are certain economic laws which govern the cost of living, and those economic laws can be set aside, and they often are set aside, by the profiteer. I personally feel that we should do everything we can to offset these conspiracies to sustain the high cost of living and to make huge profits. These conspiracies are conspiracies in restraint of trade. But I think that when we are going to do that we should not also try to complicate the situation more by putting an embargo on essential commodities, which is bound to basically raise their price.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the 50-cent per chop for mutton did not go down when the farmer got 32 cents for a whole sheep, wool and all, does the Senator think that if the farmer had even gotten a dollar or a dollar and a half for the sheep it would have increased the price of the chop that is served to him?

Mr. GERRY. I think undoubtedly that if the price of sheep continues to fall you will find that your mutton chops will go down too, although it will not probably go down immediately; but I think if you increase the cost of sheep your chances of having your mutton chop decrease in price will be very slim.

Mr. McCUMBER. If ewes are to be sold at such a price that they will not raise any more next year, so that we will depend entirely on importation, it would seem to me that the tendency would be for it to go up another year from now.

Mr. GERRY. Frankly, I will say to the Senator that I do not believe this bill will act in time to prevent the destruction of ewes, on account of the high cost of feed, especially as there is a tariff in this bill covering a great many food products which are fed to cattle and sheep.

But, Mr. President, the whole theory of this form of tariff legislation on certain products is, of course, unsound. It is doubly unsound under present world conditions, where we can only straighten out or help to remedy by barter the situation growing out of the balance of trade. It is impossible to even it up by an importation of gold, because there is not enough gold in Europe to do that, the greater measure of gold being in this country, and it therefore comes back to a question of barter—trade by the interchange of commodities.

When the bill is referred to a committee I hope, as I stated in the beginning of my remarks, that the entire matter will be thrashed out very thoroughly by hearings and that then the Senate will have an opportunity to determine whether they want to take up legislation of this popgun sort.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have an article that appeared yesterday in the New York World which is extremely enlightening and illuminating, and if the Senator from Mississippi is not in any hurry to proceed I ask that the article may be printed in the RECORD, if the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will consent.

Mr. SMOOT. I would rather have the Senator read it.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD as requested.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is a newspaper article and I shall have to object to that request, but the Senator may read the article if he desires.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Utah will remove himself from the Chamber, we can get through more quickly.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator from Mississippi is anxious to get through quickly at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield while I read the article?

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Utah if at 2 o'clock he proposes to lay aside the unfinished business to carry on the consideration of the tariff legislation? I would like to know what is the intention of the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. If we have votes enough, we certainly will do it.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I suggest the absence of a quorum to find out if we have votes enough now to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	La Follette	Poindexter
Beckham	Hale	Lenroot	Pomerene
Borah	Harrison	McCumber	Ransdell
Brandegee	Henderson	McKellar	Reed
Capper	Hitchcock	McLean	Sheppard
Culberson	Johnson, Calif.	McNary	Smoot
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Stanley
Dillingham	Kellogg	Nelson	Sterling
Edge	Kendrick	New	Sutherland
Elkins	Kenyon	Norris	Townsend
Fletcher	Keyes	Nugent	Wadsworth
France	King	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Gerry	Knox	Phipps

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], on which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] that he may read the article to which reference has been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized for that purpose.

AFFAIRS IN THE NEAR EAST.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate for occupying time in the reading of an article, even for a very few moments, but the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] refuses to depart from his well-established rule. I congratulate him upon that course, which is a somewhat vicarious atonement for the space he occupies in the RECORD.

The article that I desire to submit, illuminating and enlightening upon the Near East policy, is one with which I think all of us should be familiar, and it should be brought to the attention of the country, if it be possible. It is an article that appeared yesterday in the New York World, a hard and fast administration paper and chief advocate of the League of Nations among the newspapers of the country. The article is as follows:

HOW SUBTERFUGE AND INTRIGUE HAVE CAMOUFLAGED THE NEAR EAST POLICY OF EUROPE'S DIPLOMATS.

[By Ferdinand Tuohy.]

"LONDON, December 1, 1920.

"Had the late King Alexander not had an encounter with a monkey, the Allies might have held the Balkans and the Near East for years indefinite. That a monkey bite has grievously undermined their authority from Bagdad to Odessa and from Athens to Baku is to one just returned from that part of the world a singularly vivid commentary on the chronic rottenness of the Near East policy pursued by Europe's liberators from armistice onward and crowned at Sevres, where the old and highly breakable china comes from.

"France and England may bury unknown warriors, with none so low as not to do them reverence, but, apparently, they can not or will not fight the germ that laid those warriors low.

"The treaty of Sevres was soaked and saturated in hochpolitik of the most imperialistic nature; that the self-interest and wille zur macht exuded was skillfully camouflaged only makes things worse—has, in fact, put us a rung lower since 1914. It has turned the open power of princes into masquerade, with masks off with midnight arrived, but in one country so far—Russia.

"The particular form of camouflage resorted to in connection with the Near East may, perhaps, be summed up in the verb "to protect." Britain, France, and Italy were all desperately anxious to protect Greece and equally keen that some one else should protect the one country really needing protection in the vicinity—Armenia. In the scramble to protect Hellas of classical form and beauty I imagine John Bull won—truth to tell, old Bull is a pastmaster at protection, though it is not quite clear at times what precise form his protection takes, whether he is protecting himself from his protege, as in Egypt, or his protege from himself, as in Ireland.

"At Sevres the Allies, of course, looked around for a principle upon which to reconstruct the Balkans and the Near East, a principle leaving that part of the world safe for democracy. France wanted a new Crimean war, Italy wanted every little island she sailed up to in the night, and England wanted some one to do police work for her in the neighborhood.

"As an example of the ruling mentality at Sevres and Constantinople I do not think I am transgressing the bounds of private conversation in relating one item Admiral Bristol, the American high commissioner, told me. He and three others were dispatched to Smyrna to report on what ought to be done with that supremely rich coastal strip. The small four reported to the big four that Smyrna could not be given to Greece on any principle whatever. Smyrna was given to Greece. It was given to Greece because the enlightened way of the world to-day is first to consider what raw material a place produces and, secondly, what human beings. That explains why nobody wants Armenia. In Smyrna you trip over figs and tobacco; in Armenia over the outraged bodies of women and children.

"The British policy won, though not without the bitter enmity of France and Italy being fired—an enmity which had to be cooled ever and anon with fresh offerings to these two champions of local liberty. The British policy was to create a great new Greece and to straddle her, with allied backing—moral, economic, and, if necessary, military—across the Balkan Peninsula and Asia Minor.

"I remember sailing along the coast of this new Greece for three days and three nights last summer from Corfu to Constantinople and pondering that the population of the revitalized colossus was considerably less than that of London. It gave one to think at the time; it set one wondering how long Venizelist Greece would last, surrounded, as she was, east and west and south and north by foes. Turkey had been carved up to satiate her; so, too, Bulgaria; Kemal was at war with her, and Italy hated her with a hate of fifty millions choking down.

"The new Greece was to act as an outpost of Britain and to do Britain's work. As a start off she was sent into Asia Minor against Kemal, a constant menace to the British in Mesopotamia—no menace at all to Constantinople. The Smyrna expedition was financed by interested Salonikan millionaires and by one semi-English millionaire. The six divisions sent across the Aegean cost in the vicinity of half a million dollars a day, and the Allies had to find some of this, since Greece was verging on bankruptcy, but the bulk of the money in this first venture at making things safe locally for democracy came from capitalist kings of the Levant. Everywhere one searches in this sorry story of grab-as-grab-can one encounters the same rabid negation of all the war was ostensibly fought for.

"Even between the Allies themselves mean subterfuge and intrigue were resorted to. Thus, the French, having commanded at Saloniki, and having possessed much Balkan prestige before the war, naturally claimed to be the paramount power, overlording the whole situation. This the British agreed to, and Gen. Franchet d'Esperey was installed as commander in chief of the allied forces. In the same document and, pianissimo, Gen. Milne was granted the military command at Constantinople. The French did not see the catch in this. Constantinople, of course, is the whole country, one might say, the whole Near East, and soon Gen. Milne had completely sidetracked the Frenchman, ever after known as 'Desperate Frankey.'

"Meanwhile the Italians went against everyone, aglow with just one notion—to improve the shining hour by opening up trade with all and sundry. They traded with the bolsheviki in the Black Sea, and they passed in arms and aeroplanes to Kemal up the Meander Valley, that these same arms might be employed against the new and hated Greece. For sheer futility and immorality you could not have beaten the Levant last August. Friends were betrayed and bloody hands grasped with a nonchalance unheard of. One day the British were throwing over their vital war friend Feisul in order to subscribe to Gen. Gouraud's Napoleonic behavior on Napoleonic ground of the long ago, and the next the poor, broken, and tattered Serbs, greatest and least sung of war victims, saw forever their vision of a window by the sea float by in order that Italy might be kept quiet and recompensed for losing the Dodecanese.

"Grab-as-grab-can!

"To the wayfarer with a pen it all seemed like some grim Frankenstein experiment, this bisecting and dissecting of martyred territory by foreign offices and foreign bankers, by men at the telephone and with Rolls Royces at the door. It filled one with great melancholy as you passed through the Dardanelles and saw hillside after hillside of Australian dead—23,000 men, who might have been alive to-day in a land of sun and laughter, and who had died for this!

"It seemed like the deliberate and cold-blooded reestablishment of the order that had dug those graves. French, British, and Italians—they were in it for what they could get out of it, and not to bring peace and good will to these lesser tribes of the Mediterranean. Their fine orations had been so many words on the wind; instead of the Kaiser riding through Jerusalem, it was to be King George or King Victor or King Somebody Else. They had remade the map with a scissors, like the three Emperors cut up Poland long ago. What rhyme or reason was there, for example, in bringing the Greeks right up to the threshold of Constantinople? Thrace may have been Greek before Christ, but so was Marseille. Journeying up to Adrianople, I saw no suggestion of any other land but Turkey. But diplomatists do not have to explain why they do things, although not one in any sanely organized business concern but would get the sack for messing things up as the Entente statesmen have done in southern Europe and in Asia Minor.

"They are now, as I write, going to 'revise the treaty of Sevres in Turkey's favor.'

"This one phrase gives the true measure of the Allies' political honesty and Christian disinterestedness among Moslems and others. Their Greek policy having collapsed through a monkey bite, as a result of the Greeks calling for Constantine, whose return means the end of a pro-Entente Greece, the French, British, and Italians must now somehow arrange things between themselves, so that the unspeakable Turk is replaced in power. Well may Chicherin tilt his chair back in the Kremlin and smile at such prewar groping in a postwar world! An Irishman said to me the other day, 'I am gradually becoming a Sinn Feiner against my will through listening to the English talking about Ireland.' Who will say that millions are not becoming bolshevists against their will through watching the allied statesmen steadily reerecting the international structure which precipitated the war?

"The Allies want some nation in the Near East which will carry their banner while they rake in the shekels. They do not mind much who that person is, murderous Turk or greedy Levantine. As for clearing out of all territory where they don't belong, and are only installed as Prussians would install themselves; as for France giving back to Feisul what is Feisul's and tearing up a purely imaginary mandate, there is no more chance of that than there is of the Italians quitting Upper Cilicia—how they got there is a complete mystery—or of the British departing from Constantinople or from Bagdad. Somehow or other the Allies will find a formula enabling them to stay on * * * rather than abandon their imperialistic and economic designs, they would, one verily believes, permit the Turks to protect the Viennese again, as in a bygone age.

"The French are for a new Turkey, with a view to using a new Turkish Army in the Caucasus against the bolsheviki, and so recovering their $1,500,000,000 debt from Lenin; the British are in favor of a new Turkey because she may settle their troubles in Mesopotamia and lessen the growing enmity toward them in the Mahometan world; the Italians have all along been brazenly in favor of a new Turkey as the one means of keeping Greece from local domination. So up with the Turk and down with poor Hellas! * * * Verily, the Allies, past masters at protecting, are not overkind to their past mistresses!

"If any man desires to behold the great principles of these last years carried from theory into practice, let him proceed to Constantinople and thence describe a circle of a thousand miles diameter. He will look out on a world of all the worst of human passions, of greed, hatred, and intrigue. He will behold a world in chaos, a world of anarchy and strife, in which each one is out for self, and self alone, while hiding his true intentions beneath tall talk; a world in which two eyes never meet two eyes, a world of deceit and grim trading across the corpses of the weak; a world of typhus and killing, while Mr. Lloyd-George and others of his kidney settle it all in between a round of golf and a foreign-office banquet.

"The four States of Transcaucasia—born of Versailles—Armenia, Kurdistan, Azberbaijan, and Georgia—are either nonexistent or have passed to the bolsheviks; Anatolia, from Erzerum to Smyrna, is ruled by a Turkish rebel; Greece is undergoing a complete bouleversement with Italy, across the way, straining to spring at her throat; d'Annunzio is being subsidized by Rome in defiance of all and everybody; Austria and Serbia are slowly dying; and the red terror rules all around from Rumania to Baku.

"In the center of this charming postwar picture stand the Allies, 'revising the treaty of Sevres.' They might, to greater advantage, revise themselves."

Mr. President, I repeat I offer this article because it appears in the leading Democratic newspaper of the Nation, a newspaper which has been hard-and-fast administration and the chief advocate among the newspapers of the land of the League of Nations. I assume, appearing in this particular paper, that the newspaper itself lends verity to what its correspondent says.

In this connection one further word: This great newspaper is conducting to-day something of an agitation respecting disarmament. It has discovered, with all the joy of a youth first seeing a self-evident proposition, that war may be banished from the earth more nearly by disarmament than by any other agency or in any other manner. So it is conducting to-day, in the amazement and the pleasure of its new discovery, this particular campaign for disarmament. In that every man wishes it the utmost success, of course. We are all agreed, I take it, that if there is a real desire among the powers of the earth to prevent war they can prevent it by substantial disarmament; and if the five great nations of the earth, who constituted the five allied and associated powers in the World War, should meet together and decide upon reduction of armament, we would have taken the one great step that could be taken toward the promotion of peace and the prevention of all future wars. We all pray, of course, that that step may ultimately be taken, and we commend to some of those outside of the Chamber who have hysterically endeavored to direct our course during the past couple of years toward a new supergovernment, or who have sought consciously or unconsciously to embroil us in European controversies, quarrels, broils, and war—we commend to them the one great step that may be taken—substantial reduction of the armaments of the nations of the earth, for the prevention of wars in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is entitled to the floor.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I should like to have the privilege of introducing a resolution and speaking very briefly, not more than five minutes, upon the subject matter of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to call the attention of Senators to paragraph numbered 2 under "Morning business":

> It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator.

So the Chair will have to hold that the Senator from Mississippi can not yield for that purpose.

Mr. EDGE. If a request for unanimous consent is made and given, does the rule still hold?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules make it the duty of the Chair to enforce the rule.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New Jersey may be permitted——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that that can not be done; the Senator can not yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. Suppose I yield the floor and allow the Senator to proceed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator yields the floor, the Chair will recognize the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I am not estopped from gaining recognition after that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to speak twice on the same day on the motion.

Mr. HARRISON. I have not spoken yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation to the Senator from Mississippi for giving me this opportunity. I send to the desk a resolution which I offer and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 413) was read, as follows:

> Whereas the reconstruction of many countries after the World War is dependent largely on supplies of all kinds from the United States; and
> Whereas such supplies should be, and to a large extent must be, transported in United States merchant ships; and
> Whereas approximately $4,000,000,000 of the American people's money, raised from them largely by taxation, has been invested in an American merchant marine; and
> Whereas an accounting on this investment now is imperatively advisable, in order that the people through their Congress may frame definite policies and enact legislation for the stimulation and businesslike management of this merchant marine: Therefore be it
> Resolved, That the United States Shipping Board be, and it hereby is, instructed to submit to the Senate without loss of time a concise report, devoid of arguments, and intelligible to the average citizen, on the following points:
> 1. The total amount of moneys appropriated for, and otherwise provided for, the United States Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation, and the United States Shipping Board as its successor, from September 7, 1916, to and including November 30, 1920.
> 2. The gross profits or losses, as the case may be, for the same period.
> 3. The net profits or losses, as the case may be, for the same period.
> 4. The disposition of any net profits, if any such there have been.
> 5. The amount of capital on which the United States Shipping Board now is conducting its business.
> 6. The number of vessels at present owned by the Shipping Board, giving material of which each is constructed and tonnage of each.
> 7. The number of vessels, if any, at present owned in part by the Shipping Board, giving material of which each is constructed and tonnage.
> 8. Number and description of vessels owned by the Shipping Board now in operation under its sole management, and number and description under charter by the Shipping Board in operation under its sole management.
> 9. Number and individual and aggregate value of vessels owned by the Shipping Board now managed by it in conjunction with private interests.
> 10. Number of vessels owned by the Shipping Board now chartered by it to private interests and operated entirely by private interests.
> 11. Number and individual and aggregate values of vessels owned by the Shipping Board not at present in operation, giving (a) name and description and tonnage of each such vessel; (b) length of time it has not been in operation; (c) reason why it has not been and is not now in operation; (d) place where each such vessel is docked or tied up; (e) expense of daily maintenance of each such vessel; (f) percentage of each vessel's value lost monthly by such idleness; (g) estimated percentage of each such vessel's value lost monthly in depreciation.
> 12. Concise description of the system of accounting by which (a) the profits or losses of the Shipping Board are determined; (b) the loss by depreciation is estimated; (c) the individual profit or loss on each vessel, in operation or idle, is established.
> 13. Copy of any standard form of contract the Shipping Board may have established.
> 14. List of all contracts with private individuals or corporations operating Shipping Board vessels either by themselves entirely or in conjunction with the Shipping Board.
> 15. List of contracts now ready for conclusion with private interests for the operation of Shipping Board vessels, and list of tentative contracts now under consideration for future conclusion.
> 16. Number of persons now employed by the Shipping Board; (a) on shore, and (b) afloat.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator add to that resolution two other items—first, the value of the ships now owned by the Government, according to the market price; second, the number of ships sold, the amount received therefor, and the loss on those vessels?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I might add, for the benefit of the Senator from Utah, that I think that particular information is fairly well contained in a reeent report issued by the Shipping Board.

My object in introducing the resolution is, briefly, this: I have tried as far as possible to dissect and analyze the recent report of the Shipping Board. I assume that it is absolutely correct—I have no reason, of course, to think otherwise—and perhaps it is in the usual form in which most of the departmental reports are issued; but I must frankly confess that I have been unable to secure this particular information, which I think of the utmost importance if Congress proposes to legislate in connection with this great responsibility.

I just want to point out, in the three minutes that I am going to consume, some important facts in this connection.

Some of you may perhaps know, but I doubt very much if the country appreciates, that the merchant marine to-day represents an investment of approximately four billions of dollars; and that four billions of dollars, estimating the average rate of interest, means a charge against the taxpayers of this country of almost a quarter of a billion per year, and, brought down to the monthly expense, approximately twenty millions per month and over $650,000 per day. For every day of 24 hours there is charged up, at the average rate of interest, over $650,000; and this is entirely apart from any loss in operation or loss in administration.

We discuss here, and very properly so—we have for years, and we undoubtedly will for many years to come—the Navy of the United States. I wonder if Senators really appreciate that, as proud as we are of the Navy, it does not represent to-day an inventory of three billions of dollars. The merchant marine investment at this moment represents 25 per cent more than the present estimated worth of the entire Navy and all the equipment of the Navy. So it does appeal to me very strongly that if there is any information we can get in order to devise businesslike plans for the future management of the merchant marine, or its disposition, it is our duty to have such information before us.

I was thoroughly and heartily in favor of the bill presented by the present Presiding Officer, the Jones bill, and I hope it will have an opportunity to be worked out; but I think additional legislation is imperative if the information I get is correct, that prices for ships have not been materially reduced, and that in the case of those ships that have been sold over 12 firms that have paid high prices for them have already gone into the hands of receivers and can not operate them. It simply means that if we have a bad investment we must recognize it as business men and take a loss and write it off; and it is incumbent upon this Senate and this Congress to give very careful business consideration to an investment of that character, as stupendous as it is.

So I am going to ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the resolution in order that we may at least receive information that must be of benefit to every Senator in this body.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to refer to the Committee on Commerce the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it was rumored some time ago that the minority side of the Chamber intended to indulge in a filibuster to prevent any action upon the bill which is under consideration in the motion for reference. That, of course, they had a right to do under the procedure of the Senate, and I am not objecting at all to the method that they see fit to invoke in order to accomplish the result they desire to accomplish, if they think it can be better accomplished in that way.

My understanding was, of course, that that was to prevent the matter being passed upon until after the holidays. Of course, there is no necessity of any filibuster for that purpose, because it would be impossible for us to dispose of the subject until some time after the holidays; but inasmuch as the Senate is now indulging in the pleasurable pastime of a filibuster, we might as well understand to what extent the Senate feels that it is justified in so doing. In order to test that question, I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi for an interruption?

Mr. McCUMBER. For an inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has stated that there is a filibuster on.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has made two speeches. I have been yielding to various Senators, all of whom are on his side, for the past hour. There is no filibuster on. The only desire in the world that this side has, so far as I know, is to give some time for this bill to go to a committee. I had hoped that it would be held on the table until some of the Members who are on certain committees return from their Christmas holidays. It does seem to me that the Senator is all wrong—first, in charging that there is a filibuster, and, secondly, in making a motion to table a proposition when he knows that there are Senators here who desire to speak, after he has spoken twice on it.

If the Senator thinks that is fair, then he may go his way; but I do not think other Senators will think it is just the proper thing to do. He knows that I have been on my feet here, gaining recognition to say something on this bill. I yielded to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] because a Senator on that side of the Chamber objected to allowing a certain pamphlet to be incorporated in the RECORD. I yielded to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] so that he might have his resolution introduced and agreed to. I have tried to be kind and patient with my colleagues here, and I find now that we are compensated by a motion to table, which shuts off debate, after the Senator himself has spoken twice.

Does the Senator insist on his motion to table?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes, Mr. President. I have no doubt of the kindly intention of the Senator to give all the time possible to delay the reference.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not take me at my word, then?

Mr. McCUMBER. I insist upon the motion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. A motion to table carries with it the whole proposition, does it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It carries the motion, and that is all.

Mr. HARRISON. It carries the motion where?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the table.

Mr. HARRISON. It puts it on the table, so that the whole proposition just lies on the table and does not go to a committee?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] one question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has yielded the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question. The Senator said there was no disposition on the other side to hurry through the consideration of the bill, and indicated that the committee would not make a report on the bill until after the holidays. Did I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. It would be impossible for us to do it.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the reference is made to the Committee on Finance, no report will be made until after the holidays?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; we could not report it out until after the holidays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] moves to lay the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] on the table, and on that motion the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and vote "nay."

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. GERRY. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion to lay on the table the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce the yeas are 33, the nays are 12. Senators present and not voting are the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE]. A quorum is present and the motion prevails.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, and in speaking to that motion I shall not occupy the Senate long.

Mr. President, I am sure that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] was laboring under a wrong impression when he thought that Senators on this side of the Senate were attempting a filibuster. It is the desire of some of the Members on this side to delay this matter until about Thursday, when certain members of the committee return to the city. These members of the committee went home to spend Christmas with their families, and they went expecting that the other side of the Chamber would be patient with them and not attempt to rush through legislation.

But they were mistaken. They did not give the question that degree of consideration, perhaps, that it deserved. They did not realize that the other side of the Chamber was drunk with political ambition to do that which its party had done 20 years ago; that it had misinterpreted the great vote it received in November of this year; that it was going back to the old days, when the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and Senators from Iowa and other Senators on the other side of the aisle saw fit to criticize their party and point out the dangers which lurk within such tactics.

But this piece of handiwork, handed to us by the body at the other end of the Capitol, is a loaded bombshell. It has been lighted there, and it is the duty of the majority of the Senate, in my opinion, to place its foot upon it and stamp it out before its explosion shall kill out the last ray of hope to the consuming masses of the country.

There never was such an iniquitous piece of legislation, perhaps, in the United States Congress. Talk about tariff—I can not understand how you high protectionists, such as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], can stomach such a measure as this.

I am not unmindful of the fact that when the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill was debated in this Chamber, and afterwards condemned by the American people, even your President saying it was the most iniquitous tariff measure ever placed upon the statute books, you did not go as far as are written in the provisions of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will suspend for a moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The bill (S. 3390) to provide for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen products; and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. In the beginning the Republican Party may have had some slight reason for asking protection on articles imported into this country. The industries in the East, it was said, needed some protection; but they have grown rich now. They no longer need it. That day has long passed. Our exports have increased by leaps and bounds. This last year, I believe, the balance of trade was something like $3,000,000,000 in our favor. We are shipping wares and goods and products as never before to the countries of the world, and yet it is proposed in this measure to raise a tariff wall around the United States and say to those countries to which we are selling those goods, "While we want you to buy our goods, you shall not ship your goods into the United States."

Can any statesman blame Canada for retaliating against us if we place a tariff on wheat that comes from Canada into this country? Can we blame any country for erecting a wall that will bar our goods and wares and products into their land if we prevent theirs coming into ours? What say Senators from New England, whose factories and factory owners have grown rich by making goods and wares and shipping them to Canada and other countries? Are their constituents going to feel pleased over legislation that will take money out of their pockets and restrain them from making goods to furnish to the markets of the world?

Yet opposition heretofore to high protection has come, for the most part, from the representatives of the farming interests of the West and of the South. Those out there believed in some protection, but their farmers did not believe in an exorbitantly high protection nor an embargo. They did not believe in robbing the great masses of the people at the expense of a few. So it was the influence of the western Representatives and Senators and of the southern Representatives and Senators that prevented the avaricious hand of the interests of New England and the East from placing too high rates of taxation into the various schedules.

But they have offered in this bill a sop to the farmers of the West.

There are Representatives in the House whom I love, with whom I served, and whose voices have rung out in behalf of the people, who voted for this iniquitous piece of legislation. Some of them will want a very high protection during the coming Congress, so they can go back to the old days—these high-protection advocates, some of whom have said, "You can not get a tariff too high for me."

Do you know what they are doing in the bill to Senators from the West? This is a piece of gross deception they are handing to those who represent the farming interests, who have sat, like the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], on the Agricultural Committee and tried to evolve some plan that might help the great farming interests of the country; to Senators like the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], who has worked day after day trying to do something for the farmers of the country, and under whose leadership was passed in the Senate the bill reviving the War Finance Corporation. Why? It was because he thought the way to help them was to find markets abroad for our products and create a credit in this country to carry them over. If he had proposed, or if any Senator had proposed at that time when we were trying to do something real for the farmer, that the proper way to do it was to place a big tariff wall around the United States so that no other country could ship anything into the country, but continue to allow us to ship our goods and wares and products abroad, the Senate would have been amazed. It is unfair, Senators. It is wrong in principle for us to ask of some other nation to do for us what we are unwilling to do for others.

Yes; they tried to catch us in the South by placing cotton in the bill. Smart? I will hand it to you, Senators. You are very adroit, but you should not have started so soon after the recent election.

Did we hear anything of the tariff in the last campaign? No; it was not heard of. High cost of living was heard of. I hold in my hand a pamphlet issued by the speakers' bureau of the Republican national committee that says, "Why 25-cent sugar?" Why press down upon the backs of the consuming masses of the country? That is what was given to the people then. The Republicans did not say then that we were going to revise the tariff and revise it so high that there would be a wall preventing goods and wares and products from other countries entering into our borders.

I wish I had the time—but if I should undertake it the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] would accuse me of filibustering—that I might read some of the things that were said in this pamphlet. Here is the way the pamphlet wound up. Splendid stuff, fine stuff, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] says, to ask, "Why 25-cent sugar?" Here are some of the arguments. It says:

At 25 cents, the lowest price anywhere, the American people have been robbed of $1,080,000,000.

One billion and eighty million dollars!

That is more than enough to pay the entire soldiers' bonus.

Now, Republicans were handing them sop. They wanted to make the soldier believe they were going to give him some kind of a bonus, but our committees have been working for days and days and have not come to any conclusion yet. That is why that was put in there.

This is more than enough to pay the entire soldiers' bonus which is so agitating the people of the Nation and which Congress is trying to find some way to grant.

Why, God bless you, a man with a mind such as that possessed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] could conceive of a good plan in a day. It would not take all this time to get some good plan for the soldiers' bonus.

By one fell act—

The pamphlet says—

the President and his Attorney General enabled the sugar growers of the world to enrich themselves by this fabulous sum of $1,440,000,000.

And it closes by saying:

The poor, plundered citizen, struggling to feed and clothe his family, naturally complains of the high cost of living. But it is better to think than to complain.

And yet in this bill what are Republicans proposing to do? They are not robbing the consuming masses of $1,440,000,000, as they allege on sugar alone, but it goes up into figures that I can not enumerate.

Talk about wheat coming in here from Canada. Yes; some wheat comes in and we ship very little abroad; but does the Senator from North Dakota forget that flour was away up at one time; that the poor people could not get it and could not have biscuits and bread on their tables? The millers of the country may get some benefit by your embargo, because they will take it as an excuse to raise the price of flour, but the farmer will not. And, after all, my friends, we have to look sometimes beyond the wheat grower. We have to look some to the consumers of the country. I can ride through my State and see the fields white with cotton on every hand, plantation after plantation. It is proposed to put a tax on that to help them. But I know it is a delusion and a snare; merely a bid for southern votes.

I would not vote for the proposition if 99 per cent of the people of Mississippi should ask me to do it, because I believe it is wrong in principle. That is why I am against it. It is wrong for a party to say they are trying to help the consumers of the country and lift a load from them, and at the same time try to gouge down their throats a bill that will increase the cost of living in the country.

Six months ago what was the cry in this Chamber? It was, "Let us reduce the high cost of living." The people of the country were hysterical about it. Yet now you are trying to increase the high cost of living to the consumers of the country. The proposition can not be denied. When an embargo is put on wheat, and on corn, and on live stock, and on those various things, it is increasing the burden on the consuming masses.

Mr. President, another peculiar thing about the bill is this: In the House there were no hearings before the Ways and Means Committee. It was forced down. The same tactics seem to be employed here. I do not know whether the Senate committee will have hearings or not. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] says that there will be. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] looks doubtful about the proposition. May I ask the Senator from Utah whether it is proposed to have any hearings on the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know what the committee will do. As far as I am concerned, I will say frankly to the Senator from Mississippi that I do not see any necessity for hearings.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought that was the Senator's position, and yet the Senator has stood on the floor of this Chamber, as well as other Senators, and cried out for a tariff commission——

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no!

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator has not, I will exclude him from that statement. Other Republicans have cried out for a tariff commission that might go into all the facts and study the questions and recommend to the Congress what to do. And yet they are not willing to ask in this instance any advice or to ask for any data from the Tariff Commission. It may be because of the personnel of it; I do not know; but certainly the committee ought to have some hearings on the proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. As far as I am concerned, when an article comes into this country free of duty, and when the difference in exchange between the money of our country and that of the country from which that same product is to be shipped into our country reaches as high as 30 per cent, referring to England and Australia and South America, and up to 900 per cent with Germany, the American producers are not on an equal footing. Every pound of wool that is allowed shipped into the United States to-day is to the disadvantage of the American grower, because the foreign grower has an advantage of 30 per cent in exchange, and I think that any American farmer or grower of cattle or wool or anything else at least ought to be put on an equal footing with his foreign competitor, and that is what we are trying to do in part in the pending measure.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the great trouble with the Senator from Utah is that he sees wool, wool, wool, and would pull it over some of our eyes. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. That may be easily accomplished, as the Senator from Mississippi says, but I do not think so. I will say to the Senator that I am a protectionist—not a spotted one; I am a reasonable protectionist. I am a protectionist for every industry in the United States no matter where it may be located. I favor placing our industries at least on an equal basis with foreign competitors. The Senator from Mississippi will not say to-day that the woolgrower or the wheat grower of the United States is on an equal footing with the foreign wheat grower and the foreign woolgrower.

Mr. HARRISON. I have never accused the Senator from Utah of being a "spotted" protectionist. I think if there ever was a protectionist all over it is the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I desire to be.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah is as strong and as high a protectionist as I know of in the country. I do not like spotted protectionists; neither have I any respect for a peanut protectionist. I have no respect for a Democrat who will vote for protection on something which is grown in his district and at the same time expend his eloquence against the principle of protection. I stand to-day where I have always stood and the way my party has stood against any protection of any kind.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is consistent in that position, and I respect him for it, but in his remarks he referred to the fact that I only had wool in sight all the time.

Mr. HARRISON. That was facetious.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; that is all right. Then I have nothing more to say.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that was facetious.

Mr. President, I am coming back to sugar for a moment. The pamphlet from which I have quoted is a remarkable one. Twenty-five cent sugar! Sugar to-day, I think, is around 8 or 9 cents, or something like that.

Mr. SMOOT. It is less than that, I will say to the Senator; and if there is not a change in the price of sugar the Senator from Mississippi will have the satisfaction of seeing half the beet-sugar factories of the West in financial trouble. Let me tell the Senator what has happened. I think the sugar-beet producer is about the only farmer in the United States who this year has had such an advantage as I am about to relate. The beet-sugar factories of the West made a contract with the beet growers for the raising of beets for the year 1920 under which the minimum price of the beets was to be $12 a ton, and for every dollar the sugar sold above $12 a ton the farmer was to receive $1 more per ton for his beets. The fact of the matter now is that the farmers have been paid $12 a ton for their beets while the sugar factories of the intermountain country—I refer to them, I will say, because I know of their situation—still have on hand 95 per cent of all of the sugar manufactured from those beets. The Food Administration said that $10 beets justified $11 sugar, but grant that it means but $10 sugar and see what is happening to the beet-sugar producer. To-day the price of beet sugar is about 7½ cents a pound. The factories have paid $12 a ton for all of their beets; and I wish now to say to the Senator as to the beet-sugar industry of this country—and I think the cane-sugar industry of Louisiana is about in the same position, although I do not know so much about that as I do about the other industry—that if there is any satisfaction in seeing the beet-sugar factories financially crippled and many ruined, such a condition will shortly occur unless there is an increase in the price of sugar.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall have no satisfaction in seeing that; I shall get no satisfaction out of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I hoped the Senator would not.

Mr. HARRISON. I am merely talking about Republican hypocrisy in crying out against 25-cent sugar in the campaign while now they are trying to impose still greater burdens on the consuming masses.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Mississippi knows the answer to that suggestion. If the President had acted when he ought to have acted in relation to the Cuban sugar, the sugar industries of this country would not be in the shape in which they are to-day. I stated upon the floor of the Senate that I did not wish to see the price of sugar advance in the way it did, and I know that the sugar manufacturers of the United States did not wish to see it do so, but the situation is precisely as I have explained in relation to the contracts which have been made for this year. They now find themselves, I am sorry to say, about where I expected they would, although I never thought that sugar would go from its high price down to 7½ cents per pound wholesale.

I know that if there can be any relief given by way of tariff to save these industries, perhaps it would be well enough to insert sugar in the pending bill; but I am not asking for that, because I know very well that if the bill is changed from the shape in which it has passed the other House it is not going to pass Congress; in fact, I do not believe that the Senator from Mississippi thinks it will pass anyway during this short session.

Mr. HARRISON. I am afraid it will pass. If the Senator from Utah could say that it would not pass, it would prevent a great deal of worry upon the part of certain Members of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Unless there is developed upon the other side a filibuster against the bill, it is going to pass, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah, of course, could not speak without taking a fling at the President of the United States on the sugar proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. HARRISON. I myself know something about the sugar question. I was a member of the Agricultural Committee, and I had several conferences with the Senator from Utah about the matter. We reported a bill out of the Agricultural Committee which gave the President the right to buy the Cuban crop of sugar, and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], and myself, day after day, would rise here and ask that the bill be taken up for consideration. For six weeks, I think it was, the bill was held back and we could not get the legislation passed until it was too late. The Senator from Utah knows that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know that the Senator recites the history of the bill; but the Senator also knows that the President had absolute power under then existing law to have purchased the Cuban crop.

Mr. HARRISON. But the President then stated—and the Senator from Utah knows that he did so—that unless the law could be extended for a year he should not feel justified in buying that crop of Cuban sugar. We afterwards gave to him the authority to extend the time.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that every member but one of the Sugar Equalization Board recommended that the President buy the Cuban sugar crop; and there was only one member of the board who told the President that he thought sugar would be lower in price and not to purchase it, and the President took his advice.

Mr. HARRISON. And he was entirely wrong.

Mr. SMOOT. And it was for that reason the President of the United States did not buy the Cuban sugar crop.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and Congress finally came around to the President's way of thinking and passed the law which he said he desired passed, but it took us a long time to do it.

Now, if the Senator is so solicitous about the welfare of the cane and beet sugar producers, as certainly his Republican colleagues in the other House are, why is it that some provision regarding sugar was not put into this bill?

I will tell the reason why they did not put some provision into the bill about sugar, and I do not suppose that there is any question about it. If I lived in Louisiana, I presume, politically I should last about a day, for they would fire me pretty quickly; but the reason why sugar was not placed in the bill was because the Republicans knew they had made a cry in the campaign against 25-cent sugar, and that that cry would rise to face them and they would be accused of blowing hot and cold at the same time. There is more reason for placing sugar in the bill if it is proposed to try to do something for some of the farmers than for placing some other articles in the bill which are embraced in it.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator may put whatever construction he desires to place upon the action taken by the other House, but I am quite sure that he is mistaken in that conclusion.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope I am.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure of it. I desire to say to the Senator that there has not been a day since this emergency tariff bill has been under consideration that I have not received almost hundreds of letters from various parts of the United States asking that certain items be included in the bill; but I recognize the fact that there is no need of trying to pass emergency tariff legislation at this short session unless it covers merely commodities produced by industries which as a whole are in a condition of imminent danger.

Mr. President, that is all there is to this whole matter, as I see it, although I am frank to admit to the Senator that there are one or two articles covered by this bill which are not in imminent danger although, perhaps, they are making no money.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator thinks unless this bill is passed exactly as it came from the House, as I understand, that there will be no legislation on this subject, and, therefore, his position on the committee is going to be against incorporating other commodities, even though the industries producing them may be suffering greater than the industries producing articles already covered by the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not agree to the latter statement, for I do not think there are any other industries that are suffering more than those producing the articles covered by the bill, with one or two exceptions, as I have already stated.

Mr. HARRISON. What are those exceptions?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not wish to go into the question at this time as to exceptions. If when the bill is before the Senate for consideration the question comes up for discussion, then I shall be perfectly willing to express my opinion.

Mr. HARRISON. Take, for instance, corn, which is covered by the bill. Practically an embargo is placed upon corn, and yet there is not as much corn coming into this country as is raised in one county, say, in Illinois. The Senator, however, would leave corn in and not incorporate some other commodity, such as sugar. It may be that that is the reason why the Senator answered as he did my question about frozen meats awhile ago. We talk about cattle and sheep and other live stock, and yet there is nothing in this bill that prevents the five packers, if you please, from bringing all the frozen meats in here that they desire. In the absence of any suggestion from the Senator, I take it that my assertion is right.

Mr. President, this is a nefarious proposition; it is all wrong in principle; and it will place a heavy burden upon the toiling masses. I am against it. I hope that the committee will have full hearings, bring witnesses before it; and if there are some other industries suffering more than those producing the articles covered by the bill I hope the committee will hear their representatives and then, in the end, kill the whole proposal.

If the farmers and the representatives of farmers on this floor vote for this proposed legislation, their mouths are going to be closed in the extra session of Congress; they will then be unable to fight the nefarious high protective provisions as to some other commodities which will be placed in the bill which will be forthcoming at that time. If my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], with whom I served so long in the House, and who employed his splendid talents there for such a long time attempting to lift the burden from the consuming masses, shall vote for this bill, he will never be able to attack the proposed tariff legislation which will come at the next session as his distinguished colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] attacked the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill. If my friend, the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and his colleague, the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], too, should vote for this measure, they will not be able to give to the country the benefit of their magnificent ability in opposing the outrageous provisions that some of the conscienceless high protectionists will place in the bill coming on in the extra session. The junior Senator from Iowa was not here in the Senate when the Payne-Aldrich law was passed.

If he had been here, I have no doubt what would have been his course. He would have followed the course pursued by his distinguished and illustrious predecessor, Mr. Dolliver, than whom a more brilliant and able Senator never served in this body, who fought the iniquitous tariff law and tried to reduce the high protection rates which the Senator from Utah [Mr.

SMOOT], the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and the then Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, tried to place in that bill. It would be pitiful, indeed, to see Senators on the other side of the Chamber who have talked for progress, who have stood for progressive legislation, who have voted against the high protectionist and his methods, attack reactionary legislation in all its forms, vote for this bill and thereby estop themselves from making the gallant fight which otherwise they would make in the coming session.

I presume the Senate will vote down my motion to send the bill to the Interstate Commerce Committee, and then, I presume, they are going to send the bill to the Finance Committee; but let me plead with the Senator from Utah, when the bill gets before his committee, to give all those interested a fair hearing. While the Senator from Utah may see wool sometimes and may see live stock at other times, and may see various other articles at other times, that are covered by this bill, let us not forget the consumers of this country who have been so mercilessly and badly treated during the war because of the high costs of living they had to bear. Let us keep them in mind a little bit, and not make the protection too great.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator does not for a moment think that it is possible to have a complete revision of the tariff during the short session of Congress, or even to add to the commodities covered by the pending bill to any great extent and to secure its passage at this session?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator would take my advice—I do not think he will, but if he should—he would table this measure as soon as it gets to the Finance Committee and would say, "Now, boys, let us get from the Tariff Commission a report on all these matters, as we said we were going to do, and let us frame a reasonable and fair tariff measure for presentation at the extra session of Congress."

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there will be any rates in the proposed new tariff law which the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Wisconsin will not be able to support.

Mr. HARRISON. Not if they vote for the pending bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; there is quite a difference between the passing of an emergency tariff bill to meet a serious temporary situation that confronts certain producers in this country and passing a bill to remain on the statute books from year to year. I would not vote for some of the rates proposed in the pending measure in a regular tariff bill, I will say frankly to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. If I should vote for the pending measure, or any other Senator on this floor should do so—and I hope there will not be one—the Senator from Utah would cite the fact four hundred and ninety thousand times during the consideration of the new tariff bill in the next session. The 41 Representatives who voted for it on the Democratic side over yonder never will hear the last of it.

Mr. BORAH. On either side.

Mr. HARRISON. "On either side" is well put. So, Mr. President, I submit my motion, and, if the Senator will take my advice, it will work in the interest of the people and not a favored few.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment.

I voted against the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to table the motion offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I thought his motion was premature, untimely, and unfair to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and other Senators who might desire to discuss the question that was then before the Senate. The question was one which was the subject of legitimate debate, and I deemed it unwise and unfair to cut off opportunity for discussion. But upon the question of reference I intended to and shall vote to refer this bill to the proper and appropriate committee, the Committee on Finance.

During my short period of service in the Senate I have insisted upon the rules of the Senate with respect to committees and their functions and their prerogatives being respected. I am willing to take advantage of situations created or resulting from the rules of this body that will make for the advancement of my party and the country, and I have no regrets in so doing even though it may punish my Republican friends; but when it comes to the question of an observance of the rules of the Senate and of orderly procedure, I do not believe that my party will gain anything or the country derive any benefit by disregarding them. It will be the basis of claims that partisanship or a desire to "play politics" determines and inspires our conduct. In making this observation I am not referring to any particular matter. I am not criticizing those who may believe this measure should be referred to the Commerce Committee. There is much merit in the contention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], but it seems very clear to me that it should go to another committee.

I am opposed to this bill being referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce or to any other committee except the one to which, under the rules of the Senate, it should properly go; and I shall therefore vote to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I withdraw my motion to send this bill to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I made it out of deference to my distinguished friend the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. It was the only way in which I could express myself.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Then, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRISON. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next at 12 o'clock.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, ordinarily I should have no objection to this motion being made and carried; but I am reminded of some matters which have occurred in the Senate during the last 10 days, or such a matter, which I think ought to be given some consideration.

I remember a few days ago, when two or three Senators were pressing special bills which they wished to have considered, that the distinguished leader on the Democratic side insisted that one particular bill must be given consideration. He acknowledged that the Republican side, as he said, was responsible for legislation, and that the Democratic membership were not going to put any obstacles in the way, but he gave us due notice that that bill must be considered. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] had a measure which he wished to have given the right of way——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think it is.

Mr. FLETCHER. No.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is a motion to adjourn to a day certain.

Mr. FLETCHER. That motion is not debatable either, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule, the point of order is well taken. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is unavoidably absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and withhold my vote.

Mr. POMERENE. A moment ago I announced my pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I understand there is no objection to my voting on this motion, and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and vote "yea."

The roll call resulted—yeas 29, nays 16, as follows:

There is a quorum present and the motion prevails.

The Senate thereupon (at 2 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Thursday, December 30, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 27, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed by Thy name. We bless Thee that Thou hast permitted us to pass through another Christmas day with its hallowed associations, sacred memories, and far-flung promises; for Thy love reflected in a thousand warm, sympathetic, generous hearts who fed the hungry, clothed the naked, and gave shelter to the homeless; blessings be upon their devoted heads, and long may their memory live to inspire millions yet unborn. Let Thy blessings descend copiously upon each Member of this House and their respective families, imbue them with heavenly gifts that they may solve the problems confronting them to the good of the Republic. Grant that each American citizen may hold up their hands and wait patiently until we reach the normal that we may be an example to all our sister nations under the divine leadership of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, December 23, 1920, was read and approved.

INTERNATIONAL DAIRY CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair refers to the Committee on Foreign Affairs the message of the President relative to the international dairy congress, which has been read.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 12157) to amend the act of Congress approved June 30, 1913, is by mistake upon the Union Calendar instead of the House Calendar. The Chair directs the change from the Union Calendar to the House Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. To-day, by special order, unobjected bills on the Private Calendar are in order.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I have just a moment to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Wyoming for the purpose of obtaining information? Quite a number of the secretaries of Members who have gone home for the holidays have asked me to advise them of any major matters that are likely to come up, stating that these Members are within a day's travel of the Capital and would like to come back in case of necessity. I think it would be interesting and would enable me to give definite information if the gentleman from Wyoming will please tell us what he hopes to do the balance of this week.

Mr. MONDELL. I had hoped that the sundry civil appropriation bill would be reported to-day and that it could be taken up to-morrow, but I think there is some doubt about that. But in the event that it is not reported to-day it will be reported to-morrow and taken up the following day, and will probably take the balance of the week in its consideration. Just what we will take up to-morrow if the sundry civil bill is not reported to-day I am not quite certain.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say that it will not be reported to-day. It will be reported to-morrow.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that the full Committee on Appropriations will not meet until to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. I had hoped that we would have an appropriation bill ready for consideration to-morrow morning.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It can not come up on Wednesday. Does the gentleman from Wyoming expect that the House will be here in session on Friday for the consideration of the sundry civil bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I am not sure that that can be done. I am quite sure that we ought to consider the sundry civil bill on Friday, but whether or not the House will be willing to remain in session I am not so sure. We need to get along with our appropriation bills. It is very important that we should, but I am not certain that the Members of the House will want to remain here on Friday.

Mr. DOWELL. There has been a good deal of complaint about the Private Calendar not being taken care of. Is it not possible that it can be taken care of at this time, and the appropriation bills taken up next week?

Mr. MONDELL. I think we would hardly be justified in spending this week on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DOWELL. But if we have a session on Friday, can we not devote that day to the consideration of the Private Calendar?

Mr. MONDELL. If we have nothing more important to consider to-morrow, I have no objection to continuing the consideration of the Private Calendar to-morrow, if we do not get through with it to-day.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am sure that the importance of the Private Calendar is not such as to keep a quorum here on Friday of this week, and I am equally certain that it will not be considered on Friday without a quorum.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not certain that there is no quorum present at this time?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I think there is.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I assume that there is a quorum present.

Mr. DOWELL. I think we all assume that.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope if we do not finish the consideration of the Private Calendar to-day that we may consider it to-morrow.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received any more information than I had in the beginning. If I understand the gentleman from Wyoming, he does not know what he is going to be able to do.

Mr. MONDELL. I do know that we will take up the sundry civil bill as soon as it is reported, and if it is not reported to-day, I hope that it will be reported to-morrow.

Mr. GARNER. If it is reported to-morrow, then you will have to get unanimous consent to suspend the business of Calendar Wednesday——

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think that will be difficult.

Mr. GARNER. Or else the committees will have to be called on Wednesday, and then on Thursday you would take up the sundry civil bill and continue the consideration of it?

Mr. MONDELL. I hope to take up the sundry civil bill on Wednesday.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

S. 46. An act for the protection of the water supply of the town of Sunnyside, Utah;

S. 2964. An act providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries of lands within the former Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation in Montana; and

S. 2188. An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1901.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4683. An act to amend section 11 (m) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and March 3, 1919; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the unobjected bills on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That has already been ordered.

The SPEAKER. That order has already been agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave of absence for my colleague [Mr. BRAND] until next Monday.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that leave will be granted. The Chair will state that it will facilitate the business of the House if personal requests of that kind are transmitted to the desk in writing. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar.

MAJ. GEN. CROWDER.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2867) to authorize the President, when Maj. Gen. Crowder retires, to place him on the retired list of the Army as a lieutenant general.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. I object to its consideration to-day.

LEWIS J. BLAIR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3791) to pay the heirs of Lewis J. Blair, late lieutenant colonel of the Eighty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, amount found due him by the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I object.

VAN DORN IRON WORKS CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9257) for the relief of the Van Dorn Iron Works Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

W. LOAIZA & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11067) to refund certain duties paid by W. Loaiza & Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill a question. As I do not see the gentleman present, I will object.

BENJAMIN O. KERLEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 25) for the relief of Benjamin O. Kerlee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What is this bill?

Mr. WALSH. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. The situation is this: This man, Benjamin O. Kerlee, was employed in the Forestry Service out in Montana. He met with an accident. A tree fell on him in the performance of his duty. One of his legs was broken, his ankle broken, and also some of his ribs, and he was otherwise injured. He was taken to a hospital where he stayed for 14 months. For 10 or 12 months the Government carried him on the pay roll as an employee. At the end of the 12 months the Government discharged him as no longer being able to perform the duties as an employee in the Forestry Service. He is now a cripple, with five children, without means, and practically a mendicant in the community in which he lives. This bill is to give him one year's compensation.

Mr. BLANTON. We have a statute already covering just such cases as this, have we not?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This case does not come within the provisions of the statute in that the accident occurred before the statute was passed?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. No; he met with this accident after the statute was passed. I think the department holds that it paid him the equivalent of one year's compensation when it left him on the pay roll for 10 months.

Mr. BLANTON. Did they not keep him on the pay roll for a year?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. My understanding is for 10 months; but I may be in error. They paid him a compensation equivalent to a year's compensation while he was disabled and in the hospital.

Mr. BLANTON. Really, as a matter of fact, if he had been killed, under the compensation law with respect to employees of the Government—if he had been killed in the line of service his family would not have been entitled to more than a year's salary, would they?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I presume that is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. He was not killed, but he himself has received practically as much under the law as his family would have received had he been killed.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. That may be so.

Mr. BLANTON. The bill under consideration seeks to pay him the full amount that the statute provides for regardless of what has already been allowed him. Is not that the fact?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. That may be so.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think that is good policy—for the Congress to make exception in his case when almost every person that comes within the provision of the statute will probably come in and ask us to do likewise?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that Congress ought to be fairly liberal in taking care of its crippled employees. Here is a man with a wife and five small children starving, crippled, can not get around, has been so for the past three years, and yet we can appropriate a billion dollars for war machines to cripple more people, and I think before we do that we should take care of these cripples at home.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that during the war, in Houston, Tex., a regiment of negro soldiers mutinied and ran rampant through the city, shooting everybody that came in their way, running bayonets into the stomachs of young girls, killing poor policemen, leaving their families destitute; all of such cases being of the most extreme cruelty imaginable, there being over a score of them, and these claims have been before Congress for three years, favorably reported by the committee, and nothing has been done with respect to these claims. When we have such claims as that before Congress, I submit that those claims ought to take precedence of a claim where a man has already received compensation.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I am sure I shall not oppose payment of such claims as you mention.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Does the gentleman think that objection to this would expedite those claims?

Mr. BLANTON. No; my objection is that we should not make an exception and go beyond the policy prescribed by Congress in the past.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

KATIE NORVALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1546) for the relief of Katie Norvall.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,173.12 as full compensation to Katie Norvall for the death of her husband, G. Norvall, who was drowned while engaged in the performance of his duties as fireman and engineer, as a result of a collision between the navy-yard launch Highlander and the ferryboat Vallejo near the Mare Island ferry slip, Vallejo, Calif.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the amount allowed here one year's compensation?

Mr. EDMONDS. One year's compensation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What was this man's title?

Mr. EDMONDS. Well, he was a fireman and engineer.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What was his salary in the Navy?

Mr. EDMONDS. Three dollars and seventy-six cents a day was the salary.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Reserving the right to object, is this the case that arose after the provisions of the compensation act were passed?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, no; this is in 1907, before that. We give exactly what we have given in cases of this kind—one year's pay.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, the compensation act would not apply to a case of this sort. Does not this man's widow get a pension?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I could not hear what the gentleman was saying, and I was trying to ascertain in reference to the case.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is a fireman or engineer in the Navy, who lost his life by drowning. Does not the Government make provision in a case of that sort to the dependents?

Mr. EDMONDS. Secretary Daniels in his letter recommended the payment to the widow the same as in the compensation act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Federal compensation act does not apply, I think, to Army and Navy enlisted men or officers.

Mr. EDMONDS. I am not quite sure this man was an enlisted man.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I do not know whether he was an enlisted man or not. I have no way of knowing, but I should think that is one of the things that would be told.

Mr. EDMONDS. It is not mentioned in the testimony given by the lieutenant of the Navy that the man was an enlisted man, and the Secretary of the Navy recommended the passage of the bill along the lines of the Federal compensation act.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If the gentleman will yield for one further question, does the testimony show whether the man was in the service?

Mr. EDMONDS. He was employed by the Government, but whether he was an enlisted man or not I do not know.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The committee did not find what the nature of the service was?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, yes; he was running the engine.

Mr. JONES of Texas. What were his regular duties?

Mr. EDMONDS. This was a small launch, and he ran the engine and did the firing, both.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is the general policy of the committee when claims of this character are introduced, not covered by the Government compensation act, to report favorably any bill that shows the man was in some branch of the Government service and to allow a year's pay?

Mr. EDMONDS. We do not report every bill; no; but we report bills where it shows conclusively that the accident comes through the employment and not through the carelessness of the individual. This was occasioned by a collision between two boats.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the general policy of the committee?

Mr. EDMONDS. In the event we find the case worthy, we give the man one year's compensation, if it happened before the compensation act was passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the case with all——

Mr. EDMONDS. Most of them; we have not done anything with them yet in the Postal Service, but every other service we have.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,173.12 as full compensation to Katie Norvall for the death of her husband, G. Norvall, who was drowned while engaged in the performance of his duties as fireman and engineer, as a result of a collision between the navy-yard launch Highlander and the ferryboat Vallejo near the Mare Island ferry slip, Vallejo, Calif.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOSE RAMON CORDOVA.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1034) for the relief of Jose Ramon Cordova.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. May we have the bill reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jose Ramon Cordova, of Cortez, Colo., the sum of $5,000 for injuries by gunshot while serving as deputy marshal in the arrest of renegade Indians at Bluff City, Utah, February 21, 1915.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,095."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object in order to ask a question—the chairman is going to insist on the committee amendment?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say yes. This bill and the next one are the same character of bills. It is a year's salary.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is going to be the case, I shall not object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is going to be the case. I may say this man is helpless, crippled for life, by being shot up by the Indians when he was deputy sheriff. This bill and the one following it are a year's salary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MRS. JOSEPH C. AKIN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1035) for the relief of the widow of Joseph C. Akin.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from Colorado to say that the same committee amendment would be offered to this bill——

Mr. EDMONDS. This does not require amendment; it carries the same amount.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They are companion bills which grew out of the same transaction.

Mr. BLANTON. It is one year's salary?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Joseph C. Akin, of Dolores, Montezuma County, Colo., widow of Joseph C. Akin, who, while in the discharge of his duty as a deputy United States marshal, was killed by a band of renegade Ute Indians while he was attempting to arrest one Tse-Ne-Gat, a Ute Indian charged with murder, on the 21st day of February, 1915, the sum of $1,095, on account of the murder of her said husband while in the regular discharge of his duties in the service of the Government of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EDWARD S. FARROW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2259) for the relief of Edward S. Farrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill reported?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RELIEF OF LEAVENWORTH BRIDGE CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12015) for the relief of the Leavenworth Bridge Co., of Leavenworth, Kans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

V. E. SCHERMERHORN, E. C. CALEY, G. W. CAMPBELL, AND PHILIP HUDSPETH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1330) for the relief of V. E. Schermerhorn, E. C. Caley, G. W. Campbell, and Philip Hudspeth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

JAMES E. CONNORS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11410) for the relief of James E. Connors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the bill read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of James E. Connors the sum of $25,000 in compensation for injuries caused by a Navy automobile, resulting in the amputation of his left foot.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Line 6, strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, first, the question of one year's compensation can not arise here; but do the gentlemen on the committee think it a proper criterion of measurement to pay a widow $1,000 for the loss of her husband while we pay $2,500 to a boy for the loss of his foot?

Mr. EDMONDS. In one case the compensation was covered by law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken. If compensation were covered by law there would be no bill here. In one case the gentlemen measured the compensation by what it would have been if the law applied to that man's case.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is it exactly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In the other case, there being no method of compensation, does it not seem as though a measure of common sense, after all, ought to be applied? Of course, we do not endeavor to make full compensation for the loss of anybody's limb or life, in civil life or anywhere else, for that matter. Now, I believe where we provided by law that compensation might be allowed of one year's pay, we ought not to give a greater amount to somebody who did not come within the terms of the law. That has been the rule, and that is the rule that the committee is following now. Ought we, when we step outside of that measurement, give two or three times as much for less injury?

Mr. EDMONDS. How would the gentleman measure the compensation of an eight-year old boy who was not working for anybody and had no compensation?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Simply because somebody asked for $25,000 I would not divide it by 10 and call that the compensation. I do not think it is fair, inasmuch as the Government is under no legal obligation and probably under no moral obligation to make any compensation. Accidents happen, and the Government does not guarantee people against accidents. If the gentleman himself should get injured in an accident down the street here, as somebody is getting injured every day, the Government would not make compensation. It does not seem to me right, with the two bills just passed and approved, so far as I am concerned, to pay $1,095 in two cases where men were murdered in the discharge of their duty, that here should come along a bill to compensate a boy for an accident in which he loses his foot, and where the Government is under neither moral nor legal obligation and where you propose to pay him more than twice as much.

Mr. EDMONDS. I differ a little bit from the gentleman. I know he looks at these claim bills closely and studies them. But we have passed twice in this session outside bills, where people outside of the employ of the Government have been damaged by accidents. The one was the case of a man in Kansas City who was run over and killed by an automobile, and who got $5,000; the other was that of a young lady down in Texas who was scarred badly by a barbed wire and very much disfigured, and I think she got $3,500, or maybe more, I do not remember the exact amount. In this case this young boy was standing in front of the Brooklyn Navy Yard; the fire alarm rang and the truck rushed out and ran over him. He had to have his limb amputated and he will have to go on one leg for life. If he had redress against a private party, he would probably get $5,000 or $10,000 for the accident. But the committee takes it for granted that if a life is worth $5,000, he is entitled to half of that for the loss of one leg.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's theory is that a man who is injured by Government machinery would be better off were he a private citizen outside of the employ of the Government than to be inside of the Government. The Government will pay more to a man who is not working for it than to a man who is working for it.

Mr. EDMONDS. When a man is working for the Government he accepts to a certain extent the risk of the employment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This boy would not have been injured at all if it was not somebody's negligence besides the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in the two cases mentioned by the chairman, one was an automobile truck case, and the evidence in that case showed that the truck driver was in the service, a soldier, and he was running his truck on the wrong side of the street, where pedestrians did not expect that a truck would come along.

The other case was where a little girl was not on the Government field at all, but outside of it, with a wire fence between, and where the operator of a machine lost control of it and it ran through the wire fence and injured her. These are two extreme cases. This is a case where a young boy, a child 8 years old, an infant, was not going about his own business, but through curiosity was attracted by the sound of the blowing of a horn and went to the Brooklyn Navy Yard. If he had had his mother or somebody to take care of him, he would not have been out there in a place of danger. If we are going to allow compensation for this kind of an accident, just as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], we can not turn down the thousands of cases that come here year after year asking for compensation for accidents on the outside.

Mr. BEGG. Does not the gentleman know that the testimony shows that the truck driver was careless, and was discharged for being careless and incompetent?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. How can the gentleman blame the little boy?

Mr. BLANTON. If the child had had somebody to look after him, if there had not been negligence on the part of the child's parents, he would not have been out there and have caused the discharge of the truck driver.

Mr. BEGG. If there had been somebody there taking care of the child, both of them would have been run over, because there is no evidence whatever that the child was careless.

Mr. BLANTON. If the report of the committee means anything, the report shows that it was curiosity that took the child there. The report shows that the child was attracted out there by the sound of this siren.

Mr. BEGG. Was not that a perfectly logical and natural thing to happen?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Do you not believe that when the operator of a truck is careless and incompetent, even though it is a Government truck, a person injured by that carelessness ought to be compensated for it?

Mr. BLANTON. If you let this claim go through, then every single time that a fire-engine gong rings going down Pennsylvania Avenue, and some little child runs out and gets hurt, Congress will have to respond in damages to the parents. How can you get around it? It establishes a precedent. It is the precedent in this case that I object to.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose a fire engine in your city at home injures a private citizen, and the testimony shows that the injury is caused by the negligence of the driver of the fire engine, can not the injured person hold the city?

Mr. BLANTON. The law says he can not. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that he can not, and the gentleman's Committee on Claims has held that he can not. It is only an exception that they are making now in reporting this bill. The Government is not responsible at all for such a case.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is the gentleman from Texas serious in his contention that because this little child happened not to have somebody caring for him he ought to be denied any redress?

Mr. BLANTON. The child is not going to get any redress. We are remunerating the parents for the injury.

Mr. BEGG. Is it the gentleman's contention that under this bill the money would be paid to the parents and not to the guardian of the child?

Mr. BLANTON. In some instances, in my experience around courthouses for 20 years, where you pay money for an injury to a child 8 years old the parents sometimes get the benefit of the money, and not the child.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wonder if that is not the fault of the enforcement of the law in Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the case in Arkansas also.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; the gentleman will speak for his own State. In my State we put people in the penitentiary for stealing from a minor. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; you put them in a penitentiary sometimes, and sometimes they get away from you.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; and go to Texas. [Laughter.] Congress enacted a law for the government of the District of Columbia, and the gentleman said that if a child rushed out on Pennsylvania Avenue and was run over by a fire truck he would come to Congress. Now, we passed a law which made the District of Columbia liable for injuries caused by the negligence of its employees, and we put it in the power of injured persons in the District of Columbia to sue in the courts of the District of Columbia and collect judgment against it.

Mr. BLANTON. I will reply to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas by asking him a question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman helped to pass a statute to compensate Government employees injured in the line of their duty. Is the gentleman willing to pass another statute to make the United States Government responsible for every accident that occurs to a citizen of the United States because, forsooth, he is injured through the negligence of some Government employee?

Mr. CARAWAY. I am willing, indeed, to do that; and I have always thought it was an infamous outrage that the Government should be permitted to destroy life and private property and not compensate those who are damaged.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman ought to help pass that general statute, because there have been hundreds of such claims during the last 10 years.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me understand what the gentleman means. Does the gentleman contend that the Government ought to be immune from its own negligence? I ask him that as a matter of common justice.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the law of the land, and the Supreme Court has so held. If the law is wrong the gentleman is a lawmaker and is going to be promoted very soon, and he ought to be in a position to help change the law.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Constitution of the United States forbids the taking of private property for public use without compensation. Under the gentleman's theory, if it takes nothing but life and limb, it ought to go scot free.

Mr. BLANTON. There is much negligence on the part of Government employees. We now have over twice as many Government employees as we had before the war, and there is over twice as much negligence going on all the time. If the Government is going to pay for all the negligence, we might as well do like Russia, repudiate our honest obligations and say we will not pay any more debts, because we would soon not have any money left to pay Government debts.

Mr. CARAWAY. Because the Government is not getting any work out of the clerks, does the gentleman think that warrants us in denying relief to a child crippled for life by a careless truck driver?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is trying to establish a precedent——

Mr. CARAWAY. The precedent is already established.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no claim here that any Government official was negligent.

Mr. BLANTON. The truck driver was discharged.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This case has been passed upon by the court. The court says, "It is the opinion of the court that no responsibility for this accident can be placed upon any person or persons," and clearly the court found that there was no negligence on the part of the truck driver.

Mr. BLANTON. Then why was he discharged?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know nothing about that.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure that the gentleman from Illinois recognizes that this is a departure from the policy of this Government.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This goes further than the paying for negligence.

Mr. BLANTON. It goes further than any other bill ever passed.

Mr. ROSE. If the gentleman will allow me, in the discussion of this case the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] referred to the report by the committee, and says he takes for granted that it is true. I happen to be a member of the committee to which the case was referred. We have made a report, and I want to say that we will stand behind that report, because it has been well supported by evidence before the committee. This particular case will not establish a precedent on the part of the Government.

The Committee on Claims takes up every case that comes before it on its merits. While it is true that the Government of the United States is not responsible for the payment of damages for injuries caused by the negligence of employees, it is clear that children rightfully on our streets—notwithstanding the gentleman thinks that the child should not be on the street without a guardian or parent—are entitled to more care and consideration by drivers of automobiles and other conveyances than persons of mature years. If the argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] were carried to its logical conclusion, no child or person of tender years would be permitted on our public streets unless accompanied by a parent or guardian.

Mr. BLANTON. This was an 8-year-old child, and he ought to have been accompanied by a nurse, his parents, or a guardian.

Mr. ROSE. A child 8 years old has a right to be upon the street. You compel him to go to school, and if he does not go to school he is taken in charge by the truant officer and punished as the law provides. This particular case has appealed very strongly to the members of the Claims Committee.

I think this child, 8 years of age, for whom relief is sought, who had a perfect right on the street, did exactly what you or I would have done. His attention was attracted and he looked into the grounds from whence an alarm came, and while standing on the pavement was hit by an automobile driven by a careless driver who did not blow the horn or give any sign of approach, resulting in the loss of a foot.

No person saw the accident except two little boys selling papers on the street. The claim was made here for $25,000, but the committee reduced the amount to the sum of $2,500.

Mr. BLANTON. My good friend from Pennsylvania is a distinguished lawyer, and he has left a part of the crucial facts in the case out of his recitation. The driver who came out of the gate, a United States navy yard gate, did not expect that there would be a little child 8 years old on the inside of Government property. He had reason to believe that there would be nobody there.

Mr. ROSE. The boy was not on the Government property. He was outside the gate.

Mr. BLANTON. He ran into the open gate.

Mr. ROSE. No. The right hind wheel hit a stone buffer, and if it had not hit the buffer it would have gone straight out and would not have touched the boy. The sharp turn by the driver was the real cause of the accident.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman willing to pass a statute making the Government responsible for damages for all injuries of private citizens occasioned by the negligence of Government employees?

Mr. ROSE. By no means.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what this case does, we establish the precedent. It is a departure from the policy that Congress has always pursued.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I made the suggestion that there be no action brought against this child for obstructing the traffic.

Mr. BLANTON. Over in France there would be a prosecution, for they make such obstruction an offense. I do not think it is a good law.

Mr. ROSE. In almost every State in the Union there is a statute providing that no negligence shall be imputed against a child under 7 years of age. That is the law in Pennsylvania. I do not know what it is in other States.

Mr. BLANTON. This child was 8 years old.

Mr. ROSE. The child was over 7, but in my opinion he was on the street lawfully, and did not contribute to the accident.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GEORGE W. WOODALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3564) for the relief of George W. Woodall.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $4,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse George W. Woodall for money paid as cash indemnity to the Southern Surety Co., bondsman for Arthur A. Steele, indicted for violation of the white slave traffic act of June 25, 1910, who was afterwards, to wit, on the 14th day of September, 1916, duly tried and convicted in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan for his offense and sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor in the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., for a period of two and one-half years, the said George W. Woodall rendering material aid to the Government in the apprehension and prosecution of the said Arthur A. Steele, said cash indemnity of $4,000 having been deposited by said Woodall with said Southern Surety Co. before the execution of said surety bond and said surety company having paid the same to the proper officers of said court.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "$4,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,649.02."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As far as I can gather from the report it is akin to a class of cases which we frequently pay, but it seems to me it differentiates in this case, for while the claimant pretends to be helpful to the Government in trying to apprehend the prisoner whose bail he had gone and had him followed the Department of Justice says he did not aid. I understand that although he knew where the prisoner was he did not furnish the information.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, it seems to me the question is whether we will advertise that a person can go bond for a prisoner and then when the prisoner escapes and if he stays escaped the prisoner may recompense the bondsman, and if they succeed in getting the prisoner again the Government will refund the amount of the bond. Just at this time when crime is prevalent, when prisoners everywhere are seeking to get out on bonds, many of which are worthless, I wonder if it is desirable for us to advertise that we will follow such a course.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this bill was brought to the committee and the case was thoroughly investigated. The bill provides for the return of the amount of the bond put up by the man who is not a professional bondsman, but a relative of the person accused. There is deducted the amount of the expense that the Government actually sustained in bringing the criminal back to trial. Arthur Steele was charged with violation of the Mann White Slave Act, was arrested and was released on bail of $4,000. His step-father put up the amount of money in cash, $4,000, not as a professional bondsman, but on account of the prisoner's relationship to his wife. The man fled and was apprehended in Kansas City. Mr. Woodall, who furnished the bond, paid the expenses of a patrolman, sent him to Cincinnati, Toledo, and elsewhere to recover the fugitive, and finally discovered he had gone to Kansas City. Steele had been injured and was in the hospital and Woodall understood that the Federal officers had him under surveillance. He concluded that he had no further responsibility because the fugitive was in the custody of the Federal officers and that he could easily be brought back. Woodall now makes claim for the return of this amount he advanced for bail bond. There is an affidavit stating that Woodall believed the Federal officers had the fugitive under their surveillance in Kansas City and that he is entitled to the return of the bond. I believe that is a fair statement of the case.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. In any such case as this when a defendant fails to appear judgment nisi is entered by the court, which the gentleman knows is not a final judgment. After the apprehension of the defendant the court holds such judgment in abeyance as not binding and in many instances where certain facts are brought to his attention he sets the judgment nisi aside and holds it for naught, and where the money has been paid in lieu of the bond the money is returned to the party who pays it. Does any member of the committee know that was not done in this case, that the court might not have entered final judgment with reference to the $4,000 which had been put up in lieu of the bond by the claimant Woodall but had in fact been left to his credit in the court and was sent back by the——

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. There is an affidavit by the Southern Surety Co. stating that this $4,000 was paid.

Mr. BLANTON. And never returned?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. And never returned to the claimant. The prisoner was rearrested and everyone has been made whole save the bondsman.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. BEGG. What is this about the post card Mr. Woodall wrote to his wife when the Department of Justice says that the writing of this letter was the only clue that the Department of Justice had in locating the criminal? If Mr. Woodall was bona fide trying to apprehend this man for the Department of Justice, why did not he notify them?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That question came to the committee in exactly that form. But Mr. Woodall made an affidavit he had gone to Kansas City and that he found the prisoner in the hands of the Federal officers and under their surveillance and therefore he did not believe it was necessary to notify the Federal officials.

Mr. BEGG. Whose word are we to take, that of the Federal department or Woodall, who wants the money back?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The case is before the House for its decision. The committee went into that thoroughly, and has Woodall's affidavit that he had this information and that he hired a patrolman at his own expense to discover the fugitive.

Mr. BEGG. Until they can furnish some other evidence than the affidavit of the man who is interested in the money, I shall be forced to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

STEAM LIGHTER "CORNELIA."

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1004) for the relief of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice these bills carry an appropriation in section 2.

As I recall it, there have been one or two measures passed when that section was stricken out.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will offer an amendment striking that section out and putting in the regular amendment agreed to on the other bill.

Mr. WALSH. There is not any other to take the place of it, as I recall it.

Mr. EDMONDS. It is to make it conform with the other bills that were passed. It is as follows:

Strike out section 2, lines 9 to 15, inclusive.

In line 8, after the word "appeal," place a colon instead of a period and add the following: "Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act."

We put it in all the other bills.

Mr. WALSH. That is in place of section 3 that was stricken out. But that amendment was put in the other bill in place of section 3?

Mr. EDMONDS. We were perfectly willing to strike out section 2 and put this in the proper form.

Mr. WALSH. And eliminate section 3?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, namely, if on the passage of such bills as this the gentleman recognizes we are sitting as a court of equity and not a court of law, because the law does not grant relief in these cases?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is very true.

Mr. BLANTON. And there is a principle of equity that he who seeks equity must come into the court of equity with clean hands?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think so. I am not a lawyer, though.

Mr. BLANTON. In this instance does not the chairman of the committee think the Cornelia, in seeking damages at the hands of the United States, should at least show that she was not guilty of negligence?

Mr. EDMONDS. I wish to say to the gentleman that there is no appropriation made, and I can not see any harm in letting this case go to court and letting the court decide it. It is impossible for us to decide it. One side contends one thing and one another.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's report shows the Cornelia was guilty of negligence. I will call your attention to one paragraph of the report of the Secretary of the Navy to the Senate committee on this very case, which reads as follows:

That there was no negligence on the part of the personnel of either ship, except that the master of the Cornelia did not have a regularly stationed lookout in the bow of his vessel.

That was a safeguard that was required——

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman must realize that is the statement of one side.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the statement of the Secretary of the Navy of the United States Government after an investigation had been made in this case; that is his report based upon the investigation.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is the statement of one side—the Secretary of the Navy's side.

Mr. BLANTON. Are we going to take the Government side of the proposition or somebody else's side?

Mr. EDMONDS. We are going to allow the court to decide that. It is fair to give a man a day in court in a collision case, if he asks for it.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

SCHOONER "HORATIO G. FOSS."

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1006) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I have not had time to go through the report, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. EDMONDS. This is the same thing as the last case.

Mr. BLANTON. It is an identical case?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. They failed to have a lookout stationed?

Mr. EDMONDS. They say in the darkness this ship was anchored in the regular channel for vessels, and she had no fog signal on her, and, of course, she was in a collision. That is what the Secretary of the Navy says.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. As I understand it, this is simply a case where a vessel anchored in a fog.

Mr. BLANTON. And she anchored knowing that she was in the path?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Oh, no; she was in a fog, and did not know where she was.

Mr. BLANTON. Was not she in the path of vessels?

Mr. EDMONDS. She was, but she did not know at all where she was anchored.

Mr. BLANTON. When she anchored she knew maritime laws required her to ring a fog bell and to keep other ships that might come along and were in the same predicament from running into her?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. And she did not do it?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF DONNELLY AND EGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3977) for the relief of the legal representatives of Donnelly and Egan, deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. FOCHT. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. FOCHT. In the absence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW] who introduced the bill and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] who reported it, I ask that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PETER M'KAY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 390) for the relief of Peter McKay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the bill be reported, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Peter McKay, or his legal representatives, the sum of $2,500, as full compensation for permanent injuries received by the said McKay on the 5th day of May, 1904, at Fort Worden, in the State of Washington, by being struck with a large piece of log hurled by the explosion of an excessive blast of powder discharged without warning by employees of the United States Government engaged in clearing lands at said Fort Worden under the direction and control of the United States Government.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$939."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. EDMONDS. Does the gentleman object to the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I reserve the right to object. I want to get a little information. Is this gentleman still living, and has he been unable to work all these years?

Mr. MILLER. He is. He worked for five years as a watchman, at half pay, at Fort Worden. He is now about 69 or 70 years of age and entirely incapacitated, which incapacity resulted from the amputation of his right limb. It will be 17 years the 5th of next May since this accident occurred.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee how they arrived at the figure of $939? When this bill came in several years ago it was for $5,000. It was introduced in this Congress for $2,500, and now has been further reduced to $939.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. McKay's pay is $939 a year.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the rule of the committee that it does not make any difference how badly anybody is hurt, whether he loses a finger or a hand or a foot or an arm or a leg or two legs, that the committee will report out relief based upon the amount of a man's annual pay?

Mr. MILLER. If you are going to make compensation, you have got to make it to all alike, as nearly as I can see.

Mr. WALSH. Irrespective of how badly a person may be injured?

Mr. EDMONDS. If a man is injured so that he is not able to carry on his occupation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As I understand it, the committee endeavors to follow the same rule in the cases that are not covered by the compensation act as the law provides in the cases which are covered by the compensation act.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. That has not been done in this case. I think amputation of the leg below the knee——

Mr. MILLER. Would you not call that pretty nearly total disability? It has resulted in a total disability, this man being a house carpenter. It might not have become so had he been a telegraph operator, or something of that nature.

Mr. WALSH. No. I should not call that total disability.

Mr. MILLER. It would depend a good deal on the trade the man was following. It might be total disability for a house carpenter.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If a man had a leg amputated, he would get a year's pay under the original compensation law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask if this accident had happened after the passage of the statute granting compensation to a Government employee, would the facts have brought the case within the provisions of that statute?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think so, without question.

Mr. BLANTON. Peter McKay was an employee of the Government in 1904 when this happened?

Mr. MILLER. He was a Government employee when this happened, and the engineer in charge recommends some additional compensation on account of the accident.

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman of the committee in construing cases of this kind during the last four years has intimated that it is unfair to one set of claimants under such a state of facts not to grant them relief when relief is granted to others in the same kind of cases, and I understood he was going to propose a general law indicating the policy of Congress with respect to all claims of this class. What has been done in regard to the reporting of such a bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. I took the advice of a number of prominent attorneys in Philadelphia and New York in regard to that, and they advised me very strongly against it; advised that it was a great deal better for us to take care of these cases in this way than to lay the Government open to claims of persons who intentionally allowed themselves to be injured. They said they were having cases every day in the courts where actions were brought against municipalities on account of people who wanted to be injured to collect damages; that it was a regular profession carried on by some people.

Mr. BLANTON. I am speaking of the policy of making this law retroactive, to go back to take care of other cases that may have happened as far back as 1904.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think that is necessary. These cases are being cleaned up pretty well, and I do not think there is any necessity of dating the compensation law back to cover these cases.

Mr. BLANTON. I supposed the gentleman had some reason in his mind for not making the law retroactive.

Mr. EDMONDS. Surely. I would be opposed to making it retroactive.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet the gentleman has gone back on that policy and has reported out a bill for a claim going back to 1904.

Mr. EDMONDS. I am not going back on that policy at all. We are giving the man what the committee thought would be fair compensation under the laws as they were at that time. The gentleman knows very well that up to 1900 a man took the risk of his employment when he obtained employment. It is only in the later years that laws of this kind have come into existence. The result would be, if you were going back to 1870 with your compensation act you would be doing something for a man injured in 1870 that nobody dreamed of doing in 1870.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Peter McKay, or his legal representatives, the sum of $2,500 as full compensation for permanent injuries received by the said McKay on the 5th day of May, 1904, at Fort Worden, in the State of Washington, by being struck with a large piece of log hurled by the explosion of an excessive blast of powder discharged without warning by employees of the United States Government engaged in clearing lands at said Fort Worden under the direction and control of the United States Government.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$939."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

M'CLINTIC-MARSHALL CONSTRUCTION CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6092) for the relief of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over to-day.

Mr. BLANTON. Before that is done I ask the chairman of the committee to give me five minutes on this bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman can reserve the right to object and take five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill before the House, H. R. 6092, proposes to pay out of the Public Treasury the sum of $714,007.39 to the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co. In favorably reporting this bill for passage the present Committee on Claims makes no mention of the minority report I filed against this claim in the Sixty-fifth Congress or the evidence I then elicited on cross-examination of the witnesses at the hearing requested by me in May, 1918. At that time this claim was covered by H. R. 4015, providing for the payment of $1,000,000 to claimants. After my cross-examination of the claimant's manager, Mr. W. M. Sterrett, and of Judge B. F. Harrah, who investigated the whole matter in Panama, there was no further attempt to pass the bill in the Sixty-fifth Congress, as I then showed that there was absolutely no merit in the claim.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that Congress itself passed an act empowering Gen. Goethals to investigate any amounts due this construction company.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and the gentleman will remember that after we entered the war Gen. Goethals agreed for the Government to pay millions of dollars more for steel in the construction of our ships than one of our admirals showed was a reasonable and proper price for us to pay, and the admiral's judgment prevailed. The President, exercising his authority and duty, removed Gen. Goethals from the Shipping Board. At that time I decided that Gen. Goethal's judgment was not such that I could accept it in all cases.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This investigation was made by three employees of the Government at the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and Gen. Goethals based his opinion on that report when he did not know a thing about it. If the gentleman will get the testimony and read it he will see how little Judge Harrah and Manager Sterrett knew about the whole transaction. They could not satisfactorily answer half of the questions I asked them. This case has been pending some time, and, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's objection was to my request that it be passed over to-day. I understand that that brings the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to its immediate consideration?

Mr. BLANTON. I object. But, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues having granted me the indulgence, I desire to show some of the evidence I elicited on cross-examination as my reason for opposing the passage of this bill. I quote from the hearings of May 3, 1918:

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m., Hon. HUBERT D. STEPHENS (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. We will now take up the McClintic-Marshall case.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there are a few questions I would like to ask.

The CHAIRMAN. Whom do you desire to interrogate first?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Sterrett.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT OF MR. W. M. STERRETT.

Mr. BLANTON. Your company is not claiming anything more than the terms and provisions of this contract which they signed and executed would warrant, are they?

Mr. STERRETT. You mean claiming any more than was claimed before the committee?

Mr. BLANTON. Let us get our minds away from the committee and get back to the contract. Your company executed a contract with the commission to do certain work on Panama locks, did they not?

Mr. STERRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Under that contract you were paid all that your contract provided for, were you not?

Mr. STERRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the terms of the contract; and how much more were you paid by the Government?

Mr. STERRETT. I do not think any more.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you not know that your company was paid approximately $300,000 in cash more than the amount that the contract provided for by the Government?

Mr. STERRETT. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, that is a fact. If you will investigate it, you will find that is a fact, as shown by the warrants which your company has received and which are now in the Treasurer's office. Then, you are asking for approximately $1,000,000 here now, more or less. If what I have said is true, then you are asking for that much money more that you have now been paid under your contract. Is that the fact?

Mr. STERRETT. I can not answer your question. I do not think that is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. On investigation you will find it is correct.

Mr. STERRETT. What I might say is that the contract was on a weight-price basis. Certain weights were assumed at the start, and on the basis of those assumed weights a lump sum was worked out, but we were paid later on the actual weight.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you not know that the contract provides for a weight basis, and that any weight of parts over and above that basis is to be paid for at the same rate of compensation as provided for in the contract? Do you not know that to be a fact?

Mr. STERRETT. Yes; that is in the contract.

Mr. BLANTON. And do you not know that the contract further provides for a certain percentage of weight over the weight provided for in the contract for which there is to be no extra compensation—weight of the various parts? That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. STERRETT. There is a provision in the contract that we can not vary beyond a certain percentage.

Mr. BLANTON. And that up to a certain percentage there shall be no extra compensation?

Mr. STERRETT. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that under the terms of that contract your company was to finish certain locks at a certain specified time? For instance, the Gatun Lock and the other two locks were to be finished at a certain specified time, were they not?

Mr. STERRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that with respect to those locks and the time specified time was of the essence of that contract? You know what is meant by that legal term, do you not—essence of the contract?

Mr. STERRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Time is of the essence of the contract?

Mr. STERRETT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Time was of the essence of that contract with respect to the completion of those certain locks; is not that the fact?

Mr. STERRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you not know it to be the fact with respect to every single lock that your company was behind to a considerable extent beyond the time specified in the contract? Was not that true in the case of every single one of them?

Mr. STERRETT. With the original contract that is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. So far as every contract is concerned, the original contract and every single supplemental contract, that is true, is it not?

Mr. STERRETT. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a logical conclusion. Mr. Sterrett, is it not a fact that this Government, under its contract, acting through the Isthmian Commission, reserved the right to delay any single part or all of this work whenever it deemed it necessary?

Mr. STERRETT. I think there was a provision to that effect.

Mr. BLANTON. There was a specific provision with reference to that matter with only this reserving clause: That for whatever time the Government delayed any matter that time of delay was to be added to your time within which the work was to be completed?

Mr. STERRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the contract provide that there should be no damages whatever claimed by your company for the delays on the part of the Government in making investigations?

Mr. STERRETT. I can not answer that.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you not sufficiently familiar with your contract to answer that question?

Mr. STERRETT. I do not remember.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that this Government in this contract which you signed provided that it should have the right to make any change which its chief engineer deemed necessary at any time? Is it not a fact, and also that you should charge no extra compensation for any such change unless you at the very time that change was proposed, and before the work was done, should make a claim and have it understood and agreed upon by the Government at that time? Did not the contract provide for that?

Mr. STERRETT. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. And did not the contract further provide that unless you saw fit to exhaust your remedy provided for in the contract that you waived any claim for damages by reason of any change? Does not the contract specifically provide for that?

Mr. STERRETT. I do not know whether it says we waive it, but we are allowed no claim.

Mr. BLANTON. You make a claim here for certain material which you say is a better class of material than you were obligated to furnish. Is not that the fact?

Mr. STERRETT. No; there was no claim about the class of material. The claim was about the class of workmanship.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you sure that part of your claim does not embrace the charge that you furnished material of a better class than was provided for in the specifications?

Mr. STERRETT. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. But you do say that you furnished a better class of workmanship?

Mr. STERRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you not know it to be the fact, Mr. Sterrett, that this contract provides that this Government is to have everything about this transaction first class, of the very best quality possible?

Mr. STERRETT. They are to have first-class workmanship.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want you to feel that I am antagonistic to you or your company, because whatever in this investigation the facts show the company is entitled to I expect to vote to the very last dollar and cent. I am merely trying to get the facts, and I want you to feel I am not antagonistic to you or your company, but am doing it merely from a sense of duty, and do not want to be in an attitude of trying to confuse you in any way.

Mr. Sterrett, is it not a fact that all along through this work from month to month certain changes did occur that were required, and did not your company at that time make any claim for extra compensation and by supplemental agreements such compensation was agreed to then and there, and they received payment for them from time to time?

Mr. STERRETT. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. There was nothing like that occurred? There was never any agreement as to any change in that contract for which you claimed and did receive compensation?

Mr. STERRETT. I do not remember.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I want to ask you why it was the Government paid, and you received, $300,000 more than the contract called for?

Mr. STERRETT. I explained that to you.

Mr. BLANTON. How?

Mr. STERRETT. On account of the weight running more than the original estimates.

Mr. BLANTON. Then you claim, if I understand you correctly, that all of this $300,000 that your company received more than the contract price was for extra weight of material? Do you claim that?

Mr. STERRETT. That is my remembrance of it. Of course, this is a pretty big contract, and there may be some changes I do not remember about, but I do not remember of any change in the contract. I think that is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. If you will study it carefully, you will find that you were incorrect about that. I just merely state that for your benefit. Is it not a fact that on no item which is embraced in your claim under consideration at this time did you at the time claim extra compensation and have it thrashed out at that time? Is not that a fact?

Mr. STERRETT. No; I think that is not correct.

Mr. BLANTON. The contract provides that this company, where it claims extra compensation for any change made, or for any matter in connection with the construction of these locks, before it shall be entitled to any compensation other than that provided in the contract, must at the very time make a charge for extra compensation and damages to the chief engineer and have it thrashed out and agreed upon at that time; otherwise it shall be waived.

Mr. LITTLE. And that is in the contract?

Mr. BLANTON. And that is in the contract.

Mr. LITTLE. Do you claim that he concedes that he let that moment go by?

Mr. BLANTON. He says none of these items were claimed at that time and thrashed out.

Mr. LITTLE. Was there not in their opening statement some explanation of why that was done; and if so, I would like to have him explain that?

Mr. BLANTON. This is a very voluminous contract, but I would like to read certain portions of it into the record, to be taken in connection with this interrogation. This is the main contract that was signed and executed. It provides:

"It is further understood, covenanted, and agreed that the commission may delay the commencement of the erection of any or all of the gates and fixed parts, for the reason that it has not completed the masonry or the fixed ironwork, or for any other reason it may deem sufficient to justify such action; and if at any time the commission shall deem it necessary so to do it may suspend the work of erection on any or all of the gates and fixed parts covered by this contract, in which case the contractor shall, without expense to the commission, properly cover over, secure, and protect such of the work as may be liable to sustain injury from the weather or otherwise. The commission may also direct the order in which the different gates and fixed parts in a given lock shall be erected, and it may require that any gate and the fixed parts necessary for same in any twin flight of locks shall be completely erected on or before a date fixed herein for the erection of any other gate in such twin flight of locks, and in such case the provisions of this contract relative to liquidated damages for delay shall subsist, take effect, and be enforceable in the same manner and to the same extent as if the date thus fixed was originally specified herein."

In that connection, is it not a fact that your company agreed that for every day's delay over and above the time specified in the contract on any of these locks they should respond to this Government in liquidated damages, so much for each day's delay?

Mr. STERRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. It goes on:

"Provided, That in all such cases the contractor shall be granted an extension of time within which to complete the erection of any or all gates so delayed in erection, equal to the period of any delay caused by any such delays in the commencement of erection, suspension of work, or change of dates, but he shall not be entitled to any payment as additional compensation or as damages on account of any such suspension of work, delay in commencement of erection, or change in time or order of erection of gates."

The whole compensation was to be an extension of time in which he was to complete the work.

"ART. III. It is further understood, covenanted, and agreed that all materials and workmanship"—

Both materials and workmanship, mind you—

"used and applied under this contract, in details and finish, shall be first class and of the very best quality."

I want you to catch that, members of the committee, that everything, material, workmanship, everything shall be first class and of the very best quality.

Mr. MERRITT. What does it say right after that?

Mr. BLANTON. I will read all of it. It says:

"And that all materials, both in the form of raw materials and at every stage of manufacture, and all workmanship shall from the beginning to the end of the work be subject to the inspection of the chief engineer of the commission, or his authorized representative, and that the commission's inspectors shall have free access at all time to any works where any raw materials or manufactured parts covered by this contract are located for the purpose of examining such raw materials or manufactured parts, and for the purpose of witnessing any and all processes of manufacture, and they shall have free access at all times to any and all parts of the erecting plant and all other parts of the work on the Isthmus."

There is a whole lot about inspection that you do not care about.

"It is further understood, covenanted, and agreed that the commission's inspectors may at any time reject any or all work or material not in accordance with this contract, and the right to reject any and all defective work or material shall continue until final inspection and acceptance and payment for material and work herein provided for, regardless of any prior inspection, payment, or act of the commission, and such defective or unsatisfactory material or work shall be promptly removed, remedied, or replaced by the contractor without expense to the commission."

Then there is a penalty for the contractor refusing to do that.

"ART. IV. The contractor shall prepare and submit to the commission in duplicate all necessary working drawings"— and so on. Then it says:

"The approval of such drawings shall be taken as certifying only to the general agreement of the working drawings with the contract plans as to arrangement and sizes of the principal members, but shall not relieve the contractor from full responsibility for the correctness of his shop drawings, for errors in details, such as rivet spacing, clearances, packing of plates, etc., which might interfere with either the strength or appearance of the finished work or with accurate and speedy erection.

"The contractor shall be solely responsible"— and so on. There are two other clauses:

"The commission, however, reserves the right to make any minor changes it may see fit to make in the original contract drawings, the working plans, and specifications for material and workmanship prior to the final acceptance of any part of the finished material: Provided, however, That for any extra expense incurred by the contractor for material furnished or ordered, drawings made, or work executed prior to the time of receiving notice of such change, the contractor shall be reimbursed at reasonable rates to be fixed, in any case, by agreement between the contracting parties."

Notice particularly this clause:

"Any claim for such changes shall be made by the contractor at the time of the change or no allowance will be made or money paid on account of the same. The contractor shall also furnish the commission"— and so on. That is brought forth in an additional article in this contract specifically:

"ART. X. The contractor agrees to make no claim for compensation for any work, labor, or materials over and above that specified or called for in the contract, specifications, and plans, unless same shall have been agreed upon in writing by the parties to the contract before such work shall have been commenced or the labor or materials furnished."

Mr. BLANTON. I want to give you an opportunity to get yourself right in the record, because I do not want to take advantage of you in your absence when we take the matter up. You stated in answer to my question that all of this $300,000 extra compensation was for extra weight in parts, and that at no time did you make extra claims, and that they have been adjudicated and agreed upon and you have received compensation for them. I want you to get right on that. I have here before me copies of supplemental agreements certified to Mr. J. L. Baity, who is Auditor for the War Department, which are probably familiar to you, and some of them are known as supplemental contract, dated June 15, 1911. This contract was dated June 21, 1910?

Mr. STERRETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is a supplemental contract of June 15, 1911, a year after the original contract. Here is another of December 16, 1911, which is nearly a year and a half after the original contract. Here is a supplemental agreement of February 7, 1912; here is another of June 13, 1912; here is another of January 14, 1913; here is another one of May 20, 1913, nearly three years after the original contract. Do you still maintain before this committee that you did not raise claims and have supplemental agreements and receive certain extra compensation under those? Do you still maintain that before the committee, after I call your attention to these?

Mr. STERRETT. The best I can say is that I have answered as far as I know. I think Judge Harrah can answer that.

Mr. BLANTON. Judge Harrah is supposed to represent the Government, and I am asking you as one of the interested parties whose claim we have up before us for consideration. You are asking us to take a million dollars of the people's money in time of war out of the Treasury and pay you on the contract, and I am interrogating you about that claim.

Mr. STERRETT. All I can tell you with reference to those supplemental agreements is what I have answered.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not believe under the terms of this contract that this company is entitled to one single dollar. I think that when they were paid the $300,000 they were paid more than the contract price, and they were paid every cent that was due them.

The full contract compensation was $5,374,474.82, the compensation provided for in the contract, the amount certified to by J. L. Baity, Auditor for the War Department, who says:

"In compliance with your indorsement of the 23d instant, on letter of Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, M. C., of the Committee on Claims, dated April 22, 1918, received at 2 p. m., the 24th instant, and which is returned herewith, requesting statement of total amount paid the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co. by the Isthmian Canal Commission under contract dated June 21, 1910 (W. O. 23444), for constructing lock gates for the Panama Canal, and supplemental contracts thereto, and copies of the contracts and circular, I have the honor to report that the total amount paid the contracting company under said contracts as shown by vouchered payments in this office was $5,753,725.63, from which may be deducted for one shipment lost, which was refunded and later replaced, $77,538.66, leaving net amount paid on this contract of $5,676,186.97."

Now, taking the contract consideration of $5,374,474.82 from the net amount paid on this contract of $5,676,186.97, there is a balance of $301,712.15 over and above the contract consideration that was paid.

Mr. Speaker, I have fought this bill ever since I have been in Congress, and thus far I have been able to keep it from passing. Bills of this character should not be considered on Private Calendar day, when most of the Members are away except those who have private bills to pass.

Let me call the attention of my colleagues to two other bills which in years past have been favorably reported by committees which I have prevented from passing by filing minority reports against them and staying on the floor here and objecting to their consideration. One is that of the Sevier estate for $66,736,387.60. At the first meeting of the Claims Committee in 1919 I prevailed upon the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] not to favorably report this bill, which then was H. R. 12018, but to give me further time to investigate it, which he reluctantly granted. On January 31, 1919, I filed my adverse report with the committee, and on February 7, 1919, every member of the Claims Committee present unanimously adopted my adverse report, which is as follows:

CLAIM OF THE ESTATE OF JOHN SEVIER AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BLANTON, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following adverse report:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12018) for the relief of the estate of John Sevier, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do not pass.

This bill—H. R. 12018—if allowed, would pay to Emmetta Humphreys, as administratrix of the estates of John Sevier, sr., and John Sevier, jr., the enormous sum of $66,736,387.60, being principal sums aggregating $8,447,644, together with 6 per cent interest thereon for over 115 years.

There are really three claims embraced in the above amount, the first and principal one of which is for the value of 174,474 acres of land originally within the boundaries of the State of North Carolina, surveyed and granted to John Sevier, sr., in the years 1784 and 1795, under an act of the General Assembly of the State of North Carolina in 1783.

In 1785 the United States entered into the treaty of Hopewell with the Cherokee Indians by which certain described lands then in North Carolina were set apart to them for hunting grounds.

In February, 1790, the State of North Carolina ceded her western territory, embracing the lands allotted to the Cherokee Indians, to the United States with certain conditions expressed.

In 1791 the United States entered into the treaty of Holston, by which the boundary between the citizens of the United States and the Cherokee Indians was established.

The said surveys and grants of land to John Sevier were included within the boundaries of the said territory theretofore set apart to the Cherokee Indians, and were not made until 1794 and 1795, subsequent to the said treaties of Hopewell and Holston, and subsequent to the cession to the United States by North Carolina of these lands out of which the State of Tennessee was afterwards created.

By the act of February 18, 1841, the State of Tennessee was authorized to settle claims against said lands, but required that all land warrants should be satisfied, either by location of the land within one year or by their presentation for payment at a price of not less than 12½ cents per acre within two years, or the holders of such warrants should be forever barred of all further claim or right.

When this case was submitted to the Court of Claims for a determination of the facts, in the opinion of the court filed February 28, 1910, it found:

"There is no evidence to show whether the claimant's decedents, or their heirs or legal representatives, complied with the terms of the above act; presumably they did not."

And, further, the court found:

"Nor is there any evidence to show that John Sevier, sr., and John Sevier, jr., did not receive the benefit of said lands or the value thereof, as provided by the said act of February 18, 1841, nor does it appear that the United States ever received any benefit therefrom."

Claim No. 2 involved 50,000 acres of land deeded to John Sevier in 1797 by one Cox, attempting to act for the "Tennessee Company," out of lands granted by the State of Georgia to the "Tennessee Company," reciting a consideration paid by Sevier of $5,000, which, with other lands, afterwards became the "Mississippi Territory," out of which the States of Alabama and Mississippi were created.

On April 24, 1802, the State of Georgia ceded to the United States the said "Mississippi Territory," Georgia to be paid $1,250,000 out of the first sales, and, if a balance remained, reserving 5,000,000 acres to satisfy and compensate claims.

On March 3, 1803, Congress passed an act requiring all such land claimants to perform certain acts before March 1, 1804, on penalty of becoming forever barred for nonperformance, and further providing that all claims must be exhibited to the Secretary of State and recorded by January 1, 1804.

In passing upon this claim the Court of Claims, on February 28, 1910, held:

"Whether the claimant's decedent ever complied with the provisions of said act does not appear."

On March 31, 1914, Congress passed an act providing for commissioners to pass upon all claims based upon said "Tennessee Co." lands, to whom John Sevier submitted his deeds from Cox and executed releases to the United States, and said commissioners ruled against said claims, holding that Sevier had failed to show proof of any authority in said Cox to act for said company, and on February 28, 1910, the Court of Claims found:

"That it did not appear that the United States had received any benefit whatever from said land."

The third claim involved 5,000 acres of land granted August 14, 1786, to John Sevier by the General Assembly of the State of Georgia for acting as a commissioner appointed by said assembly, which land was afterwards located and patented to the heirs of John Sevier in 20 patents on June 12, 1828. Said heirs failed to take possession of same, but permitted individuals to hold possession of same adversely until they have lost their title by limitation. The United States is not to blame for such laches. The Court of Claims found:

"It is not shown that the United States at any time received any benefit therefrom."

John Sevier was the first governor of Tennessee, was a man of good judgment and strong political influence, and it is to be presumed that he received the benefit of the warrants involved in claims 1 and 2. When his estate was inventoried even the most insignificant articles of minutest value were itemized, yet no mention was made of such warrants.

There is no merit in this claim; hence it is disallowed.

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

The other claim, Mr. Speaker, is that of Marian B. Patterson for $20,963, favorably reported several times to the House. That you may see how unmeritorious this claim is, I want my colleagues to carefully consider my minority report which, on June 28, 1918, I filed against it. A careful inspection will see that there is no warrant for taking this money out of the people's Treasury.

Mr. BLANTON, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following minority report:

"Although all of my colleagues on the committee have voted to favorably report House bill 6486 and pay to Marian B. Patterson $20,963 out of the Public Treasury, I regret that my duty as I see it under my oath of office will not permit me to do otherwise than to protest their action, and at the proper time I shall move to strike from the bill its enacting clause. I sincerely believe that if any Member will give this case the same careful study and investigation which I have given to it he will inevitably reach the conclusion I have formed, that the Government is not due one single dollar on this claim, and that it would be a great injustice to the people of the United States to take their money out of the Treasury and put it into Mrs. Patterson's pocket.

"I submit that no evidence whatever of probative force has been filed in this case showing that Gen. Patterson suffered any loss. He was entitled to a salary of $5,000 per annum. He served about nine years, to wit, from sometime in May, 1897, until about July, 1906. During that time he had in his custody funds of the United States from fees collected to the amount of $62,048.46, and the statement of the Government Auditor from the Treasury Department, which I have just procured and will incorporate hereafter, shows that out of said Government funds Gen. Patterson retained for his salary the sum of $42,423.22, and the record further shows that in the beginning of his service, while receiving instruction and in transit, he received for salary the further sum of $1,928.34, and that in addition thereto he drew a draft on the Government for $1,115.70 to cover salary while under instruction prior to January 1, 1898, making a grand total of $45,467.26 received by him as salary for the little over nine years' service. In addition to the above the auditor shows that Gen. Patterson further retained $6,956.80 as compensation due him on agency fees collected; hence altogether he received from the Government as compensation for a little over nine years' service the sum of $52,424.06. And the auditor shows that during this time in Calcutta the purchasing value of the rupee, at its commercial exchange value, upon which basis Gen. Patterson collected the fees and retained his salary, was 100 cents on the dollar, the same as if he had retained his pay in gold dollars. The record further shows that during said time the Government allowed Gen. Patterson the sum of $21,644.76 for contingent expenses, clerk hire, and relief of seamen.

"To get the matter clearly before my colleagues, showing concisely the result of my investigations, and warrant for the above, I now incorporate herein a letter of inquiry sent by me to the Secretary of the Treasury, of date June 15, 1918, the reply of the Secretary signed by Hon. L. S. Rowe, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, dated June 24, 1918; the report of Auditor E. D. Hearne, of date of June 20, 1918; and the communication of Hon. C. S. Hamlin, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, addressed to Hon. EDWARD W. POU, then chairman of the Committee on Claims, of date May 18, 1914:

"MY LETTER TO HON. WM. G. M'ADOO, SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

"JUNE 15, 1918.

"Hon. WILLIAM G. MCADOO,
"Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: H. R. 6486, now pending before the Committee on Claims, of which I am a member, is a bill proposing to pay to Marian B. Patterson $20,963, losses in salary and allowances alleged to have been sustained by her late husband, Gen. R. F. Patterson, from January 1, 1898, to May 28, 1906, while consul general at Calcutta, India.

"I have spent much time during the past three months investigating this claim, and have now reached the conclusion that there is no merit in it.

"On February 17, 1912, Hon. Franklin MacVeagh, in a letter, recommended that Mrs. Patterson be paid $20,000, stating:

"'I believe that reimbursement, to the extent of the amount carried in the pending bill, to his widow, Mrs. Patterson, would be a most deserved, proper, and appropriate recognition of the services of the late Gen. Patterson.'

"He did not state that an examination had been made into the merits of the claim, and that the value of the number of rupees retained by Gen. Patterson and allowed by the department was less than the compensation to which he was entitled, but merely stated that paying $20,000 would be an appropriate recognition of services.

"On August 6, 1912, one John B. Kinnear testified before the committee that he was formerly a clerk in the Treasury Department; during which time he worked in the same room with and sat by the side of a gentleman who made the Patterson settlement, and he, naturally, knew about it. He stated that he felt that the Government ought to refund to Mrs. Patterson $2,164.01, which was made up of various little items charged to Mr. Patterson, being the difference between what the Treasury Department considered the representative value in exchange and the bullion value of the rupee currency in India; that Mr. Patterson had been in the habit of collecting the $2.50 invoice fee in rupees at their bullion value of about 20 cents; but that within a few months after he took charge, in 1898, he was ordered to accept the rupees at their commercial exchange value of about 30 cents, and that he therefore incurred a loss of about 10 cents on a rupee. Whereupon, the following colloquy occurred between witness and Congressman Francis:

"'Mr. KINNEAR. They claim that he collected this money from these men in India and that he collected $3.63 instead of $2.50 in each case, and the difference between the $2.50 and $3.63 during this period amounted to $2,164.01 and it was suspended, to know why it should not be disallowed. Now, under these circumstances, it does not belong to the Government.

"'Mr. FRANCIS. Was it disallowed?

"'Mr. KINNEAR. It was suspended to know why it should not be disallowed.

"'Mr. FRANCIS. But it was never disallowed.

"'Mr. KINNEAR. So far as I know it was not.'

"At the beginning of the testimony, the chairman stated:

"'We have before us Mr. John B. Kinnear, and he is to be heard on H. R. 10676, the subject matter also appearing in H. R. 15141.'

"Now, H. R. 10676 was to pay Mrs. Patterson $2,164.01, while H. R. 15141 was to pay her $20,963. How little Mr. Kinnear actually knew about the matter is shown in the following colloquy between him and the committeemen:

"'Mr. GREEN. Why do you say that the amount of this smaller bill is not included in the larger one, H. R. 15141, which apparently applies to all of the case?

"'Mr. KINNEAR. I do not know that I said that, but I heard some one say it around the table.

"'Mr. MOTT. I think I said that Mrs. Patterson told me they were separate claims.

"'Mr. KINNEAR. As to the larger claim, I would not attempt to explain it unless I had thoroughly examined it and knew what I was talking about.

"'Mr. MAGUIRE. Do you think that you can well adjust one claim without adjusting the other claim?

"'Mr. KINNEAR. I do not know much about this [meaning the larger claim for $20,963].

* * * * * * *

"'Mr. GREEN. Will you make a computation of the amount due under the larger bill, on the basis of 20 cents for the mint value and 32.4 cents for the commercial value?

"'Mr. KINNEAR. Well, I can do so, but it will not work out the figures you have just shown me.'

"And thereafter Mr. Kinnear did file with the committee an unauthenticated, arbitrary, theoretical table computation, showing that the difference in computing the compensation of Gen. Patterson in rupees of the mint value and of the commercial exchange value would amount to $20,963. Any fifth-grade schoolboy could have made a similar computation.

"On the letter of Mr. MacVeagh and this Kinnear table the Committee on Claims has voted to report favorably this claim, my vote being the only opposing one.

"There is not one scintilla of evidence before the committee showing that Gen. Patterson did not receive his full pay during his term of service.

"I desire to call your attention to the report signed by Mr. F. H. Davis, auditor, W. W. S., of date December 10, 1912, addressed to Hon. Sherman Allen, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in which he states, 'In very few instances are Mr. Kinnear's figures correct,' and he winds up by stating that 'nothing is due from the United States.' He gives the following table of Gen. Patterson's receipts and disbursements, to wit:

"RECEIPTS

Amount of transcript (fees collected)	$62,048.46
Drafts for salary while under instruction and in transit prior to Jan. 1, 1898	1,115.70
Compensation from agency fees	6,956.80
Compensation and disbursements from July 26, 1897, to Dec. 31, 1897	3,248.50
	73,369.46

"DISBURSEMENTS.

Salary, July 26, 1897, to Mar. 18, 1906	$42,423.22
Salary while receiving instruction and in transit	1,928.34
Compensation from agency fees	6,956.80
Contingent expenses, clerk hire, and relief of seamen	21,044.76
Money paid seamen from item of 'Wages and money paid seamen'	416.34

"And Mr. Davis then well says:

"'The consul general collects the fees, is their custodian, makes disbursements from them, and is paymaster of them until he deposits the surplus in the Treasury. In the light of all the facts before it, of the laws governing the matter, of the decisions of the courts and of the Comptroller of the Treasury, this office could not have settled these accounts upon any other basis than the rate furnished by the consul general. Every item under this head [referring to Kinnear's statement] is incorrect.

"'The contention in favor of the computations in this column stands upon no firmer basis than the contention of one who, having been paid 100 silver dollars on December 4, should insist that he had received only $49.70 in United States currency, the bullion value of a silver dollar being $0.497 on that day.'

"Now, for my use in opposing the passage of this bill, I would like for you to please advise me if I am not correct in concluding from the above:

"1. That during his tenure of office Gen. Patterson, out of funds in his possession, retained $42,423.22?

"2. If it isn't a fact that he drew a draft on the Government for $1,115.70, covering his salary while under instruction and in transit?

"3. If the above sums retained by him were not retained solely to cover his salary during his tenure and if he did not retain sufficient rupees, at their commercial exchange value, to aggregate the full 100 cents on the dollar purchasing value of United States currency in that country?

"4. If it is not a fact that, in addition to the above amount of salary retained, Gen. Patterson did not also retain $6,956.80 additional fees allowed him from agency fees?

"5. If it isn't a fact that during said time a dollar paid in rupees at its commercial exchange value had just as much purchasing power in Calcutta as an American gold dollar?

"6. If it isn't a fact that had the Government not changed the rule for collection, as it did in 1898, but permitted Gen. Patterson to continue to collect invoice fees in rupees at their mint value, on every $2.50 invoice Gen. Patterson would have made $1.13 clear profit?

"I will thank you to give me the above information at your earliest convenience.

"Very truly, yours,

"THOMAS L. BLANTON."

"'2. If it isn't a fact that he drew a draft on the Government for $1,115.70 covering his salary while under instruction and in transit?

"'3. If the above sums retained by him were not retained solely to cover his salary during his tenure, and if he did not retain sufficient rupees, at their commercial exchange value, to aggregate the full 100 cents on the dollar purchasing value of United States currency in that country?

"'4. If it is not a fact that, in addition to the above amount of salary retained, Gen. Patterson did not also retain $6,956.80 additional fees allowed him from agency fees?

"'5. If it isn't a fact that during said time a dollar paid in rupees at its commercial exchange value had just as much purchasing power in Calcutta as an American gold dollar?

"'6. If it isn't a fact that had the Government not changed the rule for collection as it did in 1898, but permitted Gen. Patterson to continue to collect invoice fees in rupees at their mint value on every $2.50 invoice, Gen. Patterson would have made $1.13 clear profit?'"

"I have caused Mr. Patterson's accounts, rendered as consul general at Calcutta, to the Treasury Department and settled in this office, to be carefully reexamined for the purpose of furnishing a reply to the questions propounded by Mr. BLANTON, and they are answered as follows:

"1. It is true that during his tenure of office Mr. Patterson retained $42,423.22 out of funds of the United States in his possession and collected by him as fees of his office.

"2. It is true that Mr. Patterson drew a draft upon the Treasury for $1,115.70 covering his salary while under instruction and in transit from May 9, 1897, to July 26, 1897, when he entered upon the duties of his office at Calcutta, and that said draft was paid.

"3. It is true that the above sums were retained by Mr. Patterson solely to cover his salary during his tenure, and that he retained sufficient rupees to aggregate a full 100 cents for each dollar retained under the current rate of exchange between United States currency and the rupee of India.

"4. It is true that, in addition to the above amount of salary retained, Gen. Patterson also retained $6,956.80 additional fees allowed him from agency fees.

"5. I prefface my reply to query No. 5 by citations from findings of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the Circuit Court of Appeals:

"'The Circuit Court of Appeals, first circuit, in case of United States v. Beebe & Sons (122 Fed. Rep., 763 and 764), finds that "the bullion value of the rupee at that time (August, 1898), in accordance with the tabulation of the Director of the Mint provided by law, was 19 cents and 9 mills, while its market value at Calcutta and its value then and there as currency was 32 cents 1 mill and one-tenth of a mill, being an appreciation of over 60 per cent. * * * Since January, 1893 * * * it has been practically stable in mercantile transactions at 32 cents 1 mill and one-tenth of a mill. In 1899, by legislation, the British sovereign was made legal tender in India at a ratio of 15 rupees to the sovereign, thus permanently fixing the currency value of the rupee at substantially the figure which it reached in 1898."

"'In the case of United States v. Whitridge (197 U. S., 137) the then Assistant Attorney General, the Hon. James C. McReynolds [now associate justice of the United States Supreme Court], stated in his argument before the Supreme Court that "since September 15, 1899, the monetary standard of India has been gold, the standard coin the British sovereign (worth $4.8665) and the rupee, a token coin, current as one-fifteenth part thereof—$0.324." The court, through Mr. Justice Holmes, sustained the contention of the Assistant Attorney General and stated, in part, as follows (p. 145):

"'"Before the date of this export (June 18, 1900), gold was adopted as the standard and the ratio of the rupee fixed at 15 to 1, or 1 shilling and 4 pence, in 1899."'

"With each of his quarterly accounts, from January 1, 1898, to January 1, 1900, Mr. Patterson furnished a joint certificate from himself and the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China, that the current rate of exchange between the rupee and United States money was 32 cents.

"Replying to question 5: Fifteen rupees in Calcutta, 20 shillings in London, and $4.8665 in New York mean the same thing, the English pound sterling, and any one of them, at that time, would buy as much in its own sphere of circulation as a pound sterling exchanged into terms of its own currency. The purchasing power of money in one country is not measured by the purchasing power of money in another. The money value or money price of a given commodity can not be uniform in India, Great Britain, and America. But the purchasing power of 3.125 rupees would have been, during Mr. Patterson's tenure of office, probably greater than that of an American gold dollar, because the latter, not being current in India, would have been taken at its bullion value.

"6. The estimated profit of $1.13 upon each $2.50 invoice was based upon the bullion value ($0.211) and the customhouse valuation ($0.306) of the rupee at the time of the Whitney importations at Boston, on July 1, 1897. The bullion value dropped to about 20 cents, and the currency valuation was soon thereafter stabilized at 32 cents and over. Assuming 20 cents and 32 cents to represent the bullion and currency value, respectively, of the rupee for the term of Mr. Patterson's office, the profit upon each $2.50 invoice, the proceeds of which were retained for salary or disbursement, would have been something over $1.50 instead of $1.13. In cases where he would have made remittances of surplus fees the increase would have been accounted for as 'gain by exchange.' But, as his collections after April 15, 1898, were made at the legal rate, there was no occasion after that date for such accounting.

"Respectfully,

E. D. HEARNE, Auditor."

"LETTER OF SECRETARY TO CHAIRMAN POU.

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
"Washington, May 3, 1914.

"Hon. EDWARD W. POU,
"Chairman Committee on Claims,
"House of Representatives.

"SIR: Replying to your request of April 21 for an expression of opinion as to the merit of the claim of Mrs. Marian B. Patterson, as set forth in H. R. 206, Private Calendar No. 70, I have the honor to transmit herewith the report of the Auditor for the State and Other Departments upon said bill.

"The auditor states that the claim, as set forth in the accompanying report No. 315, is a simple proposition to pay Mrs. Patterson twenty-odd thousand dollars, being the difference between the bullion value and the legal-tender value of all rupees disbursed by the late Consul General Patterson at his post at Calcutta, for salaries, clerk hire, rent, etc., and reports adversely upon it.

"Several bills covering the same claim have been before Congress in the last few years, but no bill of particulars has ever been furnished until now. The auditor's report shows that the payment of the claim upon the terms of the bill of particulars would be granting a gratuity, and upon these findings the bill can not be recommended favorably by the department.

"On pages 12–15 of the auditor's report, however, there is set forth an item of $2,164.01, which was a recharge made of excessive fees collected between January 1 and April 15, 1898. The circular, directing consular officers to observe the requirements of section 1746, Revised Statutes, as to the collection of consular fees in the coin of the United States or in its representative value in foreign exchange, was issued by the Department of State on March 8, 1898, and was received by Mr. Patterson April 13, and put into operation by him April 15, 1898. The provisions of this circular were put into effect by the auditing offices in the settlement of Mr. Patterson's accounts from January 1 to April 15, 1898, in charging back to him the $2,164.01 of excessive fees collected during that period. The Treasury Department instructions contained in the quarterly bulletins of the Mint Bureau, section 1746, Revised Statutes, and section 1723, Revised Statutes, made it obligatory upon the auditor to do this and there was no hardship peculiar to Mr. Patterson in this policy, which was followed in the settlement of the accounts of all other consular officers who collected fees in India.

"The circular of March 8, 1898, abolished the practice of valuing the rupee, both for collections and payments, at the bullion rate certified to by the Bureau of the Mint, which practice had been permitted in the Consular Service several years prior to the issuing of the circular. While it was, under the provisions of the statutes and regulations, obligatory upon the accounting officers to make all settlements taken up after the circular was issued according to its provisions, the application of the requirements of this circular to the settlement of the accounts of consuls in India in which the transactions occurred before they received the notice, although in accordance with law, was a surprise to them, and was probably the cause of some financial loss to them. This period of retroactive effect of the circular was from January 1 to April 15, 1898, in the case of consuls in India, and in Mr. Patterson's case involved a recharge, legal but retroactive, of $2,164.01. Whatever of equity may lie in favor of relieving all of the consuls of the recharges against them of the difference between the bullion and legal-tender rates of the rupee used in their disbursements is for the determination of Congress. The amount involved in Mrs. Patterson's case is $2,164.01, and if Congress should decide to grant such relief the further question arises whether such action might create a liability of the United States to the American Surety Co., which paid $5,883.92 to close up Mr. Patterson's accounts on final settlement.

"The department would approve the payment of this $2,164.01 to Mrs. Patterson, provided that this grant to Mrs. Patterson can be made without involving the United States in liability to the American Surety Co.

"I would also point out that it is extremely likely that claims for relief from recharges, made under like circumstances against other consuls in India, may be made, which would seem to call, on equitable considerations, for like treatment.

"I may add that Secretary MacVeagh recommended the payment of this item of $2,164.01 to Mrs. Patterson. Secretary MacVeagh also recommended the favorable consideration of the bill for $20,000, but the department at this time is unable to concur in this recommendation.

"Respectfully, "C. S. HAMLIN,
"Acting Secretary."

"I must again protest against the loose way our Committee on Claims has of approving private claims against the United States Government without a careful hearing of evidence and an investigation of the Government's side of the controversy. In other words, there should be at least a quasi-judicial ascertainment. Our committee did not call a single witness before it. It did not call on the Secretary of the Treasury for any statement whatever as to the account of Gen. Patterson. It gave less than an hour to the investigation before the committee of even the past record of the case before it voted to make a favorable report. In justice to my colleagues, however, I will state that they based their action upon the recommendation made by Mr. MacVeagh, wherein on February 17, 1912, without an investigation of the merits of the case, he said that he thought that the payment of $20,000 to Mrs. Patterson 'would be a most deserved, proper, and appropriate recognition of the services of the late Gen. Patterson.' And not realizing the lack of any probative force or value as evidence, my colleagues did also consider the arbitrary table specially prepared by Mr. Kinnear, which is based upon a false hypothesis and has no application whatever to the real facts of this case.

"Prior to April 15, 1898, the consul general at Calcutta had been in the habit of collecting the $2.50 invoice fee in rupees at their mint or bullion value of about 20 cents, when in fact the commercial exchange value of such rupee was actually worth 32 cents. On January 1, 1898, our Government ordered that in the future the consul general should accept the rupee at its commercial exchange value. This order was brought about through evidence filed with the Government by merchants in Calcutta showing that the $2.50 invoice fee collected in rupees at their bullion value actually amounted to $3.63, for the commercial exchange value of the rupee at 32 cents was equal to that value in gold there in Calcutta. This order was not received by Gen. Patterson until April, 1898, and in his letter of April 15, 1898, to the United States auditor he shows that he had received the order and was complying with its terms, and again in his letter of May 10, 1898, he confirms such statement, and he did comply with such order for years thereafter, until his service ended about July, 1906.

"The reason the Government charged Gen. Patterson with the $2,164.01 in 1898 was because Gen. Patterson had collected from each merchant paying the invoice fee from January 1, 1898, to April 15, 1898, not $2.50 in commercial exchange value but $3.63, and the United States Government was responsible to said merchants for the return of said $1.13 excess on each invoice, and if it had not charged Gen. Patterson with it he would have had a net profit of $1.13 on each invoice, which, during said time between January 1, 1898, and April 15, 1898, amounted to said sum of $2,164.01. As very aptly said by Acting Secretary Hamlin in his communication of May 8, 1914, if we should see fit to pay this amount because of the fact that until April 15, 1898, Gen. Patterson had acted under the old custom, that if we paid it to anybody we ought to pay it to the American Surety Co., who, as surety for Gen. Patterson, paid to the Government a shortage of $5,883.92 after he had been recalled here.

"Moreover, during his service when a previous shortage of $8,626.06 arose in Gen. Patterson's account, it was settled, as shown by the communication from Hon. R. O. Bailey, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to Mrs. Patterson, of date August 23, 1912, by a credit of $652.04 allowed Gen. Patterson by the auditor, by the check of Mr. Wanamaker for $5,481.62 (he being a friend of Gen. Patterson), and by a deposit of $2,492.40 made by Gen. Patterson himself.

"To further indicate how loosely we have acted, if any amount were due Gen. Patterson he is now dead, and such amount would lawfully go to all of his legal heirs and not merely to his surviving wife; yet the committee have ignored his other heirs and are attempting to pay over $20,000 to his wife alone.

"I respectfully submit that under the facts of this case Mrs. Patterson is entitled to nothing. I desire to call attention to the very able presentation of this matter in the RECORD made by Hon. JAMES R. MANN in 1914. I hope that when the time comes my colleagues will join me in a motion I shall make to strike the enacting clause from this bill.

"JUNE 28, 1918.

"THOMAS L. BLANTON."

Mr. Speaker, after carefully considering the above facts will any colleague here take the position that there is merit in the above bill? It but further emphasizes the wisdom of not considering such bills in the way this House has of passing them, but they should be taken up in the regular way and carefully gone into by the Members here.

I object to the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co. bill being considered.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the approval of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Missouri, ex-Speaker CLARK, may be recognized for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the approval of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Missouri, ex-Speaker CLARK, be recognized for one hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ALBERT T. HUSO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12333) for the relief of Albert T. Huso.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Albert T. Huso, of Joice, Worth County, Iowa, $759.41, in full compensation for his claim for loss by burglary March 12, 1913, and October 2, 1913, from his post office at Joice, Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, the chairman of the committee remembers the rules and regulations of the Post Office Department, which are reasonable ones, requiring the postmasters to place their valuables in a safe with a combination lock, such as would require force to open it. Does this case come within that regulation.

Mr. EDMONDS. In the March 12, 1913, case the post office was entered by burglars and they worked the combination of the safe.

Mr. BLANTON. The safe was locked?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. On October 12 the outer door was locked and the inner door was not locked. The regulation requires the inner door to be locked.

Mr. BLANTON. How did they get the combination?

Mr. EDMONDS. They blew out the outer door, so that the inner door would have been no protection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read for amendment.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the figures in line 6 and substituting "$759.39."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 8, by striking out the word "his" and inserting the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LOW PRICE OF FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a petition signed by 6,711 farmers in the Northwest relating to emergency legislation dealing with the present low-priced condition in the farming industries. I ask permission to have the petition read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether the gentleman intends to have printed that whole document in the RECORD.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am not asking to have it printed in the RECORD at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., December 17, 1920.

To the honorable the Congress of the United States of America.

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned bona fide farmers and persons intimately dependent upon agriculture in the Northwest hereby respectfully call to your attention the distressing conditions which are afflicting and menacing that industry of this section.

In possession of what should be the very best security, we are deprived by these conditions of the ability to realize upon them except upon a basis which involves the possibility of contagious calamity. We attribute these conditions largely to the disarrangement—

First, of transportation.

Second, of the marketing of grain, cattle, and other farm products.

Both these factors were originally created by the Government and with our cooperation and approval in the emergency of war.

At this time of readjustment the special consideration granted by the Government in reestablishing other interests upon a prewar basis has been denied to the farmer.

In this situation we, as citizens, feel amply justified in our urgent demand for sympathetic attention and efficient activity on the part of your honorable body.

Many plans have been suggested for credit arrangements for our relief. Which of these is best suited must be left to your judgment.

We therefore state the purposes of this petition to be:

1. That your honorable body provide ways and means whereby credit may be accorded proportionate to present need.

2. But particularly that this action be taken at the present session, to the end that returns from the 1920 crop shall be adequate to pay the cost of producing the same, leaving a margin sufficient for living and seed.

We desire still further to emphasize the imperative necessity of prompt action, even upon a temporary basis, in view of the present situation, which, in addition to its factors of emergency and hardship, involves still more onerous and uneconomic conditions if the current crop is not soon fully marketed at compensatory figures.

To the above petition herewith presented by The Minneapolis Daily News are appended the names of 6,711 Northwestern farmers.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts that he be allowed to proceed for two minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, on the 13th of December Hon. JOHN J. ESCH, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, delivered an address in New York on the transportation bill recently passed. It is altogether the finest and most concise statement and analysis of that bill and its purposes that ever was prepared, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WALSTON H. BROWN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 495) for the relief of Walston H. Brown, sole surviving partner of Brown, Hart & Co., and of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HENRY A. V. POST.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2300) for the relief of the estate of Henry A. V. Post.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOHN E. MOORE CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11572) for the relief of the John E. Moore Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have it reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the John E. Moore Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, and doing business in the city and State of New York, owner of the tug E. M. Millard, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said tug and the United States Navy scow No. 58, in Wallabout Basin, in the navy yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., on the 8th day of August, 1919, may be sued for by the said John E. Moore Co. in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing said court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the John E. Moore Co., or against the John E. Moore Co. in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, was there any negligence reported by the Secretary of the Navy concerning this claimant?

Mr. EDMONDS. This was caused by a collision between a boat that ran into a wreck that was supposed to be properly guarded. The Navy Department thought it was properly guarded. The Secretary says he believes the John E. Moore Co. is entitled to have this claim judicially determined.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice the bill permits the court to render judgment in favor of the United States Government against John E. Moore.

Mr. EDMONDS. Either way.

Mr. BLANTON. That could not be done unless there were proper pleadings in the case, unless the United States Government reconvenes in such an action claiming certain damages.

Mr. EDMONDS. In an admiralty case that would be settled without any question either for one party or the other party. The Secretary thinks they are entitled to a final determination in this case.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice the Secretary of the Navy uses this language:

That all reasonable precautions were taken by the navy-yard authorities to warn approaching vessels of the presence of the sunken scow No. 58.

Mr. EDMONDS. But he says, further, that he believes that the John E. Moore Co. is entitled to have the claim judicially determined. In other words, this wreck was lying off there with nobody on it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WILLIAM GORDON CORPORATION.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12281) for the relief of the William Gordon Corporation.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the chairman of the committee give us some information concerning this bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. This bill originates out of the building of the new Interior Department Building. The William Gordon Co. had a contract for the heating appliances. They tried to fulfill the contract and incidentally used a large amount of fuel in connection with the contract in keeping the building warm, but the building delays caused a loss to the Gordon Co. of $10,000. The department stated they thought $8,000 was sufficient to settle it. I have a letter from the Gordon Co. agreeing to take $8,000 to settle the claim.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the Secretary recommend the payment of $8,000.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; I can read it:

The department feels that, inasmuch as the contractors were in no way at fault in causing the delay, they have a just claim and should receive consideration.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. BEGG. How does it happen that John H. Parker, another contractor, got paid for this extension of time and this corporation was not paid?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know.

Mr. BEGG. It is in your report.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know what the claim was for particularly. It may be some contingency taken care of in the contract. In the Gordon case it was for heating appliances and there was no contingency to look forward to.

Mr. BEGG. As I understand the report this extra $8,000 is additional heat, $4,000——

Mr. EDMONDS. Partially, and partially loss of time and labor. The claim was $10,000 and it was cut to $8,000 and they are willing to accept that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, I have not been able to find yet when the department recommended the payment of the $8,000.

The gentleman who drew this bill and the committee, I suppose, undertook to cover this by saying that this company should receive $8,000, or so much thereof as may be deemed necessary to fully compensate. Deemed necessary by whom? The Secretary of the Treasury is not the one to determine whether it is necessary where we make an appropriation. Who is to determine whether we are giving this money to these people upon the basis that they make no profit or whether we include in what we give the profits that they may ask for? Who is to determine that? There is no provision in the bill, and the committee and the department have asked for the direction of Congress on that subject. Getting no direction from Congress on the subject, the department would have no jurisdiction, I assume, to determine the matter—the Department of the Interior or the Department of the Treasury.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman know who is responsible for the delay that occasioned this added cost?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. My understanding is—and I will not say it is correct—as is done in all cases where the Government has anything to do with contracts, after the plans and specifications are agreed upon and the contract is made they change them.

Mr. EDMONDS. This contractor depended entirely on the ordinary completion of the work in a reasonable time, and he was delayed without any desire on his part to be delayed. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the Secretary of the Treasury erected the building.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Secretary was directed by the Supervising Architect's Office, but that part of the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury is not at all related to the duty to pay out money on an appropriation made by the Congress.

Mr. EDMONDS. He would be the man to decide how much ought to be paid.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Here is his letter in which he asks the Congress to decide. I was under the impression, by the way, that the Capitol heating and power plant was the one that furnished the heat for the building.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for another question? Has the committee any itemized statement showing the losses?

Mr. EDMONDS. There was an itemized statement, but I do not seem to have it here. If the gentleman wants to let the bill go over, it will be all right, and I will take it up again.

Mr. BEGG. I will agree to that, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. EDMONDS. I ask that the bill go over without prejudice, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN LANDOWNERS, NEW CASTLE COUNTY, DEL.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11834) for the relief of certain landowners of New Castle County, in the State of Delaware.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I am reliably informed that that claim has been settled by the War Department, and I ask that it be passed over until I am informed in regard to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ANNIE M. LEPLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1321) for the relief of Mrs. Annie M. Lepley, as postmaster at Plymouth, Amador County, Calif., for money, postal money orders, and postage stamps stolen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to allow this bill would be a departure from the rule that has been heretofore followed. And, besides, rules and regulations prescribe that certain things must be done by all postmasters if they expect remuneration from the Government when they claim that valuables have been stolen from them. Regulations require that the safe must be kept locked, the combination such that it would require force usually to take things out of the safe.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I have objected to every character of a bill of this kind heretofore. I am informed that this is a poor widow. In Christmas time especially that allegation goes a long ways. I am not going to object to the bill, but every time a man postmaster comes in here wanting a return of his valuables he must come within the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the case in which a part of the claim was allowed by the Post Office Department?

Mr. RAKER. It was in part allowed. There are two parts; one of them is for money orders and one of them is for stamps. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to make just one statement. House bill 6522 is identical with this bill, passed by this House and passed by the Senate. The House 10 minutes ago passed a bill for the relief of Albert T. Huse, which is No. 148 on the calendar, and the facts are as near to the facts in this case as it is possible for two separate lots of facts to be, one occurring in one part of the United States and the other in another. The report of the Postmaster General recites the same statutes and the same law, and makes identically the same comment in both cases. If one had prepared a set of facts at different towns, it would have been almost impossible to make them as similar as those in this case.

Mr. WALSH. This is a similar case to the Huse case?

Mr. RAKER. Yes, sir; as near as I or any other man could make, and the same report, which I hold in my hand, is made in both cases, and quotes the same statutes and makes the same comment, and the House has disposed of the other bill.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of inquiring whether it is the policy now of the Committee on Claims to repeal that regulation of the department, which has the force of law, requiring the postmasters to lock the inner lock of a safe?

Mr. EDMONDS. It is not our desire to repeal that law at all; but we have had numerous cases in the House where we thought relief was worthy and have passed bills of this kind.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is nothing exceptional in this bill and in the bill we passed a while ago. It is just like any case where the postmaster, knowing the regulations but thinking it is too much trouble every day to lock the inner lock and throw the combination off the vault, does not do it. A majority of people who keep safes, probably without much money in them, do not take the trouble to throw the combination. Well, they take their own chances.

The Post Office Department has a very proper regulation. When the postmaster has a vault in his office he must throw the combination and he must lock the inner lock. It takes a little trouble to do it, and a little trouble to open the vault in the morning. The department has notified these people of this rule. They all know it. They gamble on a sure thing. It used to be that they were compelled to stand the loss themselves. Now, if they have sufficient influence or energy to tag around after a Member of Congress, the Government pays the bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the gentleman's statement is absolutely correct. In the eight years that I have been on the committee we have brought out numerous bills similar to this, where the people neglected to lock the inner lock. In most cases, however, there was forcible entry, and we considered that even had the safe been locked it would have made no difference.

Mr. RAKER. In this case the affidavits on file with the department show that the burglars broke a padlock on the building and entered forcibly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, well, what is the use? I used to run a post office myself. My office was burglarized, and I made up the loss. I did not ask the Government to do it. Burglars sometimes break open the front door of the building without getting any further. They sometimes break open the outer door of a safe without getting any further. They sometimes get inside, and then have to hurry away. It is true that robbing a Government post office is pretty nearly as safe as walking on a Washington street.

Mr. RAKER. These burglars got away and left their burglar's tools lying on the sidewalk and in the store.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The probability is that if the inner door of the safe had been locked, they would have left without opening it. They had to hustle away. If they had had to work a minute or two longer to get in, the chances are that the burglar would not have been successful.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If I have the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois spoke about claimants tagging around after Members of Congress about their claims. There are two ladies, one who for years has had a claim involving $66,736,387.60 and the other a claim involving $20,963, and because I happened to file minority reports against those claims when I was on the Claims Committee, and because I have fought them from time to time, those two ladies have come into my office on numerous occasions, and, although they were politely requested to please retire and not bother me about their claims, I have had them to insult me because I would not agree to support them. Is there not some way that Members of Congress can protect themselves against lady claimants?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No! [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Or must they just promise to vote for them every time they come into the office?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Mrs. Annie M. Lepley, as postmaster at Plymouth, Amador County, Calif., on her account as postmaster of said place, in the sum of $2,055.83, the same being the amount of certain moneys, money orders, and postage stamps taken and stolen by burglars from the post office at Plymouth, Amador County, Calif., at nighttime, at about 10 minutes past 1 o'clock antemeridian, on March 13, 1915, by unknown persons, and that the said Mrs. Annie M. Lepley be, and she is hereby, relieved and released from payment to the Treasury of the United States of the said sum of $2,055.83, and every part thereof, as such postmaster, and that her account be credited as postmaster with said amount of $2,055.83 by reason of said loss caused by such burglary.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent the title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Mrs. Annie M. Lepley."

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN ANDERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9675) to reimburse John Anderson, former postmaster at Sandborn, Knox County, Ind., for stamps and funds stolen from the post office.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the chairman if this case comes within the regulations prescribed by the Post Office Department?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; this safe was only locked with the day lock instead of the night lock.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. EDMONDS. However, the safe was blown open, so I think it would have made no difference.

Mr. BLANTON. In that case I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John Anderson, former postmaster at Sandborn, Knox County, Ind., the sum of $358.90, the same being the amount of moneys and stamps stolen from the post office at Sandborn, Knox County, Ind., on the night of February 18, 1907, by unknown persons.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent the title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of John Anderson."

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARTHUR FROST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11154) for the relief of Arthur Frost.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I understand this is a case where the claimant was not an employee of the United States Government?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. He was shot in the back, causing physical suffering. The Committee on Claims, although they have no law or rule for it, think in the exercise of their discretion in Christmas time they ought to pay him so much?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; we simply pay the man for the loss of time and medical attendance.

Mr. BLANTON. The report says you pay him for physical suffering.

Mr. EDMONDS. Partially, for loss of time and medical attention.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a departure from the policy heretofore pursued by the committee.

Mr. EDMONDS. The claimant has not asked the committee for anything more than what he has actually lost.

Mr. BLANTON. In what way is the United States Government responsible?

Mr. EDMONDS. In no way at all, any more than in any other case of this sort.

Mr. BLANTON. If a man goes down on the Potomac duck shooting and some fellow shoots him in the back, ought he to come up and ask the Government of the United States to pay him for it?

Mr. EDMONDS. This man was shot by a soldier who was chasing deserters. He fired his gun at the deserters and hit this man.

Mr. BLANTON. He was a member of the military police?

Mr. EDMONDS. He was an enlisted man coming under the War Department. He was chasing these deserters, and in doing so he accidentally shot this man. He was pursuing his work, and this bill is only to reimburse him for the actual loss which he has suffered. He is not asking for a year's pay or anything of that kind, but only for his actual loss.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur Frost, the sum of $960 for damages suffered by reason of being negligently shot and seriously injured by a regularly enlisted soldier of the United States while in pursuit of a deserter and in the legal discharge of his duty as a military policeman.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the figures "$960," insert the words "in full."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BLANTON was granted leave to revise and extend his remarks.

LENA SCHMIEDER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8560) for the relief of Lena Schmieder.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Lena Schmieder, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, in compensation for the loss of her husband, Joseph Schmieder, who came to his death on November 13, 1895, while in the employ of the United States Government and as a result of such employment, and for the loss of her second husband, Frank Schmieder, who came to his death on July 5, 1907, while in the employ of the United States Government and as a result of such employment.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 6 strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,080" in lieu thereof.

In line 9 strike out the comma after the word "employment" and insert a period; and strike out the remainder of line 9 and all of lines 10, 11, and 12.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, how did the first husband lose his life?

Mr. RHODES. The first husband's death came about in this way: He was in the employ of the Federal Government doing construction work on the Mississippi River. He was a foreman and his death resulted from the caving in of a bank and earth falling upon him. I call the gentleman's attention to the first communication in the report of the committee, which fixes the amount provided for at an amount equal to what this deceased husband would have earned during the period of 12 months. The Chief of Engineers also states that the case was thoroughly investigated and that there was no question as to the liability of the Government under the act of May 30, 1908. There is no question but the Government ought to have done then what it is doing now.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Subsequent to what date?

Mr. RHODES. May 30, 1908, when the law was passed making the Government liable.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This was in 1895.

Mr. RHODES. That is exactly what I have said. It is only to do in this case what the Government has been doing since May 30, 1908.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman think that injuries in a case that occurred 50 years ago ought to be paid for by the Government?

Mr. RHODES. To answer that question, I would be justified in saying that if the facts in a given case were exactly as the facts are in this case, I think it should be paid. The element of time ought not to control.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then we ought to go back and offer to pay one year's compensation to the descendants of every person who has been killed while in the employ of the Government from the time of the Constitution if time is not to be considered. Would the gentleman think that we ought to do that?

UMI

Mr. RHODES. I should say that where there are equities in a case, payment should be made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The only equity in this case is that the man lost his life.

Mr. RHODES. In the employment of the Government.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In the employment of the Government; and now the gentleman says that the element of time ought not to enter into the question. I beg to inquire of the gentleman whether he believes that we ought to provide for every case where a person in the employ of the Government has lost his life?

Mr. RHODES. Certainly not in every case, but in this case, and all cases like this.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. All cases are like this; there is no special element in this case. The man lost his life and probably through his own negligence. He knew of the danger; he is not the only man upon whom a bank of earth has fallen. If we compensated all the Members of the House that banks fell on last November we would pay out a considerable sum of money. [Laughter.]

EMMA H. RIDLEY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5744) for the relief of Emma H. Ridley.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the case where a physician stationed in the Canal Zone during an outbreak of some violent sickness became infected and died?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And it is proposed to pay his widow a year's salary?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is there any provision of existing law which would permit that payment?

Mr. EDMONDS. It probably would come under the Canal Zone employees' compensation act, I presume, if it happened to-day.

Mr. WALSH. He took sick and died down there?

Mr. EDMONDS. In this case this man stayed in his position and contracted the disease which he was there trying to stamp out. We paid some compensation to a man, as a matter of fact, two years' compensation, to a man in Montana, who died from contracting spotted fever. He caught it there in an endeavor to stamp out the fever.

Mr. WALSH. That case in Montana was a little different from this case, was it not?

Mr. EDMONDS. Virtually the same thing. In one case a man went to endeavor to stamp out a disease and the other man stayed in his position.

Mr. WALSH. The disease was pneumonia.

Mr. EDMONDS. Virulent pneumonia.

Mr. WALSH. Not any more so than in the city of Washington?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know whether it was or not, but I think it is somewhat different.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think we ought to follow this up as in the case of the spotted fever, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

J. P. LITTELL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5859) for the relief of J. P. Littell.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. May we have it reported?

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to J. P. Littell, of Estherville, Iowa, the sum of $200 to compensate him for money expended in apprehending Thomas James and Dell Hubbard, convicted of passing counterfeit money.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why should this $200 be paid, I would like to ask the chairman.

Mr. EDMONDS. The reason why it should be paid is that Mr. Littell claims that Deputy Marshall Beach had promised him a reward if he would find these counterfeiters, and he did so.

Mr. BLANTON. And upon the allegation that somebody promised somebody something we have got to pay out the money? Because some employee of the Government assumes responsibility and authority and enters into an agreement, do we have to carry it out whether it is proper or not——

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit, I will say it is the policy of the department for suppressing counterfeiting to pay rewards in cases of this kind.

Mr. BLANTON. There must be some authorized governmental authority exercised in offering the reward. We have appropriated thousands of dollars every year since I have been here to pay rewards. But there are certain officials only who have the authority to offer them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The department has the authority to pay these rewards; why did not it pay them?

Mr. BLANTON. Because this case did not come within the rule. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

T. L. LOVE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 358) carrying into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the matter of the claim of T. L. Love, surviving partner of Robert Love & Son.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object—I do object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

LEO BALSAM.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 908) for the relief of Leo Balsam.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York why it is necessary on this occasion for Congress to pay if it is a just claim?

Mr. SNELL. The only reason is that they have the approval right down the line, but the Comptroller of the Treasury said there were certain technicalities that had not been complied with. Of course, the shoes burned in the gymnasium, and of course the man repairing them could not deliver them to the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. What evidence did the committee have, if the gentleman knows—and I presume he does, because he offered the bill—showing that this shoe repairer repaired these nine hundred and odd pairs of shoes before they were burned?

Mr. SNELL. We have the statement of the contractor himself and the general statement of the man in charge of that work, saying that he believed they had been repaired and that the man had always done the work he agreed upon before.

Mr. BLANTON. And that was the only evidence?

Mr. SNELL. That is the only evidence that you can get.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the contractor himself swear he had repaired them?

Mr. SNELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. That affidavit is in the files?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Were these shoes delivered to the Government?

Mr. SNELL. The shoes were burned in the gymnasium in Plattsburg.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What gymnasium was that?

Mr. SNELL. The Government gymnasium.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How did they get there?

Mr. SNELL. That was a place at the post where they were being repaired—at the training camp.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They were not delivered to the Government in any way after they were repaired?

Mr. SNELL. No. They were burned right there in the gymnasium on November 28. It is proved clear down through the line.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 908) for the relief of Leo Balsam.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Leo Balsam, of Plattsburg, N. Y., the sum of $1,282.50, in full compensation for repair at contract price of 950 pairs of shoes destroyed by fire when the gymnasium at Plattsburg Barracks, New York, was destroyed on November 28, 1917, said payment being due the said Leo Balsam in the opinion of the Acting Judge Advocate General of the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FIRST STATE BANK, OF KERRVILLE, TEX.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7050) for the relief of the First State Bank, of Kerrville, Kerr County, State of Texas, and to refund to the bank moneys which were deducted from its securities following the loss of war savings stamps or certificates mailed by the said Kerrville bank to the Federal reserve bank at Dallas, Tex.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask my colleague what evidence was there presented establishing the fact that this Kerrville bank did mail this amount of stamps?

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman will find in the report the affidavit of the president and vice president of the bank, one of them saying that the First State Bank did deliver to said postmaster an envelope containing 117 war savings certificate stamps and one stating that he saw the said A. B. Burton count the stamps to the number of 117; that they were there and that they were counted. And there is the affidavit of the assistant postmaster that he put them in the bank.

Mr. BLANTON. And they were lost in the mail during transit?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And they have never been heard of?

Mr. HUDSPETH. They never have been heard of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $494.91, which upon an investigation and reasonable proof to the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the First State Bank of Kerrville, County of Kerr, State of Texas, this being the amount of damages sustained by said bank growing out of the loss of war savings stamps or certificates which were mailed by the said Kerrville bank to the Federal reserve bank at Dallas, Tex., and which were lost in transit or in some other manner not known to claimant, but which amount, $494.91, upon loss of the same, was deducted from the Kerrville bank's certificate of indebtedness by the Federal reserve bank at Dallas.

Upon the 25th day of September, A. D. 1918, claimant became the fiscal agent of the Federal reserve bank of Dallas, Tex., and subagent under it of the Treasury Department of the United States Government to handle war savings stamps or certificates, and that in pursuance of the agreement by which the Kerrville bank became such agent there was placed in its hands by the reserve bank war savings stamps of a maturity value of $1,000. That thereafter, and until the 1st day of January, 1919, claimant had sold of the war savings stamps the sum of $415 maturity value, leaving $585 maturity value of the said stamps on hand, and that on the 3d day of January, 1919, claimant mailed to the said Federal reserve bank at Dallas, Tex., as per its instructions and in accordance with its instructions as issued in its circular No. W L 86, the remaining war savings stamps, being 117 in number, of a present value of $494.91. That the said stamps were placed in an envelope and sealed in the presence of witnesses, and on the same date a letter was written to the said reserve bank asking that the said certificates be insured and that stamps of the issue of 1919 be sent it. That the said package was sent under a franked sticker sent claimant for such purposes and was not registered, as no instructions had been given to claimant to do so. That the package in the sealed envelope was delivered to the local postmaster, who was made acquainted with its contents. That on the 4th day of June, A. D. 1919, the said Federal reserve bank claiming that it had never received the stamps when the certificate of indebtedness was redeemed by the said claimant, the sum of $494.91 was charged up to the claimant and taken out of the proceeds of the said collateral, and, as claimed by the said reserve bank, the said funds were placed in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all after line 7, on page 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDMONDS: On page 2, line 7, strike out all of the remainder of the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to amend the title by striking out all after the word "Texas," on line 2 of the title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the title offered by Mr. EDMONDS: Strike out all after the word "Texas" in line 2 of the title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill as amended was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEONIDAS SAWYER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5189) for the relief of Leonidas Sawyer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, how did the committee arrive at the sum of $3,500 in this case?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] was going to make an explanation of this bill, but as he is not present I ask that it be passed over. Would the gentleman from Massachusetts object to doing that?

Mr. WALSH. I was going to object to the bill, but I have no objection to the bill being passed over.

Mr. EDMONDS. I ask that the bill be passed over, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CORNWELL CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9337) for the relief of the Cornwell Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the Cornwell Co., Saginaw, Mich., successor to the Saginaw Beef Co., the sum of $8,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, being the amount of money collected from the Saginaw Beef Co. by fine imposed by District Judge Sessions at Grand Rapids, Mich., on August 28, 1914.

Such fine was imposed following an indictment returned at Grand Rapids for the same offense as an indictment returned at Chicago against Swift & Co., who were convicted thereon and a fine of $60,000 imposed, but in which case the judgment of the lower court was reversed by the circuit court of appeals for the seventh circuit in December, 1918.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman make a little statement about this bill in explanation of what it is sought to do?

Mr. EDMONDS. In this case it is sought to return a fine imposed on the Saginaw Beef Co. to the Cornwell Co., who was the successor of the Saginaw Beef Co., for the violation of the act to regulate commerce. It appears in the testimony taken before the committee that in certain cases these fines were returned, and in other cases they were not. This happened to be one of the cases where they were not returned.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman thinks that is a sufficient reason to legislate to return the fine?

Mr. EDMONDS. There does not seem to be any objection on the part of the department in regard to it. They seem to feel it was justifiable to return it.

Mr. WALSH. Why do they not return it?

Mr. EDMONDS. I presume because the money has been turned into the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. How many other cases are there in which fines have not been returned?

Mr. EDMONDS. I doubt if there would be any more. I do not know of any more cases being presented to Congress.

The report says that the fine was imposed upon a plea of guilty to each of eight counts of an indictment which charged the defendant with accepting and receiving concessions in violation of section 1 of the Elkins Act.

Subsequent to the imposition of the fine the affairs of the Saginaw Beef Co. were wound up and a newly organized corporation, the Cornwell Co., assumed its business and succeeded to the use of its property. Most of the former officers of the Saginaw Beef Co. became officers of the Cornwell Co. Information as to the transfer of assets or property to the Cornwell Co. is not at hand.

The evidence which resulted in the indictment of the Saginaw Beef Co. was gathered by special agents of this bureau and was submitted to Hon. E. J. Bowman, then United States attorney at Grand Rapids, Mich. The same facts were submitted to Hon. George W. Wilkerson, then United States attorney at Chicago, Ill., and upon being presented to the grand jury resulted in the indictment of Swift & Co., in the northern district of Illinois, for the same offense as was alleged in the indictment against the Saginaw Beef Co.

The fine of $60,000 was imposed upon Swift & Co. As stated in the report, in May, 1916, Swift & Co. were convicted and in November, 1916, a fine of $60,000 was imposed upon Swift & Co. by Judge Landis. In December, 1918, the circuit court of appeals, seventh circuit (255 Fed., 291), reversed the judgment against Swift & Co.

These two cases were similar.

Mr. WALSH. That is all right. One went up on an appeal, and Swift & Co. won out.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; and the two cases were similar.

Mr. WALSH. There were different facts in each case. It was not all one offense. I do not know why we should step in here and take the place of the circuit court of appeals and say that because Swift & Co. won when they appealed we should therefore return $8,000 to these people who did not appeal. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CERTAIN LIBERTY BOND SUBSCRIBERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13542) for the relief of Liberty loan subscribers of the North Penn Bank, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Santa Rosa National Bank, Santa Rosa, Calif.; and Mineral City Bank, Mineral City, Ohio.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I notice that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] introduced this bill. He is familiar with the circumstances. Will he state what it is intended to cover?

Mr. EDMONDS. This is to relieve certain innocent subscribers to the Liberty bond issues. These are the only three banks in the United States that failed while these subscriptions were being paid to the banks. When this bill is passed the question will be finally settled, unless we have another war.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman sure of that fact, that there are no other such banks?

Mr. EDMONDS. I asked the Treasury Department that, and told them I wanted them to include all of them in one bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I presume that has reference to national banks. Does the gentleman know how many State institutions and trust companies there were?

Mr. EDMONDS. I would have thought the Treasury Department would have told me if there were.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the Treasury Department have knowledge of failures of State banks and private trust companies all over the United States?

Mr. EDMONDS. Surely, if they were putting out Liberty bonds to those banks. These subscribers went to the banks, not because they went to them ordinarily but because they were notified by the bond committee. The bond committee told them to go to the nearest bank, and I have postal cards showing that the Liberty bond committee in Philadelphia told people to go to the North Penn Bank to subscribe. Most of them were small subscribers. They put up, possibly, $25 or $30 on a $50 bond, or maybe $60 or $70 on a $100 bond, and the bank failed. The court in Philadelphia has just rendered a decision that the bank has no responsibility at all in the matter. That is, it has held that the stockholders are not liable; that this was a side arrangement by which the bank undertook to receive subscriptions, and unfortunately the money was stolen.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I guess most of the Members of the House during the war subscribed to Liberty loan bonds, and many of them, if they were in the shape that I was financially, had to write to their home banks and get them to advance the money in order in pay for them. I know I did. In every such instance where the bank failed or where the bank lost the bonds, is the Government going to make good?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think so. In the case of the North Penn Bank I know of a man who left his bond at the bank to be registered, and the officers of the bank took it and hypothecated it. That would not be returned to him.

Mr. BLANTON. In a case of that kind should we make that good?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I would not believe in doing anything of the kind. These are the subscribers to the bonds who went there and left their money in the hands of the bank with the idea of getting their bonds when they were entirely paid for.

Mr. BLANTON. Every person in the United States has the right to choose his own bank. Most people choose them believing that the bank they do business with is solvent and that they are not going to lose anything. Had not we as well remunerate all the depositors for their losses?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, the gentleman is carrying that a little too far. He asked the bank to act as his agent.

Mr. BLANTON. We ask the bank to let us pay so much a month. Most banks did that. If the individual had had the cash he would have bought the bond and paid for it.

Mr. EDMONDS. A lot of people were directed to go to this bank. I recollect that the central committee told the people to go to this bank, and I know of one man who made a subscription for $5,000 who was not a depositor.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think that the bill ought to come up in this way, and I object.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the gentleman in making his objection makes a mistake, because this will be for the relief of many poor people.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think that this bill ought to come up when more of the membership of the House is present?

Mr. EDMONDS. This is left to the discretion of the Treasury Department, and any credit that may come in from these banks will be credited.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman realizes that if there were opposition to the bill here while it is being considered and it was called to attention it would embarrass some of our friends who have other bills to pass to vote against a bill at this time.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to get the bill passed unanimously, because I think the honor of the Government is at stake and not that of the bank.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think so, and I object.

LEMUEL STOKES.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3522) for the relief of Lemuel Stokes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Lemuel Stokes, late of Company C, Forty-fifth Regiment United States Colored Infantry, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300, the same being commutation money received from him, he having afterwards enlisted.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out, in lines 7 and 8 of the bill, the words "with interest at 5 per cent per annum from May 20, 1864, to date of payment."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill where this bill has been all this time—fifty-odd years?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I can not say where the bill has been; but the man to whom the money is to be paid is an ignorant man, unacquainted with any rule that required diligence on his part.

Mr. BLANTON. He may have been ignorant, but his father or his grandfather or his great-grandfather during the last 60 years might not be ignorant. It has been 56 years since this claim developed.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I can explain to the gentleman. I know this man well. He is now 89 years old. He was drafted during the Civil War at a time when his wife was extremely ill with typhoid fever.

Mr. BLANTON. The recitation of the facts I have in mind; but are we going to pay interest on this claim for 56 years?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. No; the committee amendment is to strike out the interest. They are simply going to pay the old man his money back.

Mr. BLANTON. Without any interest?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Yes. He served 14 months in the Army after paying commutation to the Government to escape from the draft.

Mr. BLANTON. If the interest is stricken out, I have no objection.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. The committee amendment strikes out the interest.

Mr. BLANTON. And the committee will insist on the amendment?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. With the Treasury in its present depleted condition, I doubt very much whether the Government could raise the interest on this claim for 56 years. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FOCHT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12890) referring the claim of the State of Rhode Island for expenses during the War with Spain to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the items of the claim of the State of Rhode Island against the United States for expenses incurred and paid in aiding the United States to raise its Volunteer Army in the War with Spain, which items, either in whole or in part, were rejected by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication and report to Congress. And the court is hereby authorized and directed to adjudicate said items of the State's claim upon the certificate of the governor or adjutant general of the State that they were for the reasonable and necessary costs, charges, and expenses incurred, in good faith, by the governor or State for the purposes hereinbefore stated, and with the firm belief upon the part of the governor that the money thus expended would be reimbursed to the State by the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of the bill after line 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "In adjudicating the said items of the claim the court is authorized to receive and accept as prima facie evidence of the same the certificate of the governor or adjutant general of the State, that the items were for the reasonable and necessary costs, charges, and expenses incurred in good faith by the State for the purpose of aiding the United States to raise its Volunteer Army in the War with Spain, believing that such expenditures would be reimbursed to the State by the United States."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not know, but perhaps the amendment is in better form than the original bill. This is where the State had a claim against the United States. All States have these claims. They were all placed on an even basis. The accounting officers disallowed some claims. This bill proposes to say that it is not a matter for the accounting officers to determine but a matter for the governor of Rhode Island. He certifies, and that is the end of it. I assume that every other State has the same sort of situation. Shortly we will have bills in here from other States asking that their governors have the right to certify and get money out of the Treasury, regardless of all being on an even footing.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. The amendment takes away from the governor the right to certify and requires evidence.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The amendment reads:

The court is authorized to receive and accept as prima facie evidence of the same the certificate of the governor or adjutant general of the State.

And so forth.

I said that I was not sure but that the amendment might be better than the provision in the bill.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. The bill provides that the governor's certificate shall not be taken as conclusive. If the Federal Government appears by the Attorney General and there was evidence that it was not expended, the records would show it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose the question here was whether the items were for reasonable and necessary costs, charges, and expenses. Here are some State officers spending a lot of money without authority which was not necessary to be used at all. Officials frequently do that. The accounting officers held them up. Men who spend money without authority unnecessarily are held up by accounting officers. In this case the accounting officers have held up this claim. Of course, the governor or adjutant general of the State certified that these expenses were reasonable and necessary. Now, that is prima facie; nobody can meet that question. If somebody should say they were not necessary, it does not make any difference. We are making them prima facie evidence that they are necessary. That ends it. Of course, I have been here a while and a lot of these claims have been pending. I have seen a whole lot of them paid, some of them I know were not proper to be paid, but I could not prevent it. Whenever a State does anything at all and spends any money and the General Government can in any way be interested in it, why, it wants the General Government to pay the expense out of the Federal Treasury. For that matter citizens of a State are getting so they want all the police powers that ought to be exercised by the State paid for out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield the floor.

Mr. FOCHT. Is it not a fact that the border States were subject to inestimable losses, running into untold millions, which have never been recovered, and time and again a bill has been presented? So, after all, while they come here for certain amounts, which have been paid, these border States have never been reimbursed for anything like the amount of losses sustained as a consequence of the war.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This, of course, has nothing to do with the Civil War. If any of these States were invaded during the time of the Spanish-American War, that is news to me, except they were invaded by American troops. Some of them were invaded by American troops during that time and——

Mr. FOCHT. I was referring to the gentleman speaking of the States constantly grabbing for reimbursement for what they suffered during that period of trial and emergency.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are still striving at the Treasury. Even the gentleman's State, badly as it was damaged during the war, always looks with hope toward the Federal Treasury.

Mr. FOCHT. Has any State in the Union furnished more money and better men than Pennsylvania?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Pennsylvania always did her share, and the gentleman can not get me to say she did not.

Mr. FOCHT. Then withdraw any objection to this bill and let Rhode Island have what belongs to her.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I notice one of the items covered by this bill is a claim for moneys expended for troops which were never mustered into the service of the United States. Does the committee intend this bill shall cover expenses of that kind?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Troops were ordered mobilized. More troops were gotten together than mustered into the Federal service, and the State paid for it, and it was not the fault of the State in having greater things than were asked of it, but it was because at the time the Federal Government did not see fit to take into the Federal service the troops which they requested the State to mobilize.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman find that in cases of this kind it was the custom of the Government to pay these expenses?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. The only case I had investigated was the present one.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman did not investigate as to the other claims?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I did not investigate as to other States.

Mr. JONES of Texas. One of the items here is for the care of sick soldiers belonging to State organizations. Does the gentleman intend that also shall be covered in the bill? It is item No. 4.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. This is for care of soldiers included in those organizations.

Mr. JONES of Texas. And then I notice the other item, which seems to cover expenses incurred from the time of the tender of the soldiers to the United States Government until the time they were actually mustered into the service.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. That is what it is for.

Mr. JONES of Texas. These are part of the items. The others are items which were not incurred by the United States Government at all. I will state to the gentleman I have heard of several instances during the World War of claims that would be made by some of the States—I think one of them my State—for equipment of certain companies which tried to get into the service of the United States.

It seems to me if a bill were passed and claims of this character were allowed it would form the basis of numerous claims of organizations which were formed in various States of the Union during the last war, many of which were not organized into the service, some of those perhaps were. It would be the basis of claims running into the hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of dollars. Now, I do not say such claims are unjust. On the other hand, many of them are no doubt just and equitable. But the measure if passed at all should be general and comprehensive in its scope and take in all of the States.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. The troops referred to by the gentleman from Texas were gathered together and mobilized and later on the Federal Government for some reason, not the fault of the State, refused to accept the troops, and there was no reason why the State should not be reimbursed. On the other hand, if it was an organization seeking entrance into the Federal service without a proper call from the officers of the Government, then those troops should not be reimbursed or the State.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will give the gentleman one instance I happen to know about, which was during the time when the Government was undertaking to raise a great Army and everyone was trying to help out the Government. There was some question of just what form of organization would be authorized. Some regiments were organized in my State and a great deal of expense was incurred. These were organized with the expectation that they would be federalized, and I am informed that they were led to think so by the War Department.

Others were simply under discussion as to what would be allowed and what plan would be formed. In the meantime the State militia was organized in some places, and I know that several companies were organized in my State where private funds were expended in some instances, State funds in others, and the money went for the equipment and care of the men during training. I know of several companies that were organized at the time when they thought measures were going to be passed.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I will state in connection with what the gentleman was saying that I have a number of letters from young men in Texas who enlisted in this militia, and they were told at the time they enlisted that the expenses would be refunded them and that the troops would be federalized. These young men claim that they have spent their time and money and that they paid their own expenses while they were in the camp getting ready to be taken into the Federal service. They are demanding of me as a Representative in Congress to know whether or not they are going to be repaid the money they actually expended as well as money for the time they expended under the call of the country.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I thank my colleague and wish to say that I have had similar letters and requests. If a measure of this kind is to be passed, they ought also to be included. But this should be done by a thorough and general investigation. It would open up a field of almost unlimited extent. If we embark upon a proposition of this kind, it will call for general embarkation. It seems to me there ought to be, for the present at least, in view of what the gentleman has stated—namely, that this is the only claim of the kind that has been investigated in connection with the claims—a postponement of this specific measure until opportunity is had for a very thorough investigation; that the committee should go into the details of the claims from the various States and see whether or not they are such as would be proper.

Mr. PARRISH. If the gentleman will yield further, so far as I am concerned, I believe the Federal Government and the Congress of the United States ought to appropriate money to refund the expenses that these men were out of during the time they were responding to the call of their country in the hour of its emergency. I believe also it ought to appropriate money to pay them their usual salary for the service.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not know that I am in a position to dispute the gentleman on that. I think there is justice in the position the gentleman takes. And for that very reason I do not believe it is wise to pass claims of the kind that is before us when there are so many claims of similar character outstanding. There ought to be a general measure that would take care of such cases in a general way, so that the States and individuals who have similar claims may come within the purview of that law. There ought not to be a law passed on the investigation of a single claim that only takes care of that claim. A great many other claims along the same lines are as just and as fair. For that reason I am opposed to this bill, which singles out a State and the claims of that State, and upon the certificate of the governor of the State seeks to allow the claims that have been made for equipment, training, and care of soldiers, most of which were never in the service. Especially is this true, since in the knowledge of the Members of the House there are many similar claims not only from the Spanish-American War but also from the great World War. If legislation of this kind is passed by the House, there ought to be a thorough investigation all along the line and a definite policy as to what is just and right in the premises.

Now, the gentleman who presents the bill admits that he only investigated in connection with this claim the single claims of the State of Rhode Island. I submit it has been my experience and the experience of my colleague, and I am satisfied it has been the experience of the other Members of the House, that there are many similar claims all over the United States. For that reason I think it would be unwise to adopt the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOCHT. Would you have the committee and the subcommittees send out word through the land that we are ready to consider measures of this kind? The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON], a member of the War Claims Committee, carefully considered it and brought it here and regards it as a just bill. And, furthermore, we have heard a good deal here to-day about establishing precedents, especially from the State of Texas. Would not this be a good thing for the other gentleman from Texas, who says there are claims in Texas that might be presented; that it would establish a precedent and make it easier for the adjustment of those claims from Texas? Does not the gentleman believe that would be a good thing?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think this, that the statement of the gentleman shows that no other claims were investigated, and that is not quite enough of an investigation to show that a precedent should be established. I admit that there are many just claims, but it is not necessary to send broadcast an invitation to bring in claims. If the committee goes into it, it will be easy to ascertain from the governors of the States the necessary evidence to determine whether the claims are just; and if upon investigation the committee determines that the claims of not only this State but various other States, or a part of them, are just, it would be easy to pass a general measure under which all of the just claims can be brought, and then the matter can be considered in a comprehensive, just, and fair way. I submit that there are other claims that are just and that ought to be included in this bill and not excluded from it. If there are other just claims, they are excluded from this bill when they ought to be included.

Mr. FOCHT. In other words, you want a blanket bill to cover all the possible claims that may arise?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No, sir; I do not. I want a thorough investigation, and a bill that will cover only such claims as are just and that will exclude all that are unjust, and not show favoritism to any State or any particular class of claims.

Mr. FOCHT. With all due respect to the gentleman's reasoning power and his logic, how is he going to investigate when he knows nothing about it and there have been no claims presented?

Mr. JONES of Texas. As a matter of fact, I am sure the gentleman will not state that he has not heard of claims being made to the War Department, and of letters being written to the Secretary of War in which complaints have been made of these various expenditures in the different States by units that have been attempted to be organized for the purpose of benefiting the Government.

Mr. FOCHT. I have nothing to do with any business except that which comes before the Committee on War Claims, and I can state that as a member of that committee for probably 15 years this is the only claim of this character that has been presented; and as chairman of that committee I will state to the gentleman from Texas that if there are any claims from his State that are presented as completely and clearly as this has been in the report that comes from my good Democratic friend [Mr. WILSON] of Pennsylvania, they will be brought to this floor. We are not running around the country hunting trouble for the United States Government, or hunting people to stick their hands into the Treasury, whether they are entitled to the money or not. It is hard enough to get anything from the Government, as it ought to be, as is well known, and this is an instance of it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. How long has this claim been pending? How long has this measure been here?

Mr. FOCHT. So far as I know this bill was first reported at this session by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] and introduced by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. JONES of Texas. When was the claim first made?

Mr. FOCHT. In the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman know the reason for the delay?

Mr. FOCHT. I have no idea at all why it has been delayed 20 years, any more than I have any idea why some other claims from the South which we have passed, 1,200 of them March 4, 1915, were delayed for 50 to 60 years. I do not know why they were not presented before. I voted for them, believing they were just, and to get rid of them.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman think it is wise to take this up?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes; I do.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman think it is wise to take up individual claims arising from the organization of militia, and pass them to the exclusion of others just as meritorious?

Mr. FOCHT. Of course, if the gentleman objects we will have to ask that the bill take the usual parliamentary procedure.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the Private Calender is called again.

Mr. FOCHT. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois if out of courtesy and consideration for the gentleman who introduced the bill [Mr. BURDICK] and the gentleman who reported it [Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania], and if on account of their absence he will not allow this to go over without prejudice?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. FOCHT. I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

W. C. STEWART.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11945) for the relief of W. C. Stewart.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. May we have it reported, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W. C. Stewart, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $285, the said W. C. Stewart being an assistant engineer, working under the direction and supervision of the Department of State on the International Boundary Commission between the United States and Mexico, the same being for services rendered as such assistant engineer for the months of March and April, 1915.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know more about this bill. I believe it is not the only one.

Mr. VAILE. There are two, this and the next bill, involving the same state of facts. Mr. Stewart, who is named in this bill, was the assistant engineer of the International Boundary Commission employed by the Department of State under the treaty with Mexico. Mr. Corbin, whose claim is involved in the next bill, was the consulting engineer. They were employed at salaries fixed by the Department of State. They rendered these services. They did actual work. Mr. Corbin maintained an office in El Paso, with Mr. Stewart as his assistant, where they assisted in straightening out boundary questions, disputes, and so forth, which arose. They did the ordinary work which comes into an engineer's office. The reason they were not paid was because Mr. John Wesley Gaines was in charge not only of the work of the International Boundary Commission but also of the Commission for Equitable Adjustment of the Waters of the Rio Grande, and the fund which was appropriated by Congress was for both of these services. Mr. Gaines so apportioned that fund that it was short for the employees of the International Boundary Commission. Mr. Corbin at the close of the fiscal year 1915 was about four months' salary short, and at the end of the fiscal year 1916 had not received his salary for a month and a half, or something like that. Mr. Stewart, I believe, was only a month and a half short altogether.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Here we make an appropriation for certain services. Mr. John Wesley Gaines, by the way, was a Member of this House for many years, appointed on the Mexican Boundary Commission, I think, probably because he had been a Member of Congress and was a good Democrat. For years we were trying to get rid of the Mexican Boundary Commission. They were practically doing nothing while the troubles in Mexico were going on. Now, I understand the gentleman to state that we made an appropriation for the Mexican Boundary Commission and for the diversion of the waters of the Rio Grande, or something of that sort, and because Mr. Gaines, who, I suppose, had the authority to apportion the expenditure of these funds, did not apportion enough to pay these men for doing probably unnecessary work, or not working at all, I do not know which, therefore we must make a special appropriation to pay them out of the Treasury.

Mr. VAILE. If the gentleman's argument depends on the assumption that they were doing unnecessary work or were not working, I am sure the gentleman is very much mistaken. They were engineers, professional men, just like lawyers or doctors employed on a professional salary or retainer.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was paying attention to the Mexican Boundary Commission long before the gentleman was.

Mr. VAILE. No doubt, but the gentleman knows that professional men, like engineers and doctors and lawyers, are not supposed to superintend the apportionment of this money.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know that they usually know that there is money to pay them or they do not work.

Mr. VAILE. As a matter of fact, Mr. Corbin maintained his office in El Paso for the settlement of these questions during all the last months of 1915, knowing that he had not been paid but relying on his Government which had employed him at a stated salary, relying on the good faith of this Government to pay him.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I assume that Mr. Corbin knew there was objection to maintaining the Mexican Boundary Commission at great expense, that had been maintained down there when it was a pure sinecure.

Mr. VAILE. It was not a sinecure for him.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know whether he was working or not. I assume that the gentleman believes that he was or he would not make the statement, but he makes it on the information that he has secured from Mr. Corbin.

Mr. VAILE. Corbin and others.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Corbin may be a very good engineer; I do not know or care. He was going ahead like everybody else, knowing that he was working for the Government with no appropriation to pay for it. He was doing the work with the understanding that it was entirely useless. We are not any better off with regard to the Mexican boundary work than we were many years ago. We finally succeeded in abolishing the commission. It remained in existence only because there was an ex-Member of Congress on it. Mr. Corbin was kept at work for a long time after everybody admitted that there was no occasion for this appropriation and the appropriation would not have been made had there not been a former Member of Congress on the commission.

Mr. VAILE. The Government of the United States kept him at work.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know who appointed him.

Mr. VAILE. He was appointed by Secretary Bryan.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That does not improve the situation any. [Laughter.] It may have been a political appointment.

A MEMBER. A deserving Democrat.

Mr. VAILE. He was a deserving engineer; a real deserving engineer.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If the gentleman will yield, does not the record of the State Department show these men were acting under the instruction of their superior officer and rendered service, and that they were not supposed to know whether there was money available to pay them or not?

Mr. VAILE. They did not have to come before the Committee on Appropriations and ask for the money.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand the position of my distinguished friend from Idaho and my distinguished friend from Colorado to be that if some officer of the Government asked Congress for an appropriation and Congress declined to make the appropriation, and they told the men to go ahead and do the work, then these men could come in and we should appropriate the money to pay them?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I understand the money was appropriated, but was apportioned to a different purpose.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It was appropriated for a certain purpose. It was used for other purposes, and the whole Mexican Boundary Commission knew that Congress was trying to get out from under them.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman assumes that the department knew all that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, they knew more than the commission knew.

Mr. VAILE. Is it the position of my distinguished friend from Illinois, who is so much more experienced than I am, that men who are employed by the Government to do work and who are not discharged, who have no supervision over appropriations, and no control over how they are apportioned, can not be paid if the appropriation is apportioned to some other work?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is right; that is the case; that is the reason we make appropriations.

Mr. VAILE. Then, that goes to corroborate the saying that Uncle Sam is the meanest paymaster in the world.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, well, Uncle Sam is frequently imposed upon, frequently endeavored to be imposed upon. If this was a private concern nobody would have the nerve to ask that these men should be paid out of the treasury of that private concern.

Mr. VAILE. If this was a private concern the men would have been fired, and if they were not fired they would have been paid, or they could come into court and collect their money. But here they have to come to the House of Representatives and ask for it on their knees, and so we are in a different situation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have no way of firing the employees of the Government. We have no control over them. The only control we have is over the question of making appropriations, and if we deliberately go ahead and make appropriations to pay men whom we have asked to be fired, so far as we have any power, and they are not fired, what is the value of——

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. According to the information furnished by the Secretary of State in connection with these two cases, does it not appear in the testimony that this appropriation was actually made for the purpose of paying the engineers, and that by reason of the fact that John Wesley Gaines diverted the appropriation that was made for these engineers without warrant—does not the gentleman think that changes the status a little, and do not these gentlemen come in with clean hands?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman convinces me, and I am willing to be convinced, that John Wesley Gaines unlawfully diverted the money which had been appropriated to pay these men for another purpose, I am quite willing to appropriate it over again.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Does it not appear from the report made by the Secretary of State?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It may; I do not know. If it does, it is time that the Government got after John Wesley Gaines and the accounting officers of the Government. I do not understand how John Wesley Gaines could unlawfully divert the money appropriated for one purpose and use it for another purpose and get it by the accounting officer.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Has the gentleman read the report made by the committee?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have read the report hastily.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. It says at the bottom of page 4 of the report:

With respect to item No. 1, it may be observed that the information in the possession of the department indicates that the appropriation made by Congress to carry on the work of the commission during the period from July 1, 1914, to June 30, 1915, was $15,000; that the act making this appropriation authorized the expenditure of a part of this amount in the study of questions relating to the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande; that Mr. John Wesley Gaines, before mentioned, was appointed as director in charge of the study in question, and besides, as before indicated, served as secretary of the boundary commission at a salary for both offices of $4,800 per year; that other expenses of the commission for the fiscal year mentioned were——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have read all that, but I do not see anything about an unlawful diversion.

Mr. VAILE. I do not think it was unlawfully diverted, it was an abuse of discretion. On page 4 Secretary of State Lansing, after describing the duties of Mr. Gaines, secretary of the commission, in the preceding paragraph, goes on:

It is stated in the bill that as such consulting engineer Mr. Corbin was "working under the direction and supervision of the Department of State." With respect to this statement, it may be said that while it is correct in a general sense, yet, as a matter of fact, there being at the time no United States commissioner, the work of the boundary commission in the United States was then under the direction of Mr. John Wesley Gaines, secretary of the commission, who gave all of the orders for employment and had control of the appropriations for the work of the commission, which were disbursed under his supervision by a disbursing officer of the commission, and the department was not aware of the fact that there was a deficiency in the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, which is later discussed, until it was afterwards so advised by the commission in writing.

If the department did not know that the appropriation was exhausted, should these men, employees of the commission, be expected to know it?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This appropriation was made for the commission. The department does not keep track of the appropriations or the commission. The department does not know, the accounting officers do not know, that these people were working under the commission.

Mr. VAILE. But the gentleman must acknowledge——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And, by the way, the State Department as a rule does not know anything about anything; seldom about diplomatic matters, and nothing about anything else.

Mr. VAILE. Well, these men are doubtless entitled to know something, even as much as the gentleman thinks they do know.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am willing to give them credit; but I see appropriations made here that ought to stop, but I suppose if they had been stopped these people then would have been fired. I did not think they were working any at the time, and I do not think yet that they have ever done much of anything. But here they go ahead with a contract at a salary. How much is this salary—$400 a month? I do not blame men for not wanting to give up that salary.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If the gentleman will permit me, does the gentleman see anything in the report, or is there any evidence anywhere to indicate that these men did not actually perform the service that they were supposed to perform? Do not the records show that they did do their duty and faithfully rendered service for which they have never been paid?

Mr. VAILE. There is no suggestion in any report or hearings that they were not doing their work.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman know anything about what work they are doing there?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Only in a general way. I assume that these men were performing their regular duties; there is certainly no evidence to the contrary.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are not doing much work on the Mexican border.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. These were engineers——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not on the Mexican border.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. And acting under instruction.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I expect they were in the office——

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I do not know why the gentleman would assume that they were not actually performing their duty in the office and in the field.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Probably doing office work. Mexican border work was not very pleasant about that time.

Mr. VAILE. They ran the lines and put the monuments up. I have seen the monuments.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The work has been going on for many, many years.

Mr. VAILE. It was revived under this commission.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is an old, old commission.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. We would be in a very unfortunate situation if the appropriations for the payment of salaries of Members of Congress were exhausted and we would have to come in here and try to get an appropriation through to make up the back salaries. That is the situation here. These men performed the services and should be paid.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If Members of Congress were only paid for the service they perform, there would be a radical falling off in the appropriation. [Laughter.]

Mr. VAILE. Shall we have to come in after five years and prove we rendered the service, or would we not be entitled to the presumption that we had rendered the service?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HENRY P. CORBIN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12005) for the relief of Henry P. Corbin.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

A. A. BRUCE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 178) authorizing an exchange of land by A. A. Bruce, of La Veta, Colo.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the transfer by A. A. Bruce to the United States of title to the following-described lands: Commencing at a point 1,920 feet south and 30 feet west of the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of section 20, township 29 south, range 68 west of the sixth principal meridian; thence west 843 feet; thence south 720 feet; thence east 80½ feet; thence in a northeasterly direction 715 feet, variation 50°; thence northeast 48 feet, variation 10°; thence northeast 309 feet, variation 50°; all in the east half of section 20, township 29 south, range 68 west of the sixth principal meridian, in Huerfano County, Colo., containing approximately 8 acres, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, upon approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, to issue a patent to A. A. Bruce for the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 6; the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and lot 1 of section 7, township 30 south, range 68 west of the sixth principal meridian: Provided, That the survey of the tract to be deeded to the United States shall be made at Government expense under the direction of the United States surveyor general.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "meridian," insert "Provided, That the patent issued shall reserve to the United States, its grantees, or lessees, all coal, oil, or other mineral deposits in the land patented as well as the rights to prospect for, mine, and remove the same."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the gentleman from Colorado a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is this exchange to be made as a courtesy to Mr. Bruce or the Government or at the instance of Mr. Bruce or the Government?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is at the instance of the Forest Service. Mr. Bruce happens to own 8 acres of good cultivated land that the Forest Service needs and wants to use as a ranger station. They want him to convey this 8 acres of good land to them, which they will use as headquarters, and they will give him in lieu thereof about 160 acres of grazing, noncultivated land. The Government gets title to its land to the center of the earth, whereas the Government only gives him a surface right and reserves the coal, oil, minerals, and so forth. This is a matter for the convenience of the Forest Service, and it is agreeable to Mr. Bruce. There is no money passing at all.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

S. S. MARKLEY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9357) for the relief of S. S. Markley.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask why this party could not acquire this land under the procedure followed for their disposition under the acts of March 3, 1911, and June 30, 1913?

Mr. FERRIS. I would be very glad to state the case to the gentleman tersely. This land was opened by the Stephens law away back in 1906. The land with other similar land was sold the next year, and sold at the highest bid. Coupled with that act was a provision that the land had to be homesteaded—lived on, and so forth. The minimum-price provision was $5 an acre. This particular 160-acre tract of land was bought by a man by the name of A. N. Ross for $1,800, and he paid one-fifth of it down, abandoned the land, never establishing residence on it or making any effort to comply with the law as to residence or payments. This man Snell Markley is a farmer. He contested the land on the charge that it was abandoned land. It was abandoned land, as above set forth. The Land Office held the land was abandoned and canceled the entry back in 1914. After that an appeal went up to the Interior Department, and it held that his application was rejected for the reason that the land was not subject to entry, even though it had been successfully contested and entry in all things conceded. Markley appealed to me to introduce a bill to give him the right to enter and buy it, notwithstanding that he was not allowed under the technical provision of the law to enter as a result of a successful contest. I did introduce it. He only asks to buy it and pay for it. He is entitled to it. The Secretary of the Interior has been recommending that this bill be passed for two or three years.

Every time I go home Markley asks me why I did not get his bill through. It has been on the Private Calendar, where we have to have unanimous consent, and I have had to explain to him that I have not been able to get to it. It affects but one man. He went to the expense of canceling it. He did a service to the Government in doing that, because it was an abandoned tract. It is a poor piece of upland, bald prairie without a stick on it, and he wants to pay for it what it was worth originally.

Mr. WALSH. Without being required to reside on it?

Mr. FERRIS. He has resided on it 8 or 10 years now. He has really earned it two times over.

Mr. WALSH. He has been on the land he is seeking to acquire?

Mr. FERRIS. That is quite the practice. When one contests a piece of abandoned land the contestant, not always, but quite generally, lives on it, and he has lived there right along. He has no title, unless Congress gives it to him.

Mr. WALSH. Is the department favorably disposed toward this?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; they have recommended it. Their recommendation is printed in the report. It ought to have been passed before.

The Committee on the Public Lands has reported it once or twice, and it is on the calendar, where you can seldom get a thing through.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to sell to S. S. Markley, within a period of 90 days from and after the passage of this act, at the original purchase price of $1,800, the southeast quarter of section 2, township 3 south, range 12 west, Indian meridian, Cotton County, Okla., and issue to him a patent therefor.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CON MURPHY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3119) for the relief of Con Murphy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

GUSTAVUS F. GALLAGHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11917) for the relief of Gustavus F. Gallagher.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOSEPH DONNELLY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15234) to correct the military record of Joseph Donnelly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice there are a large number of bills upon the calendar to correct military records, and most of them are reported by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD], who is not present. I am wondering if there is any member of the Committee on Military Affairs present who is familiar with the facts in these cases. There are one or two of them, I think, where inquiry has possibly been made.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I can say as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs that these bills are all bills that have been reported before. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD] reported them from the subcommittee to the full committee and the full committee reported them out. I was hoping that the gentleman from New York would be here to-day. Some of the bills I know a little about; some of them I reported myself some years ago. I think there is one bill here that has passed the Senate once or twice and the House once or twice. I presume the better way would be to pass them over unless the Members who are interested in the bills are present.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I have two bills here that have been pending about four years, and I know about those two. I would like to have them considered now.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think we ought to pick out any two. I would like to inquire if the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] is here, the gentleman who introduced this bill? I do not recall having seen him before, but I thought possibly he might be here to-day. In fact, I have not seen him at this session. I will object to this measure.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

SHIPOWNERS & MERCHANTS TUGBOAT CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11066) for the relief of the Shipowners & Merchants Tugboat Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. May we have it reported, Mr. Speaker, please?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Shipowners & Merchants Tugboat Co. the sum of $2,233.14 for damages to their tug, the Sea Rover, when she was run into by the quartermaster steamer General McDowell, of the United States Army, on the night of November 21, 1917, off Black Point and between Black Point and Alcatraz Island, in San Francisco Bay, Calif.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what the committee's objection was to this being reported to the court of admiralty?

Mr. EDMONDS. There is no question about this claim. The department acknowledges their fault and they repaired the boat.

Mr. BLANTON. There was no negligence on the part of this tug?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. The department agreed it was their own crew that was negligent.

Mr. BLANTON. And the Secretary of the Navy recommends the payment of this amount?

Mr. EDMONDS. The Secretary of War.

Mr. BLANTON. I meant the Secretary of War.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. The Judge Advocate's office claims it would cost $4,000 to make repairs, but they were made for $2,233.14.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again reported.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

KATHRYN WALKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2371) for the relief of Kathryn Walker.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what provision has been made for carrying out the recommendation of Secretary Lane, wherein he says:

I suggest that the relief granted be made conditional upon the land being free from valid adverse claims at the time payment is made under the terms of the bill.

Is any provision made in the bill to meet the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior in that respect?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Not that I know of.

Mr. PARRISH. The Secretary of the Interior in his report on the bill says:

In view of the fact that Mrs. Walker relinquished her entry, thus making it possible for an adverse claim to intervene, I suggest that the relief granted be made conditional upon the land being free from valid adverse claim at the time payment is made under the terms of the bill.

Is any assurance or provision made to carry out the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior in that particular?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I suppose that question will have to be thrashed out in the local land office or the General Land Office. There may be an adverse claim. I see a former husband entered the land when she relinquished it.

Mr. PARRISH. If Congress directs or authorizes the Secretary to issue a patent to this woman and there is an adverse claim to the land, will not Congress be called upon to settle with her if we are not able to deliver a clear title to the land?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I do not see that there is any valid claim on the part of the husband for going on the land.

Mr. PARRISH. The Secretary of the Interior seems to think there is danger of a valid adverse claim having already attached, and in his report on this legislation he suggests that Congress make provision for taking care of that very condition.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes; I see that.

Mr. PARRISH. It seems to me that it would be well to carry out the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior in that regard, and I see nothing in the bill that meets that condition.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. No; the bill just provides for the issuance of a patent after she complies with the law. Of course, when she is complying with the law this adverse claim may be proven, and she would not be authorized to buy the land unless she proved her claim to it. This does not give her the land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. In other words, if you will permit, the Government would not let her have title to the land unless it is clear. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill was considered before our Public Lands Committee, and it appealed to us very strongly. This woman's property was subject to being repeatedly raided by bands of outlaws, and she was heroically trying to maintain a home there, and really it was a very pathetic and tragic case that very forcibly appealed to us on behalf of this unfortunate woman.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. She was practically driven from her homestead.

Mr. PARRISH. I would suggest to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] and to the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. HERNANDEZ] that those things appeal to me, also, but it seems to me that Congress ought to carry out the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, and at least make provision that he be not directed to patent this land to her if there is an adverse claim existing at the date of the passage of the bill.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. She will have to comply with the law and prove that she has a right there before she will be allowed to pay the money for this land. So when she goes to pay for the land and prove her claim, she has got to have witnesses to prove that she is entitled to it, and everyone who has an adverse claim against her can go before the Land Office and contest her right to the land.

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman from Colorado give me his attention?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; certainly.

Mr. PARRISH. Is this the usual form of bill in cases of this kind?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes. The Interior Department will not let her have title to the land unless she complies with the regulations. That is a matter of regulation. The Federal officials will not give her a patent unless she is entitled to it.

Mr. PARRISH. I see that by this bill the Secretary is directed to patent the land to her.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; but it will be patented subject to any adverse interest, if there is any. The Government will not guarantee title. As a matter of fact, she will have to comply with the regulations, and there is no question but what the Government will be protected in the matter. The Public Lands Committee felt very keenly that any woman that had endured the hardships and terrorism that this poor woman has trying to get a home is entitled to it, at least to this land upon which she is and has been desperately trying to make a home.

Mr. PARRISH. Just one other question. Is it customary to reserve the oil and gas rights in bills of this kind?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I think that is provided for now in all patents.

Mr. PARRISH. I see there is no such reservation in this bill.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. No; but that reservation will be made in the patent when it is issued. All patents are issued in that way now.

Mr. PARRISH. I doubt if this general reservation of minerals in patents is sufficient. I think if the Government intends to retain all the mineral rights it will have to be by a special bill where we are granting the title absolutely to her as provided for in this bill. Will the gentleman accept an amendment making that reservation?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Oh, yes; surely.

Mr. PARRISH. I withdraw my reservation and offer it as an amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, this bill has no House report. The House Committee——

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; House Report 867.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What the gentleman means is that this is a Senate bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Interior Department was not asked by the committee to make a report. The only report we have is the report made to the Senate. In that report it is said that the land in question was entered by James L. Walker, who is, I assume, the husband of this claimant. Now, in the closing paragraph to which the gentleman from Texas has referred there is a request, or a suggestion, by the Secretary of the Interior for an amendment. He says:

In view of the fact that Mrs. Walker relinquished her entry, thus making it possible for an adverse claim to intervene, I suggest that the relief granted be made conditional upon the land being free from valid adverse claim at the time payment is made under the terms of the bill.

It is urged that this is unnecessary, although the suggestion comes to us from the Secretary of the Interior, who no doubt was well informed in regard to the case.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I am willing to accept an amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the bill passes as it now reads the Secretary of the Interior will have no discretion whatever. He is directed to issue a patent to the land the title to which is now in the United States. I think unless the gentleman accepts the amendment, and the bill should pass in its present form, there might be some complication.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent to Kathyrn Walker (formerly Kathryn McKnight) for the northeast quarter of section 12, township 29 south, of range 7 west, New Mexico meridian: Provided, That the said Kathryn Walker pay the lawful price of the land within six months after the approval of this act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 4, by striking out the word "Kathyrn" and inserting "Kathryn."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

In line 9, page 1, strike out the period and insert: "Provided, That the relief granted be made conditionally upon the land being free from valid adverse claims at the time the payment is made under the terms of the bill."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HERNANDEZ, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS WITH HENRY BLACKBURN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 429) to authorize an exchange of land with Henry Blackburn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

UMI

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept title to the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 19, township 39 south, range 6 west, Salt Lake meridian, and to convey in exchange therefor to Henry Blackburn, of Orderville, Utah, title to the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 30, township 39 south, range 6 west, Salt Lake meridian, and upon reconveyance the land deeded to the United States shall thereupon become part of the Sevier National Forest and subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAYS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN F. KELLY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9299) removing the charge of desertion against John F. Kelly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

JAMES R. M'GUIRE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13777) for the relief of James R. McGuire.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws James R. McGuire shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company C, Second Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, on the 30th day of November, 1864.

With the following committee amendment:

After the figures "1864," line 8, add the following: "Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

JOHN MINAHAN, ALIAS JOHN BAGLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 788) for the relief of John Minahan, alias John Bagley.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been reported by the House Committee on Military Affairs favorably four times. Once the bill passed the House, went to the Senate, was favorably reported by the Senate committee, but the calendar was not taken up before that Congress expired.

This soldier served clear through the Civil War. He enlisted when he was a boy. Along in 1864, when his service in the second enlistment expired, he reenlisted. When his second enlistment would have expired in a very short time he was granted a furlough, and going to New York City he fell in company with some former sailor comrades. They got to drinking, as seamen sometimes do, and became drunk. His friend called him a landlubber and invited him to enlist in the Navy. He thought it was no harm to do so, as he swears he had never read the Articles of War nor had they ever been read to him. He thought it was useless to go back for so short a time to his company or to wait until his time had expired, and being intoxicated he was bold about it and enlisted in the Navy. He served well in the Navy and received an honorable discharge therefrom in 1865 at the close of the war.

He was in several very important battles while in the Army—they are named in the affidavits—and he made a good record as a soldier. He lives in my home city. His property has been exhausted.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. When he was discharged in 1865, which is 55 years ago, he knew that there was pending against him a charge of desertion, and he has known that all through these long 55 years which have elapsed, and now, when there is a chance of getting a pension under the liberal pension laws lately passed, after all these years, he now comes in and asks us to remove that charge of desertion.

Mr. KINKAID. Yes, my friend; he has done without a pension a very long time. He is a very old man, and his property is gone.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's knowledge goes to what has been told him at this time?

Mr. KINKAID. No; I know him personally. I know about his property.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knew him in 1865?

Mr. KINKAID. Oh, no; not quite so long ago as that, but since 1885.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is depending upon hearsay now for these facts?

Mr. KINKAID. The evidence is abundant; read it.

Mr. BLANTON. When witnesses were all alive, when it was very easy to establish the real facts, does not the gentleman think the case would appeal more strongly if he had come in, say, 25 years ago?

Mr. KINKAID. There are no facts in controversy here; it is a clear case. He has an honorable discharge from the Navy but did not have an honorable discharge from the Army. If there ever was a meritorious case from the records, this is one.

Mr. RICKETTS. Did he have an honorable discharge when he first served in the Army?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes. His first service was a short service—no; three years—and then he reenlisted.

Mr. RICKETTS. That is all right.

Mr. KINKAID. Then he reenlisted.

Mr. BLANTON. I suppose there was some good reason for him to hide out his identity. I know of cases where persons sought to lose their identity.

Mr. KINKAID. I want to say the gentleman from Texas will take care of that case right well, I have no doubt of that. There is no such serious charge made against my constituent, and the bankers of the city and mayor recommend him very highly. He is an old man, decrepit, and without property.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS TUESDAY.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 28, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Milton O. Beebe, chaplain United States Army, offered the following prayer:

We acknowledge Thy sovereignty, our God, in all things of life. So powerful art Thou and yet so merciful that we can call upon Thy name for inspiration, guidance, and leadership. Wilt Thou deign to bless us this day. May we be gratefully conscious of Thy controlling presence and strive to preserve this, knowing that Thou wilt give the mountain-top experiences of life to those who trust in Thee.

We acknowledge Thy hand in our national life. We beg that wisdom divine shall be granted to these devoted men who lay down its policies and formulate its laws. May the spirit of Him whose birth we have just celebrated soften and shape our relations with other lands and peoples that we, a chosen people, may be grandly used of Thee in the new year that is before us. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. By special order the House will to-day proceed with the Private Calendar, commencing where it left off yesterday.

WILSON CERTAIN.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13319) to remove the charge of desertion against Wilson Certain.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in this case the claimant has never done a day's service in his whole life in behalf of his flag during war time. He was enrolled in August, 1862. His company was not mustered into service until October 13, 1862, and at that time he was sick at home, and because of his being sick with typhoid fever he was granted leave, and he never did enter the service after that, although his country was in the throes of war for four long years. Now, in his old age, he being destitute, and having a chance of getting a pension, he admits that he never found out that this record was against him until he tried to get it. He wants the record removed, and I can not blame his Congressman for trying to do all that he can for him, but I am sure that in all of these cases down deep in the heart of every Representative in this Congress there is no sympathy for a man who deserts from the Army and waits for 55 years, as some of them have, before they try to get their record as an honest citizen and as a brave soldier cleared. And I am bound to object.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will not object. He hardly states the situation correctly.

Mr. BLANTON. I am stating what The Adjutant General, P. C. Harris, reports to the committee. That is exactly what The Adjutant General has reported.

Mr. GOOD. Now the situation is this: Wilson Certain enlisted, as the gentleman has stated, in August, 1862. I happen to know him personally. He can neither read nor write——

Mr. BLANTON. Now, right there. Every old man, 80 years of age, who can neither read nor write, and who is destitute, constitutes a pitiable case and appeals to the sympathy of the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. No; he is not destitute, and that is not what I wanted to bring to the gentleman's attention. Certain enlisted in 1862 and went to Davenport, Iowa, where he was mustered into the service, and while his company was there he was stricken with typhoid fever. He was sent to his home at Marion and remained there until he thought he had been cured. He then went to St. Louis to rejoin his company after a sickness of four or five months. There he was examined by the Surgeon General, who told him he was not fit for service, and he then called on Maj. Robert Smyth, paymaster in the Army, stationed at St. Louis. Robert Smyth came from the same town that Certain came from. He told him he would procure a discharge for him. Maj. Smyth gave him his transportation and also $6 out of his own pocket to pay for his subsistence while he was going home. He went home believing he would be immediately discharged. He is an ignorant man. He did not know but what the discharge had been granted. He supposed it had been. Here are the affidavits of his neighbors that he was right at home working on the farm all the time. He told his neighbors that he was discharged, and he believed that he was discharged, and he was going about in the ordinary way of anyone. All of the time he was a weakly, sick man, suffering from the results of typhoid fever. An affidavit found among the papers of Capt. Robert Stinson, who was his captain, shows that the discharge papers had been made out, and all they needed was the signature of the captain. Those were found among the private papers, as I have said, of Robert Stinson after his death, as shown by the records in this case

I do not think this man cares about a pension. If there is anything that the gentleman wants to put on the bill by way of amendment to the effect that Certain shall not receive a pension at all, let him do so; but I do think this old man ought to have this stigma of being a deserter removed. He thought he had been discharged. Every act of his life goes to substantiate that, as the gentleman will see by the record.

But now by making an objection the gentleman from Texas will cause this man to go into his grave with the record that he was a deserter, when he was told to go home and he would be discharged, and he felt all the time that he had been discharged. If he wanted to desert, he would not have gone back to St. Louis when he got better, as the gentleman knows, and that is all shown by the records of the War Department. After he had this sickness he went back to St. Louis, and there was told by the Surgeon General and the paymaster that he would be unable to perform service for months, and so transportation was given to him to go back to his home, and he was told that he would be given a discharge. That is all there is to it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has stated certain facts, but I want to supplement them with other facts that throw light on the case. When Certain went to St. Louis six months after his company had been mustered in, and after he had recovered, as he thought, from typhoid fever, he did not report to a single Army officer who could have taken charge of him at that time. He did report to a certain paymaster, but that paymaster did not have control over him, and he reported to a certain doctor, but the doctor did not have any control over him.

Mr. GOOD. He was a surgeon——

Mr. BLANTON. He was a surgeon, but he did not have any control over him.

Mr. GOOD. Suppose the gentleman from Texas and myself were in this man's place, that we were unable to read or write, that we knew that the paymaster came from our own town, where would we have gone? We would have gone to see the paymaster, our neighbor, would we not?

Mr. BLANTON. What I want to call to the attention of the great chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of this Congress is this: After that I understand he went back to his home in 1862, and after he had farmed for some time, what prevented him from going back into the service in 1863? And what prevented him from going back into the service in 1864?

Mr. GOOD. He thought he was discharged.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but when his country was still in war what was he doing to help his country at that time, in 1863 and 1864 and in the spring of 1865, if you please? I am sure that the gentleman from Iowa will not contend that it is fair to the brave old soldiers who fought for this country in war to remove the charge of desertion against men now, after 55 years have elapsed, in order that they can get a pension from the Government.

Mr. GOOD. He thought he was discharged.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but——

Mr. GOOD. I have not the remotest doubt about that. Now, if the gentleman wants to offer an amendment that he shall be denied a pension, I shall not object to that, but I do think that the charge of desertion ought to be removed from this man. He felt that he had been discharged. Feeling that way, he naturally did not go back into the service.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will move to amend the bill to prevent a pension from being granted to him, I will help him to get it through. But I want to ask the distinguished gentleman if he would remove the charge of desertion also against every man who deserted in the Civil War and grant them a pension at this late date? You should treat them all alike.

Mr. GOOD. As the Committee on Military Affairs states in reporting this bill, it is an exceptional case. I have had men come to me and ask me to offer bills for their relief, and I will say to the gentleman that I have not seen a bill that has been reported that has the merit which this bill has. This man thought he was discharged, and every act of his life shows that he acted upon that belief.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How long did he serve?

Mr. GOOD. He did not actually serve at all. He was taken sick and did not go to the front with his company.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Then he could not get any pension. There is no money involved in it. I think that bill is right and just. He could not get a pension.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman agree to an amendment to the effect that there shall be no pension granted in this case?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. This bill only provides to give a pensionable status. You can not change a military record, and it would be absurd to pass a bill that gave a pensionable status accompanied by an amendment which took it away.

Mr. BLANTON. There are a whole lot of these cases on the docket, Mr. Speaker, and——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Vermont yield for a suggestion?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Usually in those cases a bill could provide that this party shall be deemed to have been regularly mustered in and regularly mustered out of the service.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Are you quite certain?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am quite certain.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It has been held time and time again that a War Department record, once made, can not be changed.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This does not change the record. This simply says that so far as the individual is concerned he shall be declared to have been discharged.

Mr. BLANTON. Regardless of his service, and that he would have a pensionable status.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. You could provide that it shall not be so construed as to give the soldier a pensionable status.

Mr. BLANTON. Why not frame it this way, "That no pension shall be granted in this case"?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. You can do that.

Mr. SHERWOOD. That would have the same effect.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Iowa agree to that amendment. If the gentleman will offer it, I shall not oppose it.

Mr. WALSH. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. For the present I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ALFRED E. LEWIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1300) for the relief of Alfred E. Lewis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a case for the removal of disability, is it not?

Mr. MAGEE. It is not.

Mr. BLANTON. May we not have the bill reported, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Alfred E. Lewis, who was a drummer boy in Company I, One hundred and first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered in and mustered out as a member of said company and regiment on October 1, 1861, and honorably discharged therefrom September 7, 1862: Provided, That no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a case where a young drummer boy from the gentleman's State served in the Army but was never mustered in?

Mr. MAGEE. He ran away from home. As I understand, he was somewhere between 12 and 14 years of age. His father found him at Albany and took him back home. He ran away again and joined a regiment that went out of Syracuse.

Mr. BLANTON. And actually served as a drummer boy?

Mr. MAGEE. And actually served as a drummer boy in the battles of Peach Orchard, Charles City Cross Roads, Malvern Hill, Second Bull Run, and Chantilly. He served for about a year, when he was taken sick. His father got an order from Gen. Wadsworth and brought him home. Now he is an old man. He never received any pay for his service. This bill gives him recognition.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. Certainly.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. I believe it is true that this soldier never did fully recover from his sickness, although he lived to be an old man, and is now over 70.

Mr. MAGEE. That is my understanding.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. I understand that to be the fact. I think it is a very meritorious case.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if there is any way we can prevent a recurrence of this situation in the future. This case which comes from Iowa is only one of a great many of the same kind. I have an impression in my mind that the War Department contends that there is absolutely no remedy for these cases. You can not change a record. I know of a case where a young man in the Oklahoma State Guard went down to the Mexican border. He went down and was brought home, and his captain told him he would be notified when to report for duty when his command was drafted for service in the war. He came home to a county in my district. The postmaster got the letter directing him to report for duty. This boy failed to respond to the notice to rejoin his company. After he was arrested as a deserter, his father went down and actually found the letter, and the postmaster contended that he did not know there was any such boy, although his father lived there.

I have worn out two or three pairs of shoes and a typewriter or two in trying to get that boy's record corrected. Affidavit after affidavit has been filed. The original letter has been produced, and yet that officer out there, having marked him as a deserter, did not correct the record. The officer is dead or gone and they say you can not change a military record. Here is a charge of desertion against that boy's record, when everybody knows he is not a deserter in a legal sense.

We had a case from the Civil War that the Committee on Military Affairs have turned down. A man by the name of Jim Wright enlisted and was taken sick with the measles. His company was chased out of town and he was left in the hospital before the company was finally mustered in. He went into the service, and in the battle of Rich Mountain he and a Confederate captain who knew him before the war engaged in a pistol duel, so that the captain remembered him very well. He drifted down the river and joined some other Federal troops and was captured at Dardanelle, the home of my colleague, being captured by the Confederates. That man has asked every Congressman since then to try to get his military record corrected, but has not been able to do it. I have not been able to get it corrected. A few days before Capt. McCain died he told me he remembered the incident very well. He said, "Of course Jim Wright was in the Army. I exchanged pistol shots with him in the battle of Rich Mountain." But that man has been trying ever since the Civil War to get his record corrected, and he can not.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman, who is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. What the gentleman from Arkansas has been referring to are matters of personal equation or the moral factors involved in cases of that kind, but the facts as of record do not appear to be affected. The sequence of events as recorded on the record is still true. The man was gone. He did not report. What you are seeking to get corrected is the motive or the reason why he did not report, but the record is there.

Mr. WINGO. That man should have had the charge of desertion removed from his record by correcting the record.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. You can not remove a court record. In civil affairs you do not pretend to do that. It is not contended that because of certain facts supplementary to the record you thereby remove the record itself. The record of the act is there.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; but you can let the record show the facts.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But a recording officer has no judicial right to inquire into the motive. He states the fact that happened to this man, according to his obligation under military law.

Mr. WINGO. This young man can not get any vocational training or anything else. Why? Because the charge of desertion is still against his record. Yet he went back and served, but the charge still remains against his record.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am not trying to defend that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, when I came here it was a very common practice to pass bills removing charges of desertion and correcting military records. I think you can find hundreds, if not thousands, of private laws doing that identical thing. In the course of time Gen. Ainsworth, who was in charge of the records of the War Department, concluded that it was not in the power of Congress to change a fact; that a fact was a fact, and that legislation could not change it; and he had influence enough with President Roosevelt so that President Roosevelt vetoed a bill of that character and subsequently vetoed another bill. And while I think it was not the opinion of the majority of the Members of Congress that the position of the President or of Gen. Ainsworth was correct, still there was no use in passing bills for the purpose of having veto messages come in on them, and the form of the bills were changed similar to the form before the House in this case. Of course, it always seemed to me absurd to say that Congress could not by legislation change the effect of a record, although perhaps not change the books, but declare in effect that a record was erroneous. If the record stated that a man was a deserter when he was not a deserter, it always seemed to me that it was within the power of Congress to say that the statement on the books was an erroneous statement.

Mr. WINGO. That is the idea I have in mind, to make the record state the facts.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would be just like saying that a court could never change its record.

Mr. WINGO. A court can set aside a judgment or by proper order amend the record so that it speaks the truth.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know what the attitude of the Executive would be now, but Gen. Ainsworth is not now in charge of that branch of the War Department. I do not know what their action would be.

Mr. WINGO. It is an unfortunate incident, because this young man happened to have one of his lower limbs broken and when he was arrested as a deserter they actually took that boy and moved him when the doctor said it was unsafe to do so.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If the gentleman will bring his bill in here, to right that wrong, we will pass it.

Mr. WINGO. I wish the gentleman would tell me how I can get the Committee on Military Affairs to report that bill. I am up against the same thing as in this case and I want to get around it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What is the use of our reporting bills when objection is made to the bills that we report? Every bill reported by the Military Committee for the correction of a military record is a meritorious measure for the correction of some great injustice.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman's point is well taken, so I will not take up any more time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You ask why should there not be a law to make the War Department correct some of these records where they are obviously erroneous?

I do not believe that such a law, though it be well guarded, would pass through Congress. If a bill was drafted to meet the situation, I would advocate it, for I do think that the power to correct glaring injustices or mistakes should rest with some one in the War Department.

Mr. WINGO. The officer had authority to change it, and he should have done it. I do not agree with their contention when they say that an officer who has written something can not change it subsequently. They have done that in some cases, and why can not Congress by some kind of legislation correct that kind of a situation?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the gentleman will find that all those troubles arise from what I suggested before—the attempt to read into the record legislation containing explanations. The fact is never controverted; it stands as it was originally set down in the record. You remember after the Civil War, along toward the latter part of the eighties, Congress passed blanket legislation under the terms of which a man charged with desertion had an opportunity to clear himself or take advantage of something like general amnesty.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Alfred E. Lewis, who was a drummer boy in Company I, One hundred and first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered in and mustered out as a member of said company and regiment on October 1, 1861, and honorably discharged therefrom September 7, 1862: Provided, That no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I am not in favor of wiping out charges of desertion against men who have actually deserted. However, there are many instances that have probably come to the attention of most Members on the floor, certainly to myself, where men have charges of desertion made against them when they did not desert and had no thought of desertion; in cases where they were captured by the enemy and afterwards went home sick and the war ending paid no attention to their discharge. There were cases to my personal knowledge, especially along toward the end of the war, where soldiers went to the hospital suffering from wounds or disease. The war was over in April, 1865. They found themselves in hospitals, and when they got well, the war being over, they never thought of going back to their commands or that it was necessary.

Now, I think the attitude of Congress has been that probably many years ago it was too lenient in cases involving the charge of desertion. Now I think we have gone too far the other way. There are many individual cases, like that presented this morning, that are meritorious, and I do not think we ought to bind ourselves to an invariably adverse rule which I have heard expressed on the floor. I have heard Members say in public debate that they would never permit one of these bills to pass so long as they were Members of Congress. I do not know that any present Member said that, but I remember hearing a Member of Congress who is not a Member now make that declaration.

My friend, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], refers to the record of desertion as a record of fact. Is it a fact? The entry of the record of desertion is a penalty. There is prima facie evidence that the man was not present, but perhaps it was a physical impossibility for him to be there.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is what I was trying to emphasize. The record of the bare fact shows that the man was not there, and the law shows it was his duty to be there. The reason why he is not there may be controvertible. It may not have been his fault, but the record shows that he was not there, and you can never change that fact, because it is a fact.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman from California permit me to ask the gentleman from Vermont a question?

Mr. OSBORNE. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Suppose the man had been captured by the enemy and does not show up at roll call and they make him a deserter.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. At first he is recorded as missing.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But suppose they do enter him as a deserter. Does the gentleman from Vermont mean to say that there is no way to correct that fact?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not say there is no means of correcting the supplemental record, but no way of correcting the original fact.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The original fact is the desertion, and the original fact was not there. You can remove a charge of desertion.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But you can not change the fact that when the roll was called the man did not respond, he was not there. He is marked on the roll as missing, absent without leave, or a deserter.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can change the record of the fact that he was a deserter.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. You will then pass some kind of an explanation of the reason why he was not present.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman overlooks the fact that desertion is not altogether a question of fact.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand that.

Mr. WINGO. The fact under certain circumstances—it might be that the bodily facts are the same, yet the desertion is an entry on the record of an adjudication by a superior officer, and they ought to correct the record. Some of them are so blamed lazy they do not keep the records.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. I will.

Mr. CANNON. In the thirties, while Gen. Jackson was President, they had a fuss about the United States Bank. President Jackson ordered the funds taken from the national organization and distributed to 70 or 80 banks. The Senate, after an acrimonious debate lasting for some time, censured him, and they afterwards tried to get the record expunged. It was denied time and again, but finally Benton won out and the record that was made by the Senate was surrounded by great black lines, and in black ink was written across it, "Expunged."

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And each succeeding debate through the years following only emphasized the fact that the record was there.

Mr. CANNON. It was expunged as you would expunge this record, I suppose.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes.

Mr. BEE. There are many cases of charges against Confederate soldiers for desertion. I had one case in point. A man was captured by the enemy, confined in a Federal prison, and after the war he went home. He died. His widow made application for a pension and she was confronted with the record that her husband was marked as a deserter from the army. It occurs to me that the issue to be taken in this sort of a question was the subsequent conduct of the man and whether the character of life he lived justifies the charge that he had deserted his country in time of need. I know of hundreds of instances in my country where the very best men were charged with desertion under circumstances that would so indicate, and I think that Congress ought to grant relief to this old man 60 years after the war.

Mr. OSBORNE. Of course, there were a great many desertions during the war. I do not want a single one of them to be forgiven, but where a man was a good, faithful, honest man and soldier, and he was not in intent or in fact a deserter, his record ought to be left fair and clear and a source of pride and not of shame to his posterity. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAGEE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WILSON CERTAIN.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 13319.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to the bill indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, upon the assurance that the passage of this bill will give no pensionable status to Wilson Certain, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13319) to remove the charge of desertion against Wilson Certain.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the rolls the charge of desertion against Wilson Certain, late of Company A, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge as of date of June 27, 1865.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Wilson Certain, who was a private in Company A, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 27th day of June, 1865: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has just stated that upon the assurance that the bill would carry no pension he would withdraw his objection. I simply asked the gentleman from Iowa to yield to me to say this: I do not think the pension matter is in anywise important. If an injustice has been done this man, Mr. Certain, if through all these years there stood against him a record which ought now to be removed by the Congress, and if the pension laws are just, he ought to have the benefit of those laws, and I do not regard that as an important matter. Now, upon the facts, I have not paid any attention to the facts in this case. As a general rule I have had a prejudice for many years, after becoming familiar with such matters during my service here, against these bills removing the charge of desertion. The fact is Congress passed a general act—I do not remember the date of it now—which authorized the War Department itself, where it could be shown that the soldier was actually in the service up to a certain time in May, 1865, to correct the military records; and I had really supposed that the general law covered almost every conceivable meritorious case where the charge of desertion stood against the soldier. Consequently I have always appreciated the fact that Congress could not be too careful and could not afford to be swept off its feet by pitiful and tragic cases which came before it proposing to remove the charge of desertion; and entertaining that view I want to say that the pension matter is absolutely immaterial, as I see it. If this man is entitled to have this charge of desertion removed from him, then if the pension laws of this country are just at all he is entitled to come in now and have the benefit of those laws. The question of the pension itself is a mere bagatelle.

Mr. BLANTON. The record shows that the soldier never did a day's service in his life, and the law requires for him to have had as much as 90 days; therefore he would not be pensionable.

Mr. GARRETT. If that is the case, he would get no pension; but I simply want to emphasize the fact that I do not think the pension is an important matter in this case. I think the important matter from the Government's standpoint and from the standpoint of a Government that has armies and will have armies in the future is to maintain the integrity of its records and not yield to the blandishments of tragic situations that arise in the life of individual soldiers if they have been so unfortunate as to get their records mixed up, unless in a case where an absolute injustice has been done a man in the record, in which case Congress ought to do what it can to correct it.

Mr. GOOD. That is what is claimed here.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Wilson Certain."

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WARREN V. HOWARD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11377) for the relief of Warren V. Howard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Let the bill be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Warren V. Howard shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered in as a private in Company E, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, on the 25th day of May, 1861, and to have been honorably discharged on the 1st day of June, 1865.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. BEE. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BEE. I notice this bill is reported by Mr. SANFORD, who is absent. I also notice that it is a bill introduced by the distinguished Speaker. Has he allotted to any gentleman on this floor the privilege of presenting his bill to the House? I see it is one of the Speaker's own measures.

The SPEAKER. If anybody wishes to know about the bill the Speaker will go on the floor. But the Speaker had presumed objection would be made from the previous debate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the right to object, and if this is a desertion case I regret to have to do it, but I do object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, the Speaker presumes, has read the report?

Mr. BLANTON. Unfortunately, in this case I have not. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Speaker will ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] to take the chair for a moment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I will state the facts in this case, although I do not know that they will meet the objections of the gentleman.

This Mr. Howard, when a boy of 18, enlisted as a corporal, in May, 1861. He served a year, when he was taken prisoner. In three months he was exchanged. This brought him to the year 1862, and he went back to his company. In a few months after that he was granted a furlough. When the furlough expired he missed the train that was to take him back to his regiment, and as the captain of his company was notoriously harsh and unreasonable, the boy was frightened and did not go back. This the evidence shows. But he did not desert in the sense of not wishing to serve, for he went to the West and enlisted as a teamster in Tennessee and served there all through the war as a teamster in the Army. Then in 1865, under the proclamation of President Lincoln, he went back to his company; but there he was so treated by the officer that he was not put on the rolls again, and he was not even given rations, blankets, or allowed a place in which to sleep.

Mr. BEE. Back to the same company?

Mr. GILLETT. Back to the same company. The report says:

> In response to his daily inquiries he was told the papers in his case had not arrived, and being thus willfully misled by his company officers into thinking that he would not be allowed to return under the President's proclamation, the soldier returned to his home.

Then the report says:

> But it is not believed that his action in so doing under the above circumstances, after the close of the war, can be considered willful desertion.

Those are the facts.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this kind of a case appeals strongly to me, for the reason that during the recent war a young man in Jones County, Tex., in my district, had leave to come from Quantico to Washington; when returning he missed his train and was told that if he went back to Quantico he would be placed in the guardhouse and probably kept there for six or eight months. Being a young, ignorant country boy, and being alarmed, he pulled out and walked to Texas. He was about a month and a half getting to his home. As soon as he reached home his father brought him back here and delivered him at Quantico, with his feet so swollen that it took several months for him to get back into shape. That kind of a case appeals to me, and I shall not object to this. [Applause.]

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question concerning the proviso that is put on bills such as these. I notice in the bill that was just passed, Calendar No. 196, it provides that no bounty, pay, pension, or emolument held to have accrued prior to the passage of the act shall be allowed.

I notice in the next bill, soon to come before the House, a committee amendment provides that "no pension, bounty, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act." I notice also in the next bill to follow it specifically provides that no pension, bounty, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act. In this bill the proviso says that no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act. Now, does the fact that the word "pension" is omitted from this bill and is included in the other bills and in the committee amendment mean that the soldier who is benefited by this act, if put on the rolls, will be permitted to draw a back pension from the time of his service in the sixties up to this time? In other words, the other bills specifically exclude the idea of pension, and in not eliminating that idea from it I think might be an implied direction, at least to the Pension Commissioner, to allow a pension for this particular soldier, and that is the only purpose I have for asking the question. I would be glad to know the significance of that.

Mr. GILLETT. I am free to say, if the gentleman's question is addressed to me, that I do not know what it does give. Possibly some member of the Committee on Military Affairs may know.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If that was left out of the bill, it is certainly an error. There was none of these bills reported out with the understanding that that should be in the bill.

Mr. PARRISH. This bill says that no bounty, pay, or allowance accrued shall be allowed, but the next bill has an amendment which provides that no pension, bounty, or allowance shall accrue, and the one that was just passed has the same provision, and the one following has the word "pension" in the proviso.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARRISH. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The insertion of the word "pension" there makes no difference one way or another. You can not get a pension before it is applied for. You can not apply for a pension before the bill becomes a law.

Mr. RUCKER. Suppose he has heretofore made application for a pension?

Mr. PARRISH. For all we know, he may have had an application there for 40 years.

Mr. BEE. If he is not a deserter, why should he not be entitled to a pension?

Mr. PARRISH. If you are going to grant it in this case, let us do it in the others.

Mr. GILLETT. I am perfectly willing to have the word "pension" inserted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The word "pension" has been inserted in the past. This form grew up and people kept sticking more words in it.

Mr. PARRISH. In order that the bill may conform with the other bills, I suggest that an amendment be made. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Warren V. Howard shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered in as a private in Company E, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, on the 25th day of May, 1861, and to have been honorably discharged on the 1st day of June, 1865.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

> Line 8, after the figures "1865," insert:
> "Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. After the word "bounty," in line 8, page 1, insert the word "pension."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. PARRISH to the committee amendment: In line 8, after the word "bounty," insert the word "pension."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to oppose the amendment, but I want to make this suggestion. I like the idea of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. If for a long period of years there has been an injustice done to a man who has rendered service to his country, why should Congress deny to that man a pension? As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests, let him present his bill or proper application and have an opportunity to have it determined whether or not he is entitled to a pension under the law. I do not like the idea of excluding men simply because some one, somehow, somewhere, 50 years ago, put a charge of desertion against him.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. I do not think this would preclude the drawing of a pension later on.

Mr. BEE. That would be the effect of it, would it not?

Mr. PARRISH. No; I think not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VAILE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next one.

THOMAS E. PHILIPS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11695) for the relief of Thomas E. Philips.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill reported?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Thomas E. Philips shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a corporal in Company B, Sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on the 20th day of October, 1863: Provided, That no pension, bounty, or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, beginning with line 3, page 1, down to and including line 9, and insert: "That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Thomas E. Philips, who was a corporal in Company B, Sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a corporal of said company and regiment on the 20th day of October, 1863: Provided, That no pension, bounty, or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOHN W. BAGGOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 740) for the relief of John W. Baggott.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask if this is a case where there was an act of desertion?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is stated in the report that while this soldier is not specifically charged with desertion, there is a confusion of the record. They have not been able under the law to give him an honorable discharge. He served over three years and was then assigned, according to his statement, to special guard work, and was out of the record for about six months on that guard work. He was reported by the department to have been sent to Camp Dennison with a list of other men listed for discharge because of the expiration of their term of service, and apparently he was on another list at the same time with those who were not to be discharged.

Mr. BLANTON. After this six months' guard work did he afterwards do service?

Mr. HAWLEY. About that time the war ended and he returned to Camp Dennison, and was allowed by his company officer to return to his home. While he was there the company to which he was attached was ordered south, but he was not advised of this order, and the company was mustered out in his absence. The department says he was not specifically charged with desertion; apparently on account of the confusion of the record.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the department made any recommendation in this case?

Mr. HAWLEY. No further than that which I have just read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any law conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, John W. Baggott, who was a member of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States: Provided, That, other than as set forth above, no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to or by reason of the passage of this act.

With committee amendments, as follows:

In line 9, after the word "That," strike out "other than as set forth above." In lines 9 and 10 strike out "pension" and "other emolument" and insert "allowances." In the same line, after the word "shall," strike out the word "accrue" and insert "be held as accrued," and in line 11 strike out "or by reason of," so that the proviso shall read: "Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

GEORGE F. REID.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1949) to correct the military record of George F. Reid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California whether this was a case of actual desertion?

Mr. RAKER. It is not. The man got leave for two days and was sick, and when he got back he always thought he had an honorable discharge, which he carried with him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, George F. Reid, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company D, Battalion ———, Third Regiment California Volunteer Infantry, and as a private of Company C, Battalion ———, Third Regiment California Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, beginning with line 3 on page 1 down to and including line 12 on page 1, and insert: "That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, George F. Reid, who was a private in Company D, Battalion , Third Regiment California Volunteer Infantry, and as a private of Company C, Battalion , Third Regiment California Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said companies: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of George F. Reid."

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALFRED REBSAMEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5194) to correct the military record of Alfred Rebsamen.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if this is a case of actual desertion.

Mr. LITTLE. It is not. This young man was with his regiment at Cairo, Ill., and he had five brothers in the Army. One of them was sick in the hospital, and they let this boy go up there for a few days. His brother died, and he took him home and buried him. Then he went back to Cairo, but the regiment in the meantime had moved to Memphis. He followed them and struck them at Green Lake, Tex.

Mr. BLANTON. And served up until the close of the war?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws, Alfred Rebsamen, late of Company A, Fifty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment, and to grant him an honorable discharge: Provided, That no pension, pay, bounty, or allowances shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "regiment" strike out the words "and to grant him an honorable discharge."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Alfred Rebsamen."

On motion of Mr. LITTLE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GEORGE LE CLEAR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1299) for the relief of George LeClear.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the case where the man was a member of the State militia that was turned over to the Federal authorities, and after his term of enlistment in the State militia had elapsed just walked off without saying anything to anybody?

Mr. MAGEE. No; I will state what the official records show.

Mr. WALSH. I think that is the substance of the official record, is it not?

Mr. MAGEE. I do not think so. The official record shows that George LeClear was mustered into service May 21, 1861, as a private of Company I, Twenty-sixth New York Infantry, to serve three months.

The Twenty-sixth New York Infantry was one of 38 regiments that were raised under the provisions of an act of the Legislature of New York, dated April 16, 1861, which authorized certain officials of the State, acting as a military board, to cause to be enrolled and mustered into the service of the State for two years, unless sooner discharged, volunteers not to exceed 30,000 men, and directed that the men so enrolled and mustered into the State service should be liable at all times to be turned over to the service of the United States on the order of the governor as a part of the militia of the State, upon the requisition of the President of the United States. The services of these regiments were offered by the State authorities to the General Government on May 1, 1861, for two years' service, but through a mistake on the part of the mustering officer 6 of these 38 regiments, including the Twenty-sixth New York Infantry, to which LeClear belonged, were mustered into the service in May, 1861, for three months only. He served three months and longer and assumed that he had served the entire period for which he enlisted, and after a spell of sickness went home. Then afterwards he reenlisted and served——

Mr. WALSH. And served three years, but he walked off and never got a discharge from anybody, because he knew that the three months had elapsed.

Mr. MAGEE. He enlisted for only three months.

Mr. WALSH. That is all very true. He enlisted for three months; but even so, soldiers who enlist for three months or six months or a year are not supposed to pick up their traps and go home at the end of that period without getting a discharge from the proper authority. It would seem to me that unless we are to adopt the policy that whenever men have actually deserted or absented themselves without authority, if they can show that subsequently they have rejoined the service in some other branch or in the same branch and rendered valuable military service, that in such cases there shall be no charge of desertion entered against them, unless we are to adopt that policy it would seem to me that this man really did desert.

Mr. MAGEE. No; I do not agree with the gentleman, because a great many of the boys went out under Lincoln's call for three months' service. They acted in good faith and supposed that when they had served three months they were entirely free to go back to their homes. There have been a great many of those cases. This boy enlisted for three months and served his term and afterward reenlisted, performed distinguished service, and received an honorable discharge.

This bill passed the House once before, and this is the first instance that I have ever heard of anybody objecting either to this bill or to this kind of a bill.

Mr. WALSH. That has got nothing to do with the case.

Mr. MAGEE. The merits are with the soldier.

Mr. WALSH. These are, as I understand, the facts: This soldier did render three years valiant service with another command.

Mr. MAGEE. I do not remember the exact length of the service, but it was quite a long period of service, and he received an honorable discharge from the second enlistment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I ask the gentleman, would it be good policy on the part of the Government to allow men to shift about in the Army until they found an enlistment that suited them?

Mr. MAGEE. That is not this case, I will say to the distinguished gentleman from Vermont. When the war first opened this man enlisted for three months. Six of the 38 regiments were mustered into the United States service for three months only.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The evidence seems to be cumulative as the years went on. They understand it more definitely now than they did years ago.

Mr. MAGEE. As I understand, this man did not know there was any charge against him until recently.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I have no precise information, but it seems to me that this man can understand the facts better at 60 years of age than he could as a younger man, or else somebody has been pawing around to find something new.

Mr. MAGEE. I wish to say, in reference to the gentleman's inference, that I know this man. He is a very decent man, a highly respected man, and he was fairly well to do. He did not get any pension from the Government. He did not, as I understand, for many years apply for any. He did not know, as I understand, that there was anything against his record until he got to be about 70 years of age, and when he felt the need therefor he made an application for a pension. Then he discovered it. He might have applied years before, but he did not apply for a pension because he could work and did not need it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield? Was this man a member of the Grand Army during the years following the war?

Mr. MAGEE. I do not know anything about the organizations to which he may have belonged.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not want to disabuse my friend of the good opinion he has of his client, but the fact is I have known of many instances where, through some absentmindedness the soldier did not join the Grand Army until they had grown so old that there was a forgetfulness and a pitiable failure of memory.

Mr. MAGEE. The Committee on Military Affairs reported out this bill, and I presume the gentleman, who is a member of that committee, has been familiar with the facts, because that committee has reported the bill out at least three times.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I noticed that in a bill passed a few moments ago, introduced on the same day, that there was entered in it a provision that no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument should be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act. I notice that in this bill the word "pension" is omitted. It seems to me like the bills ought to be uniform and that the Commissioner of Pensions ought to be given some instruction to grant a pension or exclude it. Would the gentleman be willing to include the word "pension" in this bill, as long as it is in other bills?

Mr. MAGEE. I have no objection to the word "pension" being placed in the bill as suggested.

Mr. PARRISH. I withdraw my reservation of an objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRAMTON). The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, George LeClear, who was a private in Company I, Twenty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 30th day of April, 1862: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH], after the word "bounty," in line 10, I move to insert the word "pension."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "bounty," insert the word "pension" and a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAGEE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATHAN MANZER.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6301) for the relief of Nathan Manzer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, permit me to say that I agree with a good deal that has been said to-day with regard to leniency in these matters. I know that I have had many cases similar to some of these we have been passing upon to-day. The young man, probably the first time away from home, homesick, discouraged, and fearful of Army discipline, has without any intention really of deserting the colors, technically deserted. While the benefit will inure to old men, and as such we judge the matter, in fact, we are dealing with the acts of boys without thought or discretion. I feel that in these cases we should look back upon the conduct of these young men with a good deal of forgiveness, now that the war is over. This case before us I have looked into casually, it is true, and it seems to me to be one of the most meritorious cases that has been presented. The young man fought for two years in some of the most important battles of the Civil War. He was wounded, and while in the hospital thought an arrangement had been made by which he was not to go back until he became well. As a matter of fact, he did not become well until after the war was over, and it seems to me to be one of the most deserving cases that has come to us since I have been in Congress.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Mr. Speaker, the case is even stronger than that. He was wounded in the Battle of the Wilderness in May, 1864, after having fought, as the gentleman said, in seven great battles of the war. He was furloughed home as a wounded man. At the end of his furlough he had typhoid fever, and his doctor attempted to get an extension of his furlough, and reported to him that the Army doctor said that he did not need an extension of his furlough. He continued ill until the close of the war, never becoming able to go back into the service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers or any branch thereof, Nathan Manzer shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company G, One hundred and twenty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and on the 26th day of September, 1864.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "the pension" and insert the word "any," and in the same line after the word "laws" strike out "and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers or any branch thereof" and insert "conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers."

Line 7, strike out "shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of" and insert "who was a private in."

Page 1, line 11, strike out "and on the 26th day of September, 1864" and insert "shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 26th day of September, 1864: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL of California, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN CHICK.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 567) for the relief of John Chick.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, John Chick, late of Company K, Third Regiment United States Artillery, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 2d day of August, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act, and no pay nor bounty shall become due or payable by virtue thereof.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURROUGHS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

J. W. LA BARE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 742) for the relief of J. W. La Bare.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whether or not this is a case of actual desertion?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the soldier served one period of service of three years and eight days and was discharged. He reenlisted and was assigned to the Infantry, when he had enlisted to go into the Artillery or Cavalry. He left the place where he was assigned to the Infantry and went over to another place, enlisted in another part of the country in the Cavalry, and served until mustered out, eight months and eight days——

Mr. BLANTON. During the period for which he is charged as a deserter he was actually serving in another branch of the service? Is that the case?

Mr. HAWLEY. Part of the time. It took some time to go from one place to the other.

Mr. BLANTON. How much time?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think about two months. He had three years and eight days' actual service in the Army.

Mr. BLANTON. And he was in the actual service of the country when the war closed?

Mr. HAWLEY. So I understand, up to the date of the end of his enlistment.

Mr. BLANTON. And received an honorable discharge at that time?

Mr. HAWLEY. He received one the first time, but not the last time.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did not he receive one the last time?

Mr. HAWLEY. Because they held that he could not transfer, could not enlist in one regiment and transfer himself to another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, J. W. La Bare, late of Company B, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 23d day of February, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 10, after the word "no," strike out the word "pension" and insert "bounty, pay, or allowance."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the amendment. The word "pension" might be proper to remain. I am not altogether in sympathy in all cases which have occurred this morning where the word "pension" has been inserted, but if it is to be inserted in any of the cases which have been brought before the House and passed it should be allowed to remain in this case. The committee amendment involves the striking out of the word "pension" and the addition of other words, and I ask for a division of the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois can offer the amendment he has in mind after this amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And put back the word "pension"?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Would it be in order for a substitute to be offered on the floor to the committee amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would be in order to offer a substitute amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I will offer a substitute amendment to the committee amendment to follow the word "pension" rather than precede it, so that it would still leave the word "pension" in the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Better ask unanimous consent; that will be easier.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be so corrected by the Clerk, that the committee amendment will follow the word "pension" and leave it in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the correction as stated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment as corrected.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "pension," in line 10, insert "bounty, pay, or allowance."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN R. SMITH.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1030) to correct the military record of John R. Smith, deceased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado whether or not this is a case of actual desertion?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no; of course not. I know that. I know the people.

Mr. BLANTON. What was there about the matter that prevented the constituent of the gentleman from Colorado from getting a pension?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, he was sick up to the close of the war and could not return to his company. His sick-leave furlough expired on the 15th of March, 1865. He served over two years; I think about two and a half years. He was sick all the time, and he was not able to get back to his company before he was mustered out in July of that year.

There are affidavits from relatives and neighbors as to his condition, and that he was home before the expiration of his last furlough and when his company was mustered out.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any recommendation from the War Department in this case?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; it is the ordinary favorable report that they make, giving all the facts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John R. Smith, deceased, who was a private in Company G, Twenty-third Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment in July, 1865.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

After the figures "1865," in line 9, insert "Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment by inserting after the word "no" the word "pension."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHINDBLOM: Line 10, after the word "no," insert the word "pension."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill for the relief of John R. Smith, deceased."

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN HEALY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2278) for the relief of John Healy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know who has this bill in charge.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No one has this bill in charge. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I presumed that some Senator would ask some Representative from his State to look after it. Is the gentleman familiar with the facts in this case?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Fairly so.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this a case of actual desertion?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is not, as I understand it.

Mr. BLANTON. What are the facts?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The facts are that this man served in the war for four years. He thought he had a furlough, and he went home. His mother was sick. There were five children, I think, in the family, of which he was the oldest, and he thought it was his duty to stay there. He had served four years. The war was over, and he stayed at home and took care of the family.

Mr. BLANTON. And he did not go home on a furlough until after the close of the war?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws John Healy shall be hereafter held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in Company H, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, on August 15, 1865: Provided, That no bounty, pension, or other emoluments shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

W. C. STEWART (H. R. 11945) AND HENRY P. CORBIN (H. R. 12005).

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I have waited for the consideration of those bills correcting military records, and I ask unanimous consent to return to two bills which were objected to on yesterday in order that they may be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to return to two bills that were considered yesterday.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. No. 180 on the Private Calendar and No. 181 on the same calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, are those bills for the correction of military records?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. No; they are not. They are bills to pay for the services of two engineers on the Mexican border. These bills were discussed yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time to take up for consideration two bills on the calendar to which objections were made on yesterday. These are bills Nos. 179 and 180, for the relief of Mr. Stewart and Mr. Corbin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the two bills for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11945) for the relief of W. C. Stewart.
A bill (H. R. 12005) for the relief of Henry P. Corbin.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There was considerable debate on these two bills yesterday, as I recall it?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. There was considerable debate, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] thought that under the circumstances it was his duty to object to their consideration. In discussing this matter with him this morning, he did not know but there might be a possibility of the claimants' recovering through the Court of Claims, and he said he would not object if I sought to have them reconsidered at this time.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So the gentleman who objected yesterday is now willing to withdraw his objection?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes, sir; he is.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, we are making pretty good progress on the calendar. Why can not the gentleman wait until we finish?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I will say that the only reason I am asking for this at this time is that I have some very pressing duties elsewhere. I stayed here yesterday and have stayed here to-day, and neglected some departmental work that I had to do. I thought if it would not inconvenience any of the Members here I should like to have the bills considered at this time, so that I could get away and attend to some other duties.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate the gentleman is very busy and has a good deal of work to attend to. He has no assurance that in recalling these bills at this time there will not be some more protracted discussion, and information which led to the objection being withdrawn might have to be given to some other Members.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I appreciate what the gentleman from Massachusetts says, and if he would prefer postponing this request until later in the calendar, I will defer to his wish.

Mr. WALSH. I will withdraw the objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. We will return to No. 180 on the calendar, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11945) for the relief of W. C. Stewart.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W. C. Stewart, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $285, the said W. C. Stewart being an assistant engineer, working under the direction and supervision of the Department of State on the International Boundary Commission between the United States and Mexico, the same being for services rendered as such assistant engineer for the months of March and April, 1915.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VAILE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill referred to on the Private Calendar.

HENRY P. CORBIN.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12005) for the relief of Henry P. Corbin.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Henry P. Corbin, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,973.30, the said Henry P. Corbin being consulting engineer, working under the direction and supervision of the Department of State on the International Boundary Commission between the United States and Mexico, the same being for services rendered as such consulting engineer for the years 1914, 1915, and 1916.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TIMBERLAKE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DULUTH, WINNIPEG & PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill in order on the Private Calendar.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12441) for the appropriation of $25 to reimburse the Duluth, Winnipeg & Pacific Railroad for customs fine No. 368, erroneously imposed by the collector of customs at Duluth, Minn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is an innovation to see a bill seeking to appropriate so small an amount as $25, and I hardly feel like objecting; but I notice the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CARSS] is out of the Chamber just now, and I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. BEE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that request. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CARSS] not being present ought not to be a reason for passing the bill over. I have made an investigation of the bill myself.

Mr. BLANTON. It was reported by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR], and I do not see him here; and usually from the experience that I gained while a member of the Committee on Claims it is a fact that outside of the man who introduces the bill and the man who reports it very few of the other members of the committee know anything about it.

Mr. BEE. The gentleman ought to be acquainted with the present committee.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If this bill is not passed at this time the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CARSS] will not probably have another opportunity to present the case.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, he will be here at least in January and February and in March, and probably later on to-day before we adjourn. The gentleman now is probably out at lunch.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I know; but if the bill goes over to the next Congress he will not be here.

Mr. BLANTON. There will be somebody else here from Minnesota. It is pretty hard to knock a Minnesota man out. They get knocked out, and then they come back.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is a very simple bill. A certain amount of flour was shipped in bond from Canada to New York. The waybill said the shipment was 620 bags. When it reached New York, however, it was found to be only 600 bags, and since then it has been ascertained from the office at Winnipeg from which it was shipped that 600 was the correct amount, but when 620 were called for in New York a fine was imposed of $25. It was clearly a mistake, and it has been recognized by the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Duluth, Winnipeg & Pacific Railway, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25, and such sum is hereby appropriated to reimburse the Duluth, Winnipeg & Pacific Railway for custom fine No. 368 erroneously imposed by the collector of customs at Duluth, Minn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the title. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform with the body of the act.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

ORVILLE M. MYERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11416) for the relief of Orville M. Myers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a claim for loss of some money in a registered letter which in one of the military camps was delivered to a soldier other than the addressee, who took the money out of the letter and later was discharged and his whereabouts are unknown. I was wondering whether this is the proper way to handle matters of this sort, whether the Government should be required to pay——

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. This bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. ROMJUE], who is detained at home by sickness. I understand this is the only way that a recovery can be had. The party who was properly authorized to receive the registered letter received it—a mail orderly—and he rifled the letter and stole its contents and was discharged. The Post Office Department is not responsible, because the letter was properly delivered to a man authorized to receive it.

Mr. WALSH. Was not the man who opened that letter and took the money out of it violating the postal laws?

Mr. RUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Why does not the Post Office Department get after him?

Mr. RUCKER. I am not advised, but I presume the man has been prosecuted. If he has not been, he ought to be.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know whether or not the Post Office Department made any attempt to recover the $35?

Mr. RUCKER. There is a letter in the report here from the Third Assistant Postmaster General, and that letter, it seems, gives all the information necessary on the subject.

Mr. WALSH. It is stated that no relief can be afforded by the Post Office Department, as the regulations do not permit of the payment of indemnities for the loss or rifling of a registered article when such loss or rifling occurred outside the Postal Service and after proper delivery.

Mr. RUCKER. The man who received the registered letter was properly authorized to receive the mail for the soldiers at the camp post office. This is the only way in which the beneficiary can get the money.

Mr. EDMONDS. When the letter was rifled it was in the hands of the military authorities through their properly authorized representative to take it to the camp. The military authorities should have collected the money from the man who took it, but the man has been discharged, and there is no way of collecting the money.

Mr. WALSH. I assume that there are hundreds, if not thousands, of such cases as this. I have heard of two or three other similar cases, and I am wondering if this is the proper way to afford relief, to pass individual acts of Congress in each case.

Mr. EDMONDS. There is no other way, unless you want to pass a general bill.

Mr. WALSH. Is the distinguished chairman of this great committee satisfied that the postal laws do not permit recovery in cases such as this?

Mr. EDMONDS. Undoubtedly. The military authorities required the mail to be delivered to their authorized carrier, and it was so delivered to him. Then the mail was in the possession of the military authorities, and while in their possession their man rifled the letter and took the money.

Mr. WALSH. No; the mail was in the possession of the Post Office Department. This was a registered letter.

Mr. EDMONDS. But under the regulations of the military camp they required all letters to be delivered to their post office in the camp. As a matter of fact, we passed a bill here providing that the letters sent to soldiers in France were all turned over to the military authorities after they reached a certain point, and that was the case here.

Mr. WALSH. That was on account of the congestion of the mails, because of which the Post Office Department was not able to handle them, and we passed an act to clear up that congestion; but here is the case of a registered letter. Now, can any private soldier or corporal or sergeant or orderly in the camp secure possession of a registered letter addressed to another individual?

Mr. EDMONDS. It is a part of the evidence in this case that the letter was forwarded by the Post Office Department to the camp for distribution, and the military authorities did the distributing. Now, the letter was delivered properly by the Post Office Department to the military authorities, and the man who was properly authorized to receive the mail while carrying it to the camp rifled this registered letter and secured $35.

Mr. WALSH. But this was a registered letter.

Mr. EDMONDS. True, it was a registered letter, but it was in the possession of the military authorities for delivery to the man to whom it was sent, and it never reached him.

Mr. WALSH. This is the first case of this sort. I imagine it will be followed by quite a number of others. I have grave doubts as to whether we ought to start out on this kind of legislation, but I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRAMTON). If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $35 to Orville M. Myers, of Kirksville, Mo., to reimburse him in full for the loss of that amount of currency stolen from a registered letter sent by the said Orville M. Myers to Ray R. Frogge, Camp Funston, Kans.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. RUCKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MARY FLINN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10570) for the relief of Mary Flinn.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the bill be reported, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill, if there be no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to Mary Flinn, by reason of the death of her nephew, John J. Gilligan, who was drowned while serving on one of the Government boats at Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$1,000" and insert "$55 per month for a period of one year."

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I do not know upon what theory this compensation is awarded to this woman by the report of the committee. This man was working up there on a Government boat and presumably fell overboard and was drowned. Why is any compensation due anybody?

Mr. EDMONDS. Because he was engaged in a dangerous occupation and fell overboard in the course of his employment.

Mr. WALSH. Does that appear from the record?

Mr. EDMONDS. Evidently so.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BEE. As I understand it, if this young man had been the son of Mary Flinn, she would be entitled to this compensation under the United States compensation law. Therefore the question arises whether the woman stands in loco parentis to the boy. If so, she is entitled to recover. The committee struck out the lump sum of $1,000 and inserted $55 a month for one year to make it the amount of compensation fixed by law that would have accrued to her had this boy been her son. The testimony before the committee developed the fact that this boy had been raised by this woman since he was 16 months old. That was the idea the committee had in fixing the amount.

Mr. WALSH. She bases her claim on the ground that they did not have any life preservers or life rafts or any railing on the launch.

Mr. BEE. It was unquestionably an accident. The only question, I take it, is, if this had been the son of Mary Flinn, would she not have been entitled under the United States compensation law to $55 a month?

Mr. WALSH. Upon the record in this case does the gentleman contend that she would have been entitled to it?

Mr. BEE. Yes. Commissioner Keegan, in his recommendation, states:

It has been the experience of the commission that a lump-sum settlement is not, as a general rule, desirable, but that payments over an extended period are of greater advantage to the average individual. It is therefore suggested that your bill be amended so as to extend the provisions of the present law to this case and have the aunt placed in the same category as the father or mother, inasmuch as it appears that she had the care and custody of the decedent from the time he was 16 months of age.

The theory upon which the committee proceeded was that had this been Mary Flinn's son who was drowned accidentally under the circumstances, the United States Compensation Board would have taken care of this woman to the extent of $55 a month for a year, and that he standing in the same relation to the woman, because of the fact that she had cared for him during his infancy, she is entitled to this relief.

Mr. WALSH. Further reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims how it is in this case that the committee reported $55 a month for a period of one year when in other cases the committee has reported in a lump sum? Is it because the commissioner recommended it?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; the commissioner recommended it. He says:

It has been the experience of the commission that a lump-sum settlement is not, as a general rule, desirable, but that payments over an extended period are of greater advantage to the average individual. It is therefore suggested that your bill be amended so as to extend the provisions of the present law to this case and have the aunt placed in the same category as the father or mother, inasmuch as it appears that she had the care and custody of the decedent from the time he was 16 months of age.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. Was the young man contributing anything to the support of this woman?

Mr. EDMONDS. It does not appear in the testimony.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does it appear in evidence whether or not she had any other source of income?

Mr. EDMONDS. He was living with this woman at the time of his death, so he was probably contributing something, but that has nothing to do with this case. If this woman had been his mother, she would have gotten this amount of money, but owing to the fact that she was an aunt and not a mother the commission could not pay her anything.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is one of the points I can not understand, how we have the right to extend the law to cover a relative.

Mr. EDMONDS. Because this woman stood in the position of a parent to him, and has since he was 16 months old.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is then a question whether or not he contributed to the support of this woman. There are many men who are supported by their relatives and who do not contribute to the relative's support.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is true, but the committee thought that having lived with the aunt, and was raised by her, he contributed to her support. The gentleman knows that in the war relief we made it apply to those who stood in the position of loco parentis.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that this person is not entitled to the relief sought to be granted, and I object.

RESIGNATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

DECEMBER 27, 1920.

HON. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I beg to inform you that I have this day transmitted to the governor of the State of New York my resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the third district of New York, to be effective December 30, 1920.

With great respect, I am,
Very truly, yours,
JOHN MACCRATE.

A. S. ROSENTHAL CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6098) for the relief of A. S. Rosenthal Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will ask that that bill be passed.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be passed over.

H. L. M'FARLIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7053) for the relief of H. L. McFarlin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Let the bill be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to H. L. McFarlin, of the county of Pulaski and the State of Arkansas, the sum of $25,824.77 in full compensation for loss and damage suffered by the said H. L. McFarlin under his contract for transporting United States mail at Little Rock, Ark.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not aware of the ground of the gentleman's objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, to be fair with the gentleman I think I should state that I have in mind especially one mail contractor in my State who gave a bond of $3,000 to carry the mail over a certain route in Palo Pinto County. The war came on and he carried the mail a year and a half at a loss of about $3,000. He sent to the Postmaster General his report that it would ruin him to continue, and deposited the full amount of his bond and asked to be released, and the Postmaster General laughed at him and told him to go on and carry the mail or he would hire some one regardless of the price. That is typical of hundreds of such cases all over the country.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the gentleman think that the Postmaster General did right in that matter?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not; but he claims that he can not do anything because Congress will not properly authorize him and will not give him the money. Now, to pay $25,000 to a man in Arkansas for carrying the mail and leaving all these other poor mail contractors out in the cold who have lost money during the war with empty pockets, I do not think it fair.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is exactly what he did not do. We passed a law to reimburse the people by reason of the enhanced cost of carrying out contracts. It so happens that this man's contract expired prior to the passage of that act. Hundreds of people are compensated, and simply because his contract expired one month before the law became effective the gentleman would not want to deny him the same relief that everybody else received.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Arkansas is correct with every contract except mail contracts. I do not think he can cite a case where the Post Office Department during the latter period of the war has relieved any poor mail contractor from the extra burdens brought on by reason of the war. I will vote with the gentleman from Arkansas for any bill before the House to grant relief to every one of them.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say in connection with what the gentleman from Texas has just stated that the Congress enacted a law authorizing the Postmaster General to adjust all contracts that were entered into prior to the war and up to a certain date after the war began, and that all adjustments have been made under that act.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, my colleague from Texas [Mr. PARRISH] can give the gentleman several instances in his district. My colleague [Mr. JONES] can give the gentleman several cases pending in his district. I can give the gentleman numbers in mine, and I assume that that condition exists all over the United States, and I assume the Postmaster General would not be harsher to contractors in my district and other districts in Texas than he would in other districts in the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. I merely wanted the gentleman to know that there was a law providing the very relief which under that law the Postmaster General said has been granted in every case that is justified.

Mr. BLANTON. The Irishman whose attorney told him, "Pat, you can not be put in jail for that," remarked to him as he looked through the bars, "Faith, but you see me here looking out at you through the bars." The Postmaster General may have some kind of a law, but he is not operating under it, and there is no relief being given to contractors in my district at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the gentleman will pardon me, they are giving them to other people. I do not know anything about Texas, but I am sorry if he is being unfair to you; but here is a man whose losses were incurred under exactly similar circumstances that Congress granted the Postmaster General the power to correct. I know he has been compensating them. This man lost $25,000 by reason of the fact that a cantonment was built at Little Rock and he had that additional burden of handling the mail for that city and taking care of the letters. The committee unanimously reported out a bill for his relief. The gentleman from Texas can stand here and object to it and deny this man the needed relief and let him go into bankruptcy, but I am sure he is not going to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. I reassert I would be glad to vote for a bill that would grant general relief and put all such people on an equality whereby all such claims can be adjusted according to a general law.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is one, if the gentleman will pardon me, and if the Postmaster General will not recognize it as it applies to Texas——

Mr. BLANTON. But the present law does not seem to give your man any relief and does not give my man any relief.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Because the gentleman's man has been denied justice, does the gentleman think it helps him to deny to all of the people in this Government? These cases are not going to be taken care of by a general law, because it is already on the statute books. If there is a case of a hardship and injustice being done somebody in Texas, introduce a bill and this excellent Committee on Claims will pass it out for the gentleman from Texas and the Congress will see that justice is done to the contractor in Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Arkansas admits there is a case down in Arkansas where a mail contractor is about to be bankrupt because he is not paid $25,000 due him by the Government. If every Member of Congress had such a case in his district—I have in mine—maybe we can get some relief for all of them.

Mr. CARAWAY. There are just two cases, that in the gentleman's district and this one.

Mr. BLANTON. I can not agree with the gentleman on that, because I know a good many of my colleagues——

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not know why Texas should be dealt so harshly with when it is so ably represented. For that politeness, I think the gentleman should withdraw his objection, because it is the only compliment I have any remembrance of having paid the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Texas is impervious to being so subsidized.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 324, BUDGET SYSTEM.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that for the remainder of this session there may be carried at a proper place on the daily calendar the additional clause of Rule XX and the additional clause of Rule XXI provided for in House resolution 324 as the same passed the House the last session of Congress.

I will state, if I may, Mr. Speaker, that this is a part of the so-called budget rule. We are shortly to have appropriation bills come in. Some, in fact, have been already before us, and I apprehend that under this new rule there will be built up a considerable body of parliamentary law. The rule is not now available in the regular Manual of the House, no manual having been issued since the adoption of House resolution 324. It will be in the pocket manual, which I am informed may be expected almost any day. If the Members generally are like myself, they do not carry the pocket manual very much. It is rather too bulky a document to carry in the pocket, and it occurs to me it would be very desirable to have this rule where it may be easy of access during the days when formative precedents, if I may so term them, are to be formed, and it is for that reason I prefer the request.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I could not understand just what the gentleman indicated. Is it the amendment to Rule XX and Rule XXI?

Mr. GARRETT. To Rule XX and Rule XXI. I do not think it is necessary to include the first part of House resolution 324, which is very long——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is the amendment to Rule XX and Rule XXI?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Where does the gentleman think will be the proper place on the calendar?

Mr. GARRETT. Well, I have been considering that. We have carried for many years the call of committees rule, the Calendar Wednesday rule, the unanimous-consent rule, and the Discharge Calendar rule. Those are properly placed upon the calendar because they refer specifically and directly to the calendar.

It seems to me that perhaps it would be proper for these clauses to come in just after "unfinished business," just preceding the call of committees rule. However, I merely suggest that.

Mr. WALSH. Why does the gentleman specify just those two amendments?

Mr. GARRETT. The other amendments would not have to do with any new parliamentary questions, as I conceive. The resolution merely related, in the first instance, to the size of the Appropriations Committee, and then to the reference of bills to several committees. I do not think there is any room for much new controversy about their construction or the construction of any part of them, and I have omitted them simply to save space on the calendar. I have no objection, of course, to the complete resolution going in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk will report the next bill on the Private Calendar.

STEVENS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11656) for the relief of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. May we have it reported, Mr. Speaker?
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.
The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the trustees of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $45,750, being the sum paid to the United States January 28, 1870, as a collateral inheritance tax upon the bequest which provided for the establishment of said institute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——
Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.
Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman why this inheritance tax as to this institution should be refunded after a period of 50 years?
Mr. LEHLBACH. It is the only instance in the history of our country, as far as it is ascertainable, where a substantial sum has been taken from a bequest to an educational institution in the shape of a collateral inheritance tax that has not been returned. It is simply carrying out the declared and settled policy of the country in reference to inheritances of educational institutions.
Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman cite what other educational institutions have had such sums of money returned to them?
Mr. LEHLBACH. This is under the act of July 1, 1862. This tax was paid on January 28, 1870. On July 14, 1870, the act was amended, exempting all bequests to literary, educational, or charitable institutions, or institutions of that character, and such taxes as had not been paid were remitted. At the same time there were passed two special acts to take care of such instances as were then known. Under those laws Vassar College and a number of other institutions received the benefit.
Mr. BLANTON. Not by acts of Congress.
Mr. LEHLBACH. By acts of Congress.
Mr. BLANTON. When?
Mr. LEHLBACH. In 1870.
Mr. BLANTON. This institution is a flourishing one?
Mr. LEHLBACH. It is no more flourishing than any institution that is not conducted for profit, but it is recognized as one of the best, and probably without a superior as a mechanical engineering school, in the country.
Mr. BLANTON. And it has continued to exist for 45 years without this money?
Mr. LEHLBACH. It has existed largely as such institutions do, through the support of its alumni and through subscriptions and through endowments from various sources, as have Harvard, Yale, and other institutions continued to exist.
Mr. BLANTON. It is a private institution that charges so much to each individual who goes there?
Mr. LEHLBACH. It charges a small fraction of the actual cost of educating an individual, as a tuition fee. Of course, the tuition fee is nowhere near the cost of education.
Mr. BLANTON. Taking into consideration the various sums of money that have been bequeathed to it, the actual cost, less the——
Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. By act of Congress of 1898 Congress refunded $889,000 to such institutions as Williams College and Harvard University and others.
Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman in charge of this bill is a lawyer, and he knows of the principle of law with regard to laches and that an institution, as well as an individual, can sometimes sleep on its rights.
Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman will read the report, he will see that the endeavors of the Stevens Institution of Technology to get what other institutions have received under the policy of not taxing educational institutions have been unfortunate, but measures of this character have been pending since the Forty-fourth Congress.
Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman realizes that his Government right to-day is facing a probable deficit of over $3,000,000,000 and that his party, in charge of the legislation of this country, is going to have to resort to every legitimate means to bring in revenue to meet the expenses of this Government, and instead of paying back we are going to have to take from.
Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not believe any Congress, no matter how hard pressed the country might be for money, would seek to obtain that revenue by taxing educational institutions.
Mr. BLANTON. They ought not to pay claims 50 years old.
Mr. LEHLBACH. It is not the fault of the Stevens Institute that it has not been able to get this money before. This bill has been pending in some form or other since the Forty-fourth Congress, and it has never been subjected to an adverse report.
Mr. BLANTON. From the fact that it has been pending so long and has not passed, is not that quite a strong eulogy in favor of the various Congresses that have convened and sat during those years?
Mr. LEHLBACH. It may not be. It may be a series of fortuitous circumstances.
Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

ROBERT EDWARD COX.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12469) to authorize the award of a medal of honor to Chief Gunner Robert Edward Cox, United States Navy.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?
There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.
The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to award a medal of honor to Chief Gunner Robert Edward Cox, United States Navy, in recognition of the extraordinary heroism he displayed on the occasion of the accident which occurred in the after turret of the U. S. S. Missouri on April 13, 1904.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.
Mr. WALSH. I was otherwise engaged or I would probably have objected to the consideration of this measure. Can somebody give a reason why it has not been acted upon prior to this time? Can anybody explain why this has been so long delayed, since April 13, 1904?
Mr. PETERS. I do not think I can tell why the matter was delayed. It has only recently come to my attention, but I find it has so much merit that I think the gentleman will not object.
Mr. WALSH. I understand it was a very heroic act that this man performed, but I can not just understand why the department is without power to make an award of some sort of a medal and give some sort of recognition to this man.
Mr. PETERS. It seems that prior to 1915 by law a medal of honor was not permitted to be given to an officer in the Navy. In that year I think the law was changed, but it was not made retroactive. This incident happened in 1904, when an explosion was imminent on a battleship, or a warship, and this man by extraordinary heroism, in connection with two other men, went into a magazine of 12-inch ammunition on a warship, which was already burning, where the powder was burning, and put out the fire. President Roosevelt recommended a medal of honor for him at that time, but it could not be granted for the reason stated. This man was an acting gunner. The other two who were with him did each receive a medal, and he was equally entitled to it with them on the recommendation of President Roosevelt. This is to enable that man to receive a medal that he should have received long ago.
Mr. WALSH. Well, that was just because of a technical interpretation of the law as construed by the department.
Mr. PETERS. It was technical, but I think very likely it was correct.
Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think it was correct?
Mr. PETERS. I have no reason to think otherwise.
Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that because a man was acting gunner, under a fair and just construction of the law—an acting gunner, not a regular gunner—he should be deprived of the honor of receiving a medal, while two seamen who acted with him at the time, who were involved in the same incident, should receive it?
Mr. PETERS. If I construed the law I might have construed it as the gentleman apparently would, that he was not, literally speaking, an officer; but inasmuch as the department has construed it otherwise, on the advice of its legal authority, no doubt, it remains for us to grant a remedy.
Mr. WALSH. You get the queerest constructions of law out of the Navy Department that come from any department of the Government. They stand on technicalities that do not exist, sometimes.
Mr. PETERS. That may be true; but that is no reason why this meritorious measure should not receive favorable consideration at this time.
Mr. WALSH. I know; but Congress passes a law and supposes that common sense will be used in its construction, and we do not expect to be bothered every high water to take care of special cases that do not appeal to some official or solicitor down in the Navy Department. I agree with the gentleman from Maine that this acting gunner performed a very heroic act and that he is entitled to recognition, and I will concede further that in view of the peculiar circumstances in the case this seems to be the only remedy. But it ought not to have occurred this way. It seems to me that the law which was passed by Congress could have been interpreted reasonably to cover this case.

Mr. PETERS. I partially agree with the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to have the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. PETERS. I partially agree with the gentleman that perhaps the construction given by the department was too technical; but even conceding that, it means a hardship to deprive this man of the medal. I have no further interest in this matter than the gentleman has, but I think it is but just and reasonable and proper that the case should be reopened.

Mr. WALSH. Sometimes they reopen questions of law down in the other departments, and sometimes in the Navy Department. Sometimes they get a solicitor or clerk who, by some fortunate circumstance, happens to possess some common sense in writing an opinion, and sometimes he is permitted to obtain a position at his desk and write an opinion which would appeal to sensible people. I hope some such calamity will overtake the department later on.

Mr. PETERS. The gentleman, having given his castigation to the Navy Department, will permit, I hope, justice to be done to this hero.

Mr. WALSH. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PETERS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the close of the remarks to be made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to-morrow, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] be given an hour in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that at the close of the remarks of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, to-morrow, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] may have an hour in which to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MARTINA SENA, LUIS E. ARMIJO, AND MARIA BACA DE ROMERO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3218) for the relief of Martina Sena, Luis E. Armijo, and Maria Baca de Romero.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to convey by patent to Martina Sena or her heirs such tract of land as may be found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for agriculture and not needed for public purposes, not to exceed 147 acres, formerly occupied by Margarito Romero, which tract is situated upon the South Fork of Gallinas Creek, in the county of San Miguel, State of New Mexico, and to convey by patent to Luis E. Armijo or his heirs such tract of land as may be found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for agriculture and not needed for public purposes, not to exceed 56 acres, occupied and improved by said Luis E. Armijo and his predecessors in interest and possession, which tract is situated upon the North Fork of Gallinas Creek, in the county of San Miguel, State of New Mexico, and to convey by patent to Maria Baca de Romero or her heirs such tract of land as may be found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for agriculture and not needed for public purposes, not to exceed 190 acres, occupied and improved by said Maria Baca de Romero and her predecessors in interest and possession, which tract is situated on the North Fork of Gallinas Creek, in the county of San Miguel, State of New Mexico: Provided, That the lands shall first be surveyed by an employee of the Forest Service under the direction of the United States surveyor general in accordance with the act of August 10, 1912 (37 Stats., 269), entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913": Provided further, That the expenses of said surveys shall be paid from available funds appropriated for the survey of homesteads on national forests under the act of August 10, 1912, aforesaid, and the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year in which the survey is made.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HERNANDEZ, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

J. HENRY MILLER (INC.).

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13911) for the relief of J. Henry Miller (Inc.).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy and the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to give credit to J. Henry Miller (Inc.), of Baltimore, Md., for the actual cost incurred by the said contractor for repeated travel of workers employed in the construction of an addition to Bancroft Hall and upon other public-works contracts at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., in accordance with modified provision of the contract as authorized by the Navy Department, in the full and final settlement of all accounts and claims for damages incident to said contracts between the Navy Department and said J. Henry Miller (Inc.); and there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the requisite amount to cover the sum found due under the terms of this act, which sum shall not exceed $31,870.32: Provided, That final settlement with said contractor shall not be made until all matters of damages and claims between the Navy Department and said contractor are adjusted and included in such settlement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this seems to be rather an unusual claim. It is for $31,000, and arises out of work in enlarging Bancroft Hall.

As I understand the report, the claim is based partially upon a cost-plus percentage on transportation to and from the site of the necessary skilled men for the economical and efficient prosecution of the work.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state to my friend from Massachusetts that J. Henry Miller (Inc.), of Baltimore, had a contract to do some million dollars' worth of work at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md. The contract was a cost-plus contract. The contract permitted the travel expenses of employees to and from the job, but it did not include continual travel day by day.

The contract was entered into in July, 1917. A year later, in April, 1918, the war was on and it was impossible to get sufficient carpenters, steam fitters, engineers, bricklayers, and mechanics of all kinds to properly carry on the various contracts under way at the Naval Academy. There was no authority in the contract that would justify the contractor in paying for repeated travel back and forth between Baltimore and Annapolis. He had a cost-plus contract, and it would have meant no financial loss to him to have delayed the job. He could have done so at the expense of the Government, but the Government instructed him to employ men in Baltimore or anywhere else and to pay their fare back and forth, doing as it did all over the United States, from San Francisco to New York and from New Orleans to Detroit. They paid for repeated travel wherever it was good business to do so. This contractor was directed by the Secretary of the Navy to employ men in Baltimore, and to pay their repeated travel back and forth, down to the job in the morning and back to their homes in the evening. It was not unusual. It was the regular thing that was done throughout the war. His bills were audited by the Navy Department. He expended for this repeated travel, after April, 1918, about $31,000. Ordinarily, as was done all over the United States, contractors doing work on a 10 per cent cost-plus contract got a bonus over and above their expenditures, and he would have been entitled, under the same rule, to $3,100 additional. There is no question about this money having been actually expended by Miller, the contractor. The department desires to reimburse him. It made a supplemental agreement with him and it agreed that his bill was a just and proper one, but the Comptroller of the Treasury said that there was no consideration leaning to the Government, and therefore the money could not be legally paid. My bill authorizes the department to make a just settlement with Miller along the lines of its—the department's—desires. Surely Congress will be fair and reasonable in this instance.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does not the gentleman think it is a pretty good thing to have a comptroller to take care of the Treasury when the department was willing to spend the public money in that way?

Mr. BRITTEN. I agree that the comptroller has done much good in many instances, but where the Secretary of the Navy directs a contractor to expend certain money, and he spends it under that direction, does not the gentleman think the Government in all honesty ought to return that money to the contractor? There is no profit to him in it. There is no 10 per cent in this. This bill is to pay a bill that has been carefully audited for an expenditure made under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for round-trip tickets to and from Baltimore for these men who were necessary at Annapolis, and not obtainable in any other way. It was the Government's concern to see that they were employed.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It was not a specific direction to this contractor to spend the money in that way.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; it was a specific direction to spend the money in this way. That direction was given to him in April, 1918. The direction of the Secretary of the Navy was to get men from Baltimore and pay their travel to and from the work.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In the first place the Secretary of the Navy probably was lacking in authority to issue any such order.

Mr. BRITTEN. No; there are many cases just like this where the Secretary of the Navy has made specific agreements or supplemental agreements with contractors and where the comptroller has held that no consideration leaned to the Government and therefore that the money could not be paid and the contractor reimbursed for his expenditure. We never passed an omnibus-settlement bill for the relief of contractors in the Navy Department, as was done for the Army contractors under the Dent bill. We gave the War Department a sort of blanket allowance to settle with contractors for all kinds of contracts, whether verbal or written, whether signed by the contractor and the Government or not, but that has not been done for the Navy.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have never seen this order or the opinion of the comptroller, but I venture to say that the comptroller questioned the authority of the Secretary of the Navy to make any such order, or any such contract, and that he was without authority to do it, and I feel quite certain that the comptroller's opinion is in line with the law as well as with the proper care of the Treasury.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, yes, the gentleman is entirely correct, but here is the situation: The contractor had agreed under a cost-plus contract to build certain buildings for the Navy Department at Annapolis. During the war neither he nor the Government could get employees, so the Navy Department directed him to get them anywhere and to pay their traveling expenses to and from the job. The comptroller holds that the Government got nothing additional for the railroad fares.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think if we can stop the heads of departments from doing that sort of thing by refusing to pay this kind of a bill we will be doing a good thing for the Treasury of the United States, and I shall object.

Mr. BRITTEN. There was no way of knowing how the comptroller was going to rule. There are many contracts entered into, signed by the chiefs of bureaus, the Secretary of the Navy, and by the contractor himself which to all intents and purposes were valid and legal, but after the work was completed the comptroller held that many of these contracts were illegal. Would the gentleman seriously refuse to pay on them?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If I understand this correctly, the Navy Department did enter into a contract with these men to pay for the continuous travel.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And the contract was made and signed.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The contractor expended the money, and after he had expended the money and done the work the Comptroller of the Treasury decided that the contract was illegal. We have got the benefit of it. It is a very convenient thing sometimes if a man is able to get the result of a contract and then pull out on the ground that he is under age, or something of that sort. That is what this is. We are in the position of pleading the baby act if we do not pay this bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not think so. The Government has been hit in the head so many times by contractors during the war, has got so little from the average contractor, that I think when an opportunity of this kind comes we ought to take advantage of it, and I am going to take advantage of this.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no criticism to make on any action which the gentleman sees fit to take.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the gentleman for information. The gentleman stated that this was a cost-plus contract amounting to a million dollars.

Mr. BRITTEN. More than a million dollars.

Mr. McKENZIE. It was a 10 per cent cost-plus contract. What I want to ask is whether the gentleman has gone into the thing carefully enough to ascertain whether or not these contractors charged up their full 10 per cent on the entire cost including this $31,000? Did they get $3,000—a percentage on the whole bill, including the transportation?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; they did not get the $3,000. The report clearly indicates that it was never included in the bill. If my friend from Kansas is going to object to this bill, I would like to offer a suggestion. The bill appropriates $31,870.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is not that much money in the Treasury now, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. I think we can meet the desire of the contractor and probably the desire of the Navy Department by striking out the appropriation and just leave the bill in the nature of a credit to the contractor, so that his contract may be adjusted. I will explain to the gentleman why I would like to have that done.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois did not take the threat of the gentleman from Kansas seriously, did he?

Mr. BRITTEN. I did; I assume that the gentleman from Kansas is going to object to the bill. I think we can satisfy the desire of the department and the contractor by merely herein authorizing a credit to the contractor in the final adjustment of the contract.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would not consent to agree to that without seeing the opinion of the comptroller. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MYRON C. BOND ET AL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9843) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Myron C. Bond, Guy M. Claflin, and Edwin A. Wells.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Myron C. Bond the sum of $48.04, to Guy M. Claflin the sum of $499.79, and to Edwin A. Wells $116.67, all of said persons having been officers in the Thirty-first Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and which said sums were reported by the Court of Claims, and said sums are hereby appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CRAMTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAVIS CONSTRUCTION CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2861) for the relief of the Davis Construction Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ANNA BLUMENTHAL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8142) for the relief of Anna Blumenthal.

Mr. WALSH. Let the bill be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Anna Blumenthal the sum of $601.64 as reimbursement for moneys expended in the repair of her automobile, and loss of the use of the same, by reason of a collision with an automobile truck owned and operated by the Post Office Department, said collision being the direct result of careless driving on the part of the chauffeur operating the said Post Office Department automobile truck.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$601.64" and insert "$276.64."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask how much of this $600 is for the use of the automobile which she owns?

Mr. EDMONDS. The amendment calls for $296, the actual cost of the repairs, and there is no contingent damages of any kind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was again read for amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EMILY J. MULLINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7333) for the relief of Emily J. Mullins.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

UMI

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman from Kentucky here?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask him a question. What is the nature of this bill?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this is the nature of the bill: A number of men were on a strike at Stearns, Ky., and the Stearns Lumber & Coal Co. went into the Federal court for the eastern district of Kentucky and secured an injunction against the strikers, and some of the leaders of the strike sent word to Federal Judge Cochran, it is claimed, and told him to go to hell, or words to that effect. At least, they ignored the injunction, it was charged.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the way they usually do.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. An attachment was issued by Judge Cochran for a number of these men, and the United States marshal could not go, or did not go, and they got word to the Department of Justice here in Washington, and it authorized a posse to go there and arrest these men, and the marshal called upon one of his deputies, John C. Mullins, who was a very fearless man, to go and make the arrest, and Mr. Mullins went to Stearns, Ky., with some other men and undertook to make the arrest, and they shot Mullins to death out of the house where they were lodged. Mrs. Emily Mullins is the widow of that deputy marshal. Mullins was poor and left four small children, all dependent upon him for support, and we ask $1,000 for their relief.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserved the right to object for the purpose of calling attention to the necessity emphasized by just such cases as this for the Congress of the United States to make strike organizations responsible and liable to the country for their lawless acts. This is just one of many such cases that are repeatedly occurring all over the United States of strike organizations refusing to obey the law, and when the courts come in and try to administer the law, just as in this case, they tell the court to go to hell, and when the law officers get there and try to enforce the law they are shot down in cold murder, and then the Congress is called upon to pay their widows money to take care of them. I hope that the Congress of the United States some day will wake up and force all strike organizations to incorporate and become responsible for their lawless acts.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman means the widows of those shot down?

Mr. BLANTON. I mean the widows of those shot down.

Mr. EDMONDS. I thought the gentleman said laboring men.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Emily J. Mullins, of Mount Vernon, Rockcastle County, Ky., widow of John C. Mullins, late field deputy United States marshal in and for the eastern district of Kentucky, who, while in the discharge of his duties as such, in an attempt to arrest, on a legal and duly authorized warrant of arrest for that purpose, Berry Simpson and others, was shot, killed, and murdered by the said Berry Simpson and others on the 25th day of December, 1908, the sum of $1,000, on account of the murder and death of her said husband.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask my friend from Texas how Congress could force these parties to incorporate, these parties who pay no attention to the law and care nothing about the law?

Mr. BLANTON. That is exactly what I have been trying to get Congress to do, to make them pay attention to the law, and if they were forced to incorporate and made responsible for lawless acts we would not have to pay the widow of an officer $1,000, as then he would not be killed in cold blood by strikers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My friend from Texas would not only have to suspend the Constitution, but work upon the minds of these men and force them to incorporate.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we have forced national banks to incorporate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But they pay some attention to the law.

Mr. BLANTON. We force the big steel combines to incorporate and become responsible for their acts; we force almost every financial enterprise to incorporate and become responsible for its acts. The gentleman from Iowa knows how to do it and his party knows how to do it, if his party had the guts to do it, but they do not do it. They have been asleep here all these years and have been intimidated by these organizations. The country is expecting much of the gentleman's party if his party will do its duty; that is what we want them to do.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, if the gentleman expects anything from the Republican Party from the past he expects it will obey the law and the Constitution, and will not get up a raft of things that could not possibly be done under the law nor under the Constitution. The Republican Party is the party of constitutional government, always has been, and always will be. The gentleman is talking about something that is an idle dream and could not possibly be carried out at all.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Texas has enough bills pending in the committees here that if the gentleman from Iowa will get his party to pass them the United States would be protected from all such lawless occurrences, and lawless men will then cease to tell the courts to go to hell.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas always has a number of bills pending here, but seldom has any passed.

Mr. BLANTON. That is due to the failure of the Republican Party to do its duty.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO. It makes very little difference to the widow of the man whether he was killed in going out there to arrest a man as a criminal under the present law or whether he was killed in going out to try to enforce a law which the gentleman wants to enact now and have them obey——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very little difference.

Mr. WINGO. I can not catch the distinction; it may be too subtle for me to do it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the impression might be created by the gentleman from Texas that the United Mine Workers authorized or directed this killing. I do not think that is true at all; in fact, as I understand it, the organization did not authorize it, but condemned it, and it was done without the wish or desire of the organization. In fact, I do not know that any of the parties were members of the mine workers or that the strike was conducted by them or that it had anything to do with the strike.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield there? Has he ever heard of the United Mine Workers taking action against the men whom the gentleman assumes were lawless and putting them out of the organization?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I think they are all out.

Mr. BLANTON. I never heard of any acts of that kind.

FREDERICK W. COBB.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 412) to transfer Frederick W. Cobb from the list of chief machinists, United States Navy, temporary lieutenant, United States Navy, to the list of chief pay clerks, United States Navy, temporary lieutenant, Pay Corps, United States Navy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I object.

FRED C. KONRAD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1447) to correct the naval record of Fred C. Konrad.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to review the naval record of Fred C. Konrad, late first-class electrician, United States Navy, and grant him an honorable disability discharge.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PETERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MATTHEW M'DONALD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1743) for the relief of Matthew McDonald.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill. I notice it provides, first, that in the administration of the pension laws this man shall be held and considered as honorably discharged. Then comes the proviso that no pension shall be allowed and no back pay and bounty shall be paid because of the enactment of this legislation. If those are not two conflicting provisions then I do not understand the English language. It is not the usual form of saying that no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of the act, but it says that no pension shall be allowed because of the enactment of this legislation, when the whole purpose of it is to allow a pension.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I am not responsible for the drawing of the bill. I see the inconsistencies that have been pointed out by the gentleman, and I suppose the object of the bill is to allow this man a pension. It is a very meritorious claim, and I think it should be allowed, and if that is the object of the bill I will move an amendment changing it.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a Senate bill. I introduced a similar bill in the House. I may say, however, it is not the purpose of the bill to grant a pension at all. I see the inconsistency of this language in the Senate bill, but the purpose is not to grant a pension at all but to correct a record. Has the gentleman read the report? May I state briefly the facts of the case?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no objection to the passage of the bill, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HOCH. If there is no objection, I will not take the time of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Matthew McDonald shall be hereafter held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States Navy October 20, 1863: Provided, That no pension shall be allowed and no back pay and bounty shall be paid because of the enactment of this legislation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PETERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GERTRUDE LUSTIG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3381) for the relief of Gertrude Lustig.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have it reported?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MRS. WILLIAM B. RYAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13600) for the relief of Mrs. William B. Ryan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. William B. Ryan, the sum of $50, the amount lost by her by the theft of same from registered mails sent to her son, Pvt. William E. Ryan, Battery D, Sixteenth Field Artillery.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD P. M'CULLOUGH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10520) for the relief of Richard P. McCullough.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ELLEN M. WILLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7535) for the relief of Ellen M. Willey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE], who is unavoidably detained, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 2707 be substituted in lieu of the House bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Where is the Senate bill?

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Here it is.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman will have to have an engrossed copy of the Senate bill.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. It is certified by the Secretary. That is all I know.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. When the Senate passes a bill the Clerk certifies one copy of the bill, and that comes over here. That practice has to be followed whenever any action is taken upon the bill. These printed copies of the Senate bill do not amount to anything.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed the Senate bill has come to the House and was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I shall not object to the other request.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the object is to make this a law, and the Senate has passed a similar bill.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Has passed it twice, I understand.

Mr. GARNER. Would it not facilitate matters to let it go over for a few moments until the Clerk can get the bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned.

I. C. JOHNSON, JR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3215) for the relief of I. C. Johnson, jr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I object.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserve his objection, or does he intend to persist in it? If he does, I do not want to detain the House or to consume its time, because there are other Members here who have bills which may not be objected to. I am not a dog in the manger, and——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have always objected to these bills, I believe, and probably will continue to object to them.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I thought that possibly if the gentleman would look into the matter a little further he would not object to it. He has objected to such bills in the past, but I thought he might have had a change of heart.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; while I am not devoted to the present administration of the Navy, on the whole I think it is far better than it would be if administered by Congress.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am sure the Navy Department will appreciate that eulogy on the part of the gentleman from Illinois, who has always been such a good (?) friend of the Navy Department.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They will appreciate it, but there is nothing that they can give me or that I want.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ANTHONY SULIK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12337) to provide for the relief of Anthony Sulik, former sergeant, United States Marine Corps.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Anthony Sulik, former sergeant, United States Marine Corps, be, and he is hereby, relieved from all disabilities, including loss of pay and allowances attendant upon the dishonorable discharge received by him pursuant to the sentence of an Army general court-martial, published in General Court-Martial Order No. 103, Second Division, Expeditionary Forces, France, dated October 20, 1918, while detached for duty with the Army by order of the President, the amount of pay and allowances forfeited by him pursuant to said court-martial sentence to be reimbursed to him from the current appropriation for "Pay, Marine Corps": Provided, That the service of the said Anthony Sulik shall be computed as though he had served continuously in the Marine Corps from the 16th day of November, 1914, to the date of his release as a general court-martial prisoner, and as though he had been honorably discharged on that date: Provided further, That he shall be granted all the rights, benefits, privileges, allowances, and gratuities to which he would have been entitled had he not been dishonorably discharged pursuant to the said sentence.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PETERS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CAPT. BENJAMIN S. BERRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12080) to advance Capt. Benjamin S. Berry to the permanent rank of major.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in the bill, but I ask that in my time the Clerk may read the report from the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have read the report.

Mr. CRAMTON. But I would be very glad to have that report in the RECORD, not for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois but for the information of the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know; but I do not intend that it shall go into the RECORD at this time. If the gentleman knows anything about this case that is not in the report, I shall be glad to be influenced by it.

Mr. PETERS. If I can give the gentleman any information, I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. For the present, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to be recognized for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am going to make a point of order in a few minutes. If the gentleman wants to take up the time of the House in that way, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARNER. I hope the gentleman will withhold that a moment. A few moments ago it was agreed to defer consideration of a certain bill until the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODS] could have an opportunity to call up a Senate bill in its stead. Since he took it upon himself to have it passed over temporarily a few moments ago, will not the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. CRAMTON. The report I desire to present relates facts showing that this man is entitled to more consideration than any other man on whose case we have acted. I think the RECORD will be enriched by the recital of the facts here set forth. We are asked to deal with all kinds of graft. We have had here to-day the case of a bounty jumper, and——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has made the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count.

ADJOURNMENT.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 29, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Earle Wilfley, pastor of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is Thy name through all the earth. In spite of the madness of men and the disease of sin in our blood Thy name is still excellent in all the earth.

Upon this day's session of the House we pray Thy blessing, the guidance of Thy spirit, and the honor that comes from Thee. Give us clear understanding, high purpose, courage, and love of truth. Keep us from error, from prejudice, and from passion, and give us the vision of a prophet and the service even of a Savior.

We pray this morning upon the beloved Chaplain of the House, now ill, Thy choice blessing, and upon his dear companion, loved by all. We pray, O Lord, that Thou wilt deal tenderly with them this morning.

And we would likewise pray, dear Father, Thy blessing upon each Member of this House, upon their families from whom they are separated this Christmas time and approaching New Year, and wilt Thou watch between them while they are absent from one another.

We thank Thee, dear Father, this morning, for the long and honorable service of certain Members of this House, and we pray Thy blessing upon them because of their long faithfulness; especially upon him who this day begins an unparalleled record, a record of service unequaled in the history of this House. And may those words spoken in his honor carry with them Thy blessing, and in the eyes of all men may faithful service be honored.

And now guide us this day, keep us in Thy love, and at last own us for even a better service. And unto Thee shall be all the praise, our God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

JOSEPH G. CANNON.

The SPEAKER. By special order to-day the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] will be allowed one hour to address the House. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, a long political career has some disagreeable features in it, as I found out on the 2d day of November. [Laughter.] But it also has some very pleasant ones, and the one that we are about to celebrate to-day is exceedingly pleasant. To me it is a labor of love.

On this day Mr. Speaker CANNON has served longer in Congress than any other man in the history of the Republic. [Applause.] I doubt exceedingly whether his record will be duplicated in the next hundred and odd years of the Government's existence. When he was 80 years old we went through a magnificent oratorical performance here, with high-class speeches, that I have always called the apotheosis of Uncle Joe. That was a remarkable performance, too.

When JOSEPH G. CANNON was born on the battle field of Guilford Court House, a victory for Lord Cornwallis, the fruits of which were reaped by Gen. Greene, we did not have any railroads, any telegraphs, any telephones, any sewing machines, any flying machines, any repeating rifles, and a thousand and one things that we consider necessary to our modern civilization. Some newspaper man stated not long ago that Uncle Joe came into the House in 1863. Of course, that missed the mark by several years. Up until this time Senator Morrill, of Vermont, has held the record for length of congressional service, although to make out his 43 years 9 months and 25 days you have to add his 12 years in the House to his 31 years 9 months and 25 days in the Senate.

Missouri was the first State that ever sent a man here for 30 consecutive years to the Senate, and it remains to this day one of the two States that has done that. When Senator Morrill began his thirty-first year I said it was to take the credit away from Missouri. I supposed that was intended to be humorous. Anyhow, to-day Mr. Speaker CANNON has served 43 years 9 months and 26 days. Senator Morrill died on the 28th day of December and this is the 29th.

It is a great honor to the House that Mr. Speaker CANNON has served all of his time in Congress in the House. [Applause.] No man in the House now can expect to serve that long, or ever will, I think. When we celebrated Uncle Joe's eightieth birthday I laid down the conditions on which a man could serve as long as he had. In the first place, the politics of his district must remain the same. In the second place, he must be a man of force and ability. In the third place, he must remain as faithful as the North Star. I said that Uncle Joe filled those conditions. I think yet that he does. He has lived nearly 85 years; not simply breathed 85 years, but every hour and day that he has been on earth has been active. [Applause.] We all rejoice in the fact that he is still in fine fettle physically and mentally. [Applause.] His strength is not abated. He discharges the duties of a Congressman now as faithfully as any young Member of the House does, and a great deal more faithfully than most of them do. [Laughter and applause.] That is one reason why he has stayed here so long. The principal reason is that with two short seasons of mental aberration his district has remained faithful to him. Twice it did not remain faithful to the Republican Party, but that is neither here nor there.

Getting beat for Congress does not hurt a man who is fit to come to Congress. I think that is an absolute fact. [Applause.] Anyhow, he came back from his first rustication right in the prime of life and went back at the head of the Appropriations Committee and did splendid work. I am certain that I express the hope and wish of every Member of the House that he will live for years to come and stay in the House as a great public institution. [Applause.]

I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG]. [Applause.]

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this day marks an important event in the political history of our country. As the speaker who has just preceded me said, until yesterday the record for length of service in the Congress of the United States was held by the late Justin Smith Morrill, of Vermont, whose combined service in the House and Senate covered a period of 43 years 9 months and 25 days. To-day that remarkable record of congressional service is surpassed by one day by our distinguished and beloved colleague, the Hon. JOSEPH GURNEY CANNON, of Illinois. An event of such great national interest calls for more than passing mention, and I ask the indulgence of the House to-day while I briefly set forth a few of the marvelous changes that have taken place in our national life since Mr. CANNON first became a Member of this body. In the interest of conciseness and accuracy I have deemed it advisable to reduce my remarks to writing.

JOSEPH G. CANNON was first elected in 1872 as a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the fourteenth district of Illinois, and he became a Member of this body on March 4, 1873, the same day on which Ulysses S. Grant was inaugurated for the second time as President of the United States.

How far we have traveled since that day may be understood when we recall that at the time of Mr. CANNON's first election the population of the United States was estimated at 40,596,000 as against 106,000,000 to-day; there were 37 States then as against 48 to-day; the public wealth, which was estimated at something over $30,000,000,000 in 1872, is placed at more than $300,000,000,000 now; the bank deposits, which then amounted to $1,250,000,000, have grown to $32,700,000,000, and our railroad service has expanded from 66,000 miles of track in operation to more than 268,000 miles. That, in brief, summarizes the vast strides that we have made in material progress since he has been a Member of this House.

But, no matter where we turn, there are other evidences of the progress we have made, and to much of which he has been a contributing factor. Thus, on taking up his duties here he was assigned to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Perhaps no branch of the public service is so close to the mass of the people as is the post office, and consequently no more striking comparison of the progress and development to which he has been an active contributor during all his service here could be had than the departmental report which was referred to his committee in the Forty-third Congress and the one which was submitted to this Congress only a few days ago.

In the first report which he was called upon as a committeeman to consider, Postmaster General Creswell called attention to the fact that Congress had decided that year to meet the public demand for postal cards, and after many trying experiences "all obstacles were so far overcome that their delivery on requisition was commenced on May 1 last."

He also announced as one of the triumphs of his administration that the department had just reduced the time for the fast mail between New York and San Francisco from more than nine days to a little over seven and a quarter days. Compare that statement with the last report of Postmaster General Burleson wherein we are informed that the mails are now practically carried on the "Wings of morning," the air-mail service during the past year "having been extended across the continent."

Some idea of how that department has expanded can also be had when we remember that in 1873 the receipts aggregated $23,000,000 and the disbursements $29,000,000, while last year the receipts were $437,000,000 and the disbursements $454,000,000.

But it will not be because of his services upon the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, valuable as they were, that his fame will rest. After serving for six years upon that committee he was assigned by Samuel J. Randall, a Democratic Speaker, to the Committee on Appropriations in the Forty-sixth Congress, and it is because of his identity with the workings of that important committee down to the time of his elevation to the speakership that his fame will remain assured throughout the ages. In time it brought with it the important duty of floor leader, and all students of congressional history, without exception, have paid tribute to the ability and the industry that Mr. CANNON displayed while connected with the Committee on Appropriations, especially after he became its chairman. No man who has ever served in the American Congress has a more comprehensive knowledge of the needs of the Government or a clearer insight into its practical operations than has Mr. CANNON, and it can also be truthfully said that no man has proved a stronger bulwark of protection to the Federal Treasury at all times and under all circumstances. [Applause.]

Mr. Alexander, in his admirable work entitled "History and Procedure of the House of Representatives," in speaking of the notable floor leaders of the past pays this deserved tribute:

> Reed's successor as floor leader was JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois. For 10 years he headed Appropriations, and for many years before had fought in the fiercest of dialectical battles. There was some resemblance between him and Reed. Each was indifferent to studied rhetoric, contemptuous of demagogic appeals to popular emotion, distrustful of theorists, and cautious not to overstate. Both were also slow to anger. But, once aroused, their indignation gave an extraordinary impetus to their volition.

In analyzing the methods of Mr. CANNON, the author continues:

> His influence came from his power to absorb the atmosphere of a situation and exhale it with an assured grasp of underlying principles. He never browbeat or intimidated. Sarcasm was not among his weapons. He reasoned and smiled, unbuttoned his vest, unloosened the band of his trousers, and then, with his left arm flying over his head, recalling David and the sling, he let fly a well-aimed stone in the shape of a flashing fact that swiftly pierced the argument of an opponent.

[Applause.]

Whatever the wave that rolled in, he always rode on its crest. There was something debonair about this western "Uncle Joe," who, with nothing but his own native wit and dauntless courage, boldly faced any proposition and all comers. As elsewhere stated, Reed usually finished in 10 minutes. CANNON talked longer, but his speeches had the quality of finality.

In this happy description, all of us who have served with Mr. CANNON here will agree. Only in one particular does the description fail. He did not always "ride on the crest." Twice during his long service here while fighting with that dauntless courage of which the author speaks, he went down in defeat with his party, but they were only temporary defeats, and he was on each occasion returned by his constituency at the following election. The two occasions to which I refer were the elections for the Fifty-second and the Sixty-third Congresses.

These interruptions operated against his being known as "Father of the House" when on some four or five occasions other Members who had seen but a fraction of his service attained the title. This has caused the historian to whom I have just referred to say:

Very early in its history the House adopted the English custom of designating for this duty (i. e., administering the oath to the Speaker elect) the Member of longest continuous service, known as "Father of the House." For four Congresses John Quincy Adams bore this title. Lewis Williams, of North Carolina, held it for six terms, and William D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, sustained it with great credit for 16 years out of a service of 15 terms. With questionable taste Speakers Randall and Crisp interrupted the custom by designating William S. Holman, of Indiana, to officiate. Holman had served as many terms as the then "Father," but not consecutively. Had later Speakers followed this precedent JOSEPH G. CANNON must have officiated after the Fifty-fifth Congress, since he represented longer service than Bingham. Indeed, in a parliamentary sense CANNON may have been said to have been born before his father.

[Laughter.]

But, irrespective of the temporary interruptions in his long and distinguished career, the event we commemorate to-day securely establishes JOSEPH G. CANNON in the place of "Father of all the American Congresses." [Applause.] Why, my friends, approximately one-half of the Members of the present Congress were not born when "Uncle Joe" first took the oath as a Representative, and of the remainder fully one-half were still trying to master the "three R's" in the primary grades of the public schools. There is not a Republican voter in the Danville district under the age of 70 years, the scriptural allotment, who has had an opportunity to vote for a congressional candidate of his political faith other than Mr. CANNON. [Laughter.]

When he took his seat at the beginning of the Forty-third Congress, the great empire of the West was still the frontier of our civilization. That vast and powerful section, now so potent in the councils of the Nation, was then without votes, excepting a narrow fringe of population on the shores of the Pacific Ocean. The sovereign States of Arizona, Colorado, North Dakota, South Dakota, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming were without votes and were represented here by Delegates. In fact, the territory of Dakota had not yet been divided and that splendid empire of the Northwest, now represented by two stars in the national emblem, was then credited with but a single Delegate without the right to vote.

What a wonderful galaxy of brilliant men were here when he came to Congress! James G. Blaine, the "Plumed Knight" of American statesmen, was Speaker of the House. James A. Garfield was a member of the Ohio delegation and was giving evidences of those talents of leadership which subsequently called him to the Presidency. Julius C. Burrows, of Michigan; James B. Beck, of Kentucky; William P. Frye and Eugene Hale, of Maine; Joseph R. Hawley, of Connecticut; George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts; Roger Q. Mills, of Texas; and Stephen B. Elkins, of the Territory of New Mexico, were elected Members of the same House and were subsequently called to the other end of the Capitol. But there were in that same Congress men who rounded out their congressional careers in this body and whose names are equally familiar to the American people.

Among them might be mentioned Benjamin F. Butler, of Massachusetts; Richard P. Bland, of Missouri; "Sunset" Cox, of New York; William S. Holman, of Indiana; John A. Kasson, of Iowa; William R. Morrison, of Illinois; Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania; Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, and others no less distinguished, whose names will forever embellish the pages of American history.

At the other end of the Capitol might be mentioned Senator Allison, of Iowa; Bayard, of Delaware; Cameron, of Pennsylvania; Carpenter, of Wisconsin; Chandler, of Michigan; Roscoe Conkling, of New York; Henry G. Davis, of West Virginia; Edmunds, of Vermont; Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey; Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine; John J. Ingalls, of Kansas; John A. Logan, of Illinois; Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts; Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont; Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana; Carl Schurz, of Missouri; John Sherman and Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio; William Windom, of Minnesota, and many others equally famous.

Of the 371 Senators, Representatives, and Delegates who were recorded in that notable gathering, all but two have passed from the stage of public life, but a merciful Providence has left us Speaker CANNON and Gen. SHERWOOD in order that we might know that in those days there were giants upon the earth. [Applause.]

It has been given to no other man in all our history to be so intimately connected with so many historic characters.

Mr. CANNON has served under 10 Speakers of this House, in the following order: James G. Blaine, Michael C. Kerr, Samuel J. Randall, J. Warren Keifer, John G. Carlisle, Thomas B. Reed, Charles F. Crisp, David B. Henderson, CHAMP CLARK, and FREDERICK H. GILLETT, while he himself occupied that exalted position for a period of eight years. He has also served under 10 Presidents, as follows: Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, Cleveland, Harrison, McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, and Wilson, and in a few weeks HARDING will be added to the list.

What a wonderful experience the "Sage of Danville" has had in all these years of active congressional life! Issues that are new to us and seem fraught with danger and uncertainty were known of old to him and were thrashed out here in this very Hall by him and his associates long before most of us had formed our first impressions of the Government under which we live. A few cases in point will illustrate: Within the past few months one of the issues that has occupied the attention of the American people has been the affairs in the Dominican Republic. Our plans for the future with respect to those people received the principal attention of the daily press as late as Sunday of the current week.

To most of us, as to the great majority of the American people, the Dominican question is but vaguely understood, and yet the Santo Domingo question and the treaty by which a large part of the inhabitants of that island sought to become annexed to the United States was one of the principal events of Grant's administration and was thoroughly studied by Mr. CANNON when he first came to Congress. And it was because of his study of conditions in the islands to the south of us at that time that he was able to assist a later administration with his counsel when we were confronted with the problems of Cuba and Porto Rico at the time of the Spanish-American War.

Another illustration will be of interest just at the present time. For several years the people and the public press of Washington have been agitating the question of the representation of the District upon this floor, and with which I am personally in full accord. Even those who are acquainted with the historical aspect of the proposition are frankly concerned about the practical working of such an arrangement, but this is a question that causes Mr. CANNON no concern, because when he first came to Congress he served here with Gen. Norton P. Chipman, the Delegate from the District of Columbia. The city of Washington, or rather the District of Columbia, was at that time represented on this floor by a Delegate just as were nine of the Territories that have since taken their places in the sisterhood of States.

It is meet and proper on an occasion like this to refer not only to the influence which Mr. CANNON'S personality has exerted upon this body, but also to summarize the more important legislation that has been enacted during the period which all students of history unite in pronouncing the most wonderful in American development.

The Forty-third Congress, in which Mr. CANNON began his service, will be memorable because of the passage of the act providing for the resumption of specie payments following the Civil War, a fact that was accomplished in 1879, 15 years after the close of hostilities. The civil rights bill, the amnesty bill, and much similar legislation of a reconstructive nature, made necessary by that unhappy event, need but be referred to, but it is of interest to us of this day and time to follow through those exciting years the great granger movement which was subsequently to exert such influence upon our industrial life, and especially upon legislation affecting the railroads. That movement finally resulted, in 1887, in the enactment of the interstate commerce law, and the delegation from no State in the Union contributed more to the development of the sentiment which finally placed that legislation on the statute books than that from the State of Illinois.

The numerous legislative battles growing out of the treatment of silver and the maintenance of the country's monetary standard, not to mention such side issues as the greenback craze—contests that were only settled by the titanic struggle of 1896—were all fought out here during the term of his active service, and no one contributed more to the final settlement of these intricate financial problems than did Mr. CANNON.

He was an active participant in the long-extended efforts out of which was finally evolved the present civil service. He has participated in the enactment of all of the great tariff measures; in the legislation that has been passed for the protection and elevation of labor, including the Chinese exclusion law; in the so-called Sherman antitrust law for curbing corporate greed and monopoly; in the law that built the Panama Canal, linking the oceans, and realizing the dream of centuries; in the legislation made necessary by two great wars, in the first of which we brought the blessings of liberty to the struggling patriots of Cuba, acquired Porto Rico and the Philippines, and by the second brought to an end the greatest conflict that the world has ever known.

Since he has been here he has seen 4 of the 19 amendments to the Constitution adopted as part of the organic law. He has seen the expanding business of the Nation call for the creation of three new executive departments—Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor—and innumerable subsidiary bureaus. He has seen political parties rise and disappear and the issues which produced them cease to exist. But, above all, he has lived to see the American Republic, which he has loved and labored for throughout all these years, and which is in no small part the result of his handiwork, proclaimed as the leading Nation in all the world.

And now, in conclusion, Mr. CANNON, voicing not only the sentiment of the entire membership of this House but of the whole Nation as well, I express the hope that it will be your privilege to round out a full half century of service in this Chamber. In this joyous season of the year, when our hearts are filled with thoughts of "Peace on earth, good will toward men," we unite in wishing you health, prosperity, and length of days. We hope that you will live a thousand years and a day, and that we will live a thousand years less a day, for we would not live to see our dear "Uncle Joe" pass away. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to read the following telegram:

GALVESTON, TEX., December 29, 1920.

HON. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

We were colleagues 44 years ago. We have been friends ever since. May we be comrades in heaven. "I look toward you."

HENRY WATTERSON.

[Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the oldest man that ever served in the House of Representatives, Gen. SHERWOOD, of Ohio. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is true that I am the oldest man who ever served in this historic Chamber, but I have always been told that there is no virtue in being old. [Laughter.] If there were, I would be the most virtuous man here. [Laughter.]

We are here to-day with a living knockdown argument of the theory of Dr. Osler [laughter] in Uncle Joe, who has honored this Chamber with the longest service of any man who ever served in any parliamentary body in the world. [Applause.] After the magnificent speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG], so full of historic interest, I hardly feel like saying anything about the career of our distinguished colleague.

I was a Member of the Forty-third Congress. I came into this Chamber as a Representative on the first Monday of December, 1873. We two old chums are the only two men now in public life who were Members of that Congress. The only difference between myself and Uncle Joe is that he has been here nearly all the time, and I have been absent nearly all the time. [Laughter.] You may not know it, but I hold also a world's record of being out of Congress for 34 years, and then coming back. That is the world's record for outing. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] has referred to the great historical characters of the Forty-third Congress. I remember them well; and his oration has called to memory the scenes that I witnessed every day on this floor between Gen. Butler, of Massachusetts, who had a seat on the Republican side, and "Sunset" Cox, of New York, a Democrat, who had a seat on this side. Gen. Garfield occupied a third seat from the front, and back of him was Charley Foster, afterwards governor of Ohio and Secretary of the Treasury; a distinguished Buckeye statesman. I occupied a seat on the Republican side between Gen. Hawley, of Connecticut, and George R. Hoar, of Massachusetts. I was young and green then and did not know any better. [Laughter and applause.]

James G. Blaine, the ablest man of his era, was Speaker of the House. He was his own parliamentarian. We did not have any Hinds' Precedents then. We did not have any Calendar Wednesday. We did not have any Committee on Rules. [Laughter.] We did not have any budget system talk. [Laughter.]

Gen. Grant, then the foremost man of all the world, had just started on his second term, and I remember that the entire appropriation for the White House, salaries, clerks, and everything, was only $42,000. He did not have any military aids. He did not have any bodyguard. I met Gen. Grant time and time again walking all alone on Pennsylvania Avenue.

Speaking of old men, do you know that Pope Leo XIII and John Adams were giving out great ideas at 90? Henry Gassaway Davis, who died a few weeks ago at 93, was looking after his great interest in mines and railroads at 92. George Bancroft, the historian, was writing deathless history at 80. Tennyson wrote his greatest poem, "Crossing the Bar" at 83. Michael Angelo painted the greatest single picture ever painted by mortal man at 80, and was master of the sky and sunshine at 88. Goethe wrote "Faust," the masterpiece of all English literature, at 80. Thomas Jefferson, Talleyrand, Herbert Spencer, and Voltaire were giving out great ideas at 80. Gladstone made the greatest campaign of his entire career at 80, and was master of Great Britain at 83. John Wesley was at the height of his eloquence and power at 88. Humboldt, the greatest scientist and explorer of the German people, submitted the last section of his immortal "Cosmos" at 90. Victor Hugo was at his best from 75 to 80.

Uncle Joe, it is true, has passed the period of adolescence and has reached the age of discretion [laughter], but he has yet years of useful service to his State and country. After the 4th of March next I shall bid farewell to Congress, and Uncle Joe will then be the oldest Member of Congress and the oldest member of any parliamentary body in the world, and I wish him a parting God bless with all my heart. [Long applause, Members rising.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I realize, of course, that I am unfortunate in coming at this particular time following the splendid addresses to which we have just listened with such great pleasure, but I wish to say that there are three reasons why it is eminently proper that these ceremonies should be had to-day.

First, the subject is so worthy.

Second, these good, true things that our hearts prompt us to say of our fellow man ought to be said while he lives and can hear them. [Applause.]

Third, if the saying of them should be deferred until he has passed away all the indications are that none of us here now would have an opportunity of saying them [laughter and applause], and their saying would have to be left to a generation which "knew not Joseph" as we know him. [Applause.]

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the activities of the gentleman from Illinois in an official capacity have probably affected directly and indirectly more millions of Americans than those of any individual now dwelling upon the earth. Not only has he surpassed all the statesmen of America in length of service in conspicuous place in which he has been conspicuous, but he has surpassed the service of all save a very few statesmen in history, ancient or modern, and he stands to-day with a longer record of eminent position than any statesman now living in any nation of the world.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has referred with gratification to the fact that that service has been in the House of Representatives. I join in that feeling of gratification. It seems to me that the qualities and elements of the gentleman whom we honor to-day are and always have been particularly and peculiarly fitted to the House of Representatives. It has become something of a custom of the press to refer to the Senate of the United States as the "upper body" and the House as the "lower body." Sometimes I hear even Members of the House and the Senate make such a designation. I have never regarded this as correct, Mr. Speaker. Certainly the Constitution of our country, which made the Congress, created them coordinate bodies, equal in rank and dignity, and I for one believe that they should be kept so in the public thought. It is true that, under the Constitution, there are certain functions conferred upon the Senate that are not exercised in any respect by the House, but it is equally true that there are certain of the most fundamental things of government, the questions of taxation, of which that same Constitution conferred upon the House the initiative, and what the Constitution has done for the matter of taxation, custom, which is quite as strong, we may say, in many respects as the Constitution itself, has done for the matter of expenditures or appropriations.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there are reasons for the length of distinguished service which the gentleman from Illinois has rendered here to his country. There are reasons for his having surpassed the records of all other American statesmen in length of service, and we do not have very far to search for those reasons.

One reason is that throughout all his days he has had the correct comprehension of the elements and fundamentals of human life and nature and has been always able to keep his feet upon the earth among men. [Applause.]

A writer in a book recently issued commented with much force upon the fact that it is somewhat remarkable "that most writers, except technical writers, show little appreciation of the tremendous assistance to the progress of civilization that very simple mechanical and electrical inventions have imparted." He goes on and points out that those things are the things which have mostly brought about the changes in society and civilization that have marked the development of the centuries. He says:

> There is no evidence that the human machine is any better than it was in the days when the pyramids were built or when the Greeks held their Olympian games. There is no evidence now of any brain greater than Cæsar's; we have no poet greater than Homer; no orator greater than Demosthenes; no sculptor greater than Praxiteles. But the ancient Egyptians had no electric railway; the Assyrians did not possess the wireless telegraph; Homer did not have the advantage of a typewriter; and Charles the Fifth lived a life of squalor compared with that of a moderately prosperous resident of any modern city.

It has been the realization of the fact that human nature itself does not change, that the fundamentals of human character are the same in every age and every time, that has enabled the gentleman from Illinois so forcefully to apply the principles of government in the activities of his long and useful public life.

It is related that when Hercules and Anteas strove, Hercules was enabled to overcome Anteas by lifting him and holding him away from the earth. No one has ever been able to do that with the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause and laughter.] It is true that twice in his political career, I believe, he has been tripped, but the gentleman landed upon his feet among the people. He renewed his strength. There is no danger that he will ever be in the class of Anteas, because his district has, of course, recognized that which we here and which all the Nation and all the world recognize, namely, that the gentleman from Illinois, with his ability and his courage, is not only a distinguished individual but that in himself and of himself he is an institution. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, Judge TOWNER. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, no visitor entering the galleries of this House but asks, first of all, "Where is Uncle Joe?" I presume it would not be an exaggeration to say that his name is more widely known to the people of the United States than that of any other, except perhaps ten or a dozen men, of the Republic. We know, we who have so intimately known him as Members of the House, his sterling character, his perpendicular uprightness, his facing always without evasion any question that presents itself to him. But we are not alone in that knowledge. The people of the United States know Uncle Joe and love him because of those qualities. What a lesson it is to us here who perhaps lack courage of conviction; what a lesson it is to the young man in the United States who is ambitious to serve his country and the cause of his people.

I have visited the birthplace of Uncle Joe, near Greensboro, in North Carolina. I think of him as the poor farmer's boy, going across the prairies, traversing forests, fording streams, until he settled in the pioneer State of Illinois. I think of him struggling as an attorney until he obtained recognition of the people, and then, throughout all these years, until he stands as one of the foremost characters not only of American life but of American history. And so, to the poor boy everywhere, trudging the country highways, with aspirations to be of service and to attain some distinction in the service of his fellow man, he can look to Uncle Joe's career as an inspiration and a promise that if he is faithful to his sincere convictions he will be recognized as being worthy of the trust of the people. The man who has stood foursquare to every wind of demagogism that has blown, opposing them all with the courage that has met with approval sincerely in the hearts of every American citizen, stands to-day the exemplar of all which is best and most courageous in American public life. And so we honor not only our dear comrade and confrère, Uncle JOE CANNON, but we honor to-day length of service, character of service, straightforwardness of service, uprightness in the determination of all those things that go to make for a distinguished service, when we honor as we do, sincerely, generously, heartily, Uncle JOE CANNON, our friend, our comrade, our associate, our exemplar to the world of that which is best in the Congress of the United States. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the leader of the House, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL.] [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a great day for the House as well as for Uncle Joe, because this is the day on which we celebrate the fact that we have with us as colleague, companion, friend, and counselor a man who as Member of Congress has enjoyed longer than any other man in American history the confidence of an American constituency. What an honor it is for nearly half a century to have so lived and so wrought as to have retained the confidence of a large majority of the intelligent, God-fearing, forward-looking, hopeful, honest folks of an American congressional district!

But Uncle Joe has not been returned to Congress continuously. And that reminds us of the fact of which we have recently had some rather distressing reminders, that political landslides unfortunately do not discriminate and are not respecters of persons, and that when they come, these great waves of public sentiment, there are sometimes left behind those that we all, without regard to party, admit it would have been better for the country could they have been returned. [Applause.]

Why has Uncle Joe been here longer than any other man? If there be one reason for it stronger than any other it is to be found in courage, the courage of his convictions. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] expressed the hope that Uncle Joe would round out a 50-year period of service in the House. I hope and trust he will that we and all who come to the House may enjoy his delightful companionship; but more than all that he may be here, as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], as an inspiration not only to all the youth of the land but to the youth of Congress, a reminder that men can serve here for long even though they do not always yield to temporary popular clamor [applause]; a reminder that the man who served the longest in this body is one who has been especially conspicuous for his courage in the face of strong temptation to yield to what seems the popular view.

We have not always agreed with Uncle Joe on either side, but we have all honored him for his virile ability, and, more than that, for his stalwart, unwavering courage. Long may he remain here to remind those who come that a man can be courageous, that a man can stand for what he believes is right, even though it may not for the moment be popular. Oh, what we need here more than all other things is courage, the courage of one's opinion, the courage of one's convictions. We need strong, forceful, able men. But above all we need men of courage, and it is inspiring and encouraging that the most courageous of them all is the man who has remained here the longest. May he long be with us, an inspiration to good service. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, my hour having expired, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] be permitted to address the House as long as he desires to do so. [Loud applause, the Members rising.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that Mr. CANNON may address the House at will. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, we have had so many of these wakes [laughter] that I am beginning to wonder if I am not already realizing the hopes of those who desire to return from the other shore and continue to communicate with their friends who are still participating in the ordinary affairs of this mundane sphere. But it is a compliment that I appreciate from my fellow Members of the House, and I thank my personal friend and colleague, the former Speaker, for his sentiments, which I fully reciprocate.

I realize that it is a rather long time that I have been here, but it has not seemed long, for time never drags in the House, and the realization of the years that have come and gone comes to me only when I look into the faces of my colleagues and note the changes.

The year of 1872 was a memorable one in many respects. Vesuvius had a violent eruption that year [laughter], and Gen. SHERWOOD and I were elected to the House. [Laughter.] There were other happenings—the organization of the German Empire and the French Republic, the emancipation of slaves in Porto Rico, the connection of Australia with the rest of the world by cable, the great Boston fire, and the Geneva award of the Alabama claims, but these concerned the world at large, while the election of my friend and colleague, Gen. SHERWOOD, and myself was personal, and I am glad he is here with us to share with me the doubtful honor of elder statesmen. [Laughter.]

As I look into your faces I am reminded that our honored Speaker and his predecessor in that chair were approaching the polls to cast their first votes that year, Mr. GILLETT no doubt voting for Gen. Grant, who had only a few years before been considered a good Democrat, and Mr. CLARK voting for Horace Greeley, who was still a stalwart Republican and protectionist [laughter], though translated for a few brief weeks to the leadership of the Democratic Party. [Laughter.]

JIM MANN, at the age of 16, was no doubt beginning his struggle with rival ambitions to continue a farmer or become a lawyer, and I am glad that his perverse nature monopolized his ambitions until to-day he is an ornament to both professions, a true, scientific farmer and the most industrious and useful lawmaker I have ever known.

My friends RAINEY and MONDELL, at the age of 12, were beginning to figure life in percentages, while RODENBERG, at the age of 7, was winning his way with "You would scarce expect one of my age" [laughter], and the ambitions of CLAUDE KITCHIN and NICK LONGWORTH, at the age of 3, were centered about their first pants. [Laughter.]

But as I look over the House I find more than 100 of my colleagues who had not then been born; and as I have watched you as you took your places as leaders in committees and on the floor in debate, some of you already called veteran legislators, I feel that 1872 must have been a long way back in the history of the House and the country, for there have been new names added to the United States with a whole great empire covering the plains and the mountains of the West now represented on this floor that were not here then. Eleven States have been admitted to the Union since I first became a Member of the House, and they have often made a noise like a majority here [laughter] and in the Nation and the world, both in peace and in war. [Laughter.]

We have had great development in these years, and I am glad to have been a small part of it and to be able to continue with you in the work we here do for the peace and prosperity of the American people first and the world, so far as we can, by example in fraternity and charity.

I admit that I have been here off and on more years than any of you, but I am not the veteran in continuous service. GILLETT, CLARK of Missouri, MANN of Illinois, BUTLER, GREENE of Massachusetts, MOON, and SIMS rank me in that line, because I had two vacations, which I did not seek [laughter], and those four years were the longest years that have intervened since I first came to Washington. [Applause.]

I thank you from the bottom of my heart. [Prolonged applause, all the Members rising.]

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to revise his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I indorse heartily every good thing that has been said about the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Uncle JOE CANNON. It is not my purpose to mar this beautiful occasion by an attempted speech. I want to call attention particularly to one great achievement, wrought by this distinguished gentleman, which has given more pleasure and contributed more to the comfort of the Members of Congress than all others combined. When I first came here, if a Member of Congress were able to do so he lived in some hotel, and his clerk or secretary frequently lived in a remote part of the city. We had no offices unless we had money enough to hire them, rent them.

After a while the Committee on Appropriations, of which the distinguished gentleman from Illinois was chairman at that time, brought in a legislative appropriation bill carrying in it a proposition for the construction of an office building. The construction of the building was not authorized by law and, therefore, that provision was subject to a point of order. Some Democrat—I think it was a Democrat—afraid of extravagance, made a point of order, and the language went out of the bill. But the chairman, with that determination which has characterized him during his whole life, immediately convened the Committee on Rules, and that committee promptly reported a rule making it in order to amend the bill by putting back into it the language which had been stricken out, and thus the appropriation was passed for the magnificent building that stands southeast of this Capitol.

Uncle JOE CANNON, more than all others combined, is entitled to credit for that office building, for the convenience and comfort of the millions of American people who have visited it and who will visit it in the centuries to come. I feel that while this is one of the poorest achievements of his great career, yet it is one that ought to be commemorated in some suitable manner. I believe the membership of this House—every man in it—will be glad, upon entering the office building, to witness a bronze bust of our congenial friend and companion during so many years occupying a conspicuous place in the beautiful rotunda, and, Mr. Speaker, with that in view I offer this resolution as a slight tribute to our distinguished colleague, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 628.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives this day accepts from his friends a bronze bust of the Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, and that the same be placed on a suitable pedestal in the rotunda of the House Office Building, and that the expense of the pedestal shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of the resolution will say "aye"; opposed, "no."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that we take a rising vote.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of the resolution will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-three have risen in the affirmative. As many as are opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After a pause.] None have risen in the negative.

So the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER. By special order, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] was allowed one hour in which to address the House. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, when I asked one or two Members of the House for their views as to whether a statement of the Congressional Library in its organization and in its work would be of value to the Members of the House, I was assured that such a statement might be advisable and might be interesting. At the time I was not aware of the character of the program I was to follow.

The House of Representatives has been eulogized in the hour preceding, largely because of the personal element that enters into the membership of the body; and yet all that was said that was of value by any Member that spoke is distinctively of less importance than what is not said. Uncle JOE CANNON owes it to his country, and especially to the membership of this House, in the past and present and to be, to reduce to writing in the form of reminiscences the interesting episodes that will supply the finest source of history during the greater period of our national development.

And whatever has been said about the wonderful career of this wonderful man, that which has not been uttered and which, I fear, will not be written or spoken is of most importance. Members of this body have pleaded with the distinguished ex-Speaker over and over again to take the time to put into permanent shape, in form of reminiscences covering these 43 years, the richest source of American history available. I fear that we will not get it. The Library across the way is to-day rich because of the valuable papers it contains that represent the utterances of the great statesmen, many of which were made at random. It contains utterances of a dozen of our Presidents whose papers we have, and which are recognized of the greatest importance to the country. We have also utterances of some of the greatest editors, like Charles A. Dana, whose reminiscences of the Civil War, touching the inner life of Abraham Lincoln, supply the finest picture of that great character now extant; and how rich would be the acquisition covering the last 50 years if Uncle JOE CANNON would put in form and have placed in the Library the richness of his public life that none of us knows much about except as a fugitive story here and there. If this is lost to our country, it will be a great mistake.

East of the Capitol stands the most beautiful building in the world, the creation of the genius of the architect, sculptor, and painter. Within its walls is found a collection of publications which is rapidly overtaking the Bibliotheque Nationale of Paris and the British Museum of London, the only other libraries which exceed in number of books the Congressional Library.

In this Library is found the world's greatest collection of musical compositions, as well as the first rank in the number of maps. The Library, hence, is not only the most superb in its beauty of design, but its arrangement for practical use is the most complete. The building covers 3½ acres and has 8 acres of floor space. It has 100 miles of shelving to accommodate 3,500,000 volumes, which may be extended to at least twice that amount. The library service in delivering books operates almost like a metallic mind.

Like all other great institutions, this had its small and insignificant beginning. It started some time before the beginning of the last century with the appointment of a committee to report on need and selection of suitable books. Five thousand dollars was appropriated in 1800. Beckley, of Virginia, was appointed librarian by Jefferson in 1802. The first catalogue was of nine pages, prepared in 1802, the Library then containing 964 volumes and 9 maps, classified on the basis of size into quarters, octavos, and so forth. The purpose of the Library was stated by Senator Mitchill in 1806 to be "to furnish the Library with such materials as will enable statesmen to be correct in their investigations, and by a becoming display of erudition and research give a higher dignity and a brighter luster to truth."

The catalogue of 1812 contained titles of 3,076 volumes and 58 maps and charts. When the Capitol was burned in 1814 by the British, the Library had cost all told about $9,000 for books and operation. The librarian's salary was at first $2 per day. The Library was destroyed August 24, and on September 21 Jefferson wrote from his home tendering his library to Congress. The committee was authorized by act of Congress to purchase the 7,000 volumes for $23,950, which was done in January, 1815. Jefferson catalogued the library, which was later declared by Spofford as "an admirable selection of the best ancient and modern literature up to the beginning of the present century." These books were hauled from Monticello to Washington in farm wagons.

From 1815 to 1851 the Library grew from 7,000 to 55,000 volumes.

On the evening of December 22, 1825, Edward Everett discovered a fire in the galleries of the Library, and he, assisted by Daniel Webster and other Members of Congress, put it out. In 1851 a second fire destroyed all but 20,000 volumes of the then handsome collection of 55,000 volumes. Only one-third of the Jefferson collection was saved. Congress at once took steps to rebuild the loss. Before the year was ended in several specific acts it had appropriated $263,700 for the purpose. Ten years later a general catalogue of 1,398 pages was published. In 1869 the last complete catalogue, arranged by subjects, was published in two volumes of 1,744 pages.

The card catalogue was adopted about 1865, and was perfected from time to time to its present wonderfully serviceable system.

In 1864 A. R. Spofford was selected as librarian, and that year might be taken as the beginning of the third stage of Congressional Library history. Congress sympathetically responded to legislative demands. Frequent appropriations were voted and many private collections were secured after the fashion of the famous beginning in 1815. Three years after the selection of Spofford, Congress authorized the purchase of the valuable collection of Americana from Peter Force. It contained 60,000 volumes and cost $100,000. It was regarded as a rare collection of books and pamphlets on American subjects—manuscripts, newspapers, maps, autographs, and so forth. About the same time the vast collection of the Smithsonian Institution, comprising 40,000 volumes, was transferred to the Congressional Library. It contained invaluable publications of the various learned societies throughout the world with which the Institution had exchange arrangements. These publications contained works on natural history, the fine arts, linguistics, bibliography, and so forth.

Accessions were constantly made, among which were, in 1866, the Pefigru law library; 1882, the manuscript papers of Benjamin Franklin; 1883, the Matthew-Carpenter law library; 1882, the Toner collection of 27,000 volumes, which collection contained, among other invaluable publications, an almost complete collection of copies of letters and papers of Gen. Washington, copied from every available source, whether published or unpublished.

As far back as 1846 a provision of the copyright law required a deposit in the Library of one copy of every book, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving that was copyrighted. In 1870 the law required two copies deposited. This requirement insured the Congressional Library as the most complete repository of the American press in existence. This is one, if not the chief, source of accessions, which reaches now about 1,200 per month.

It was the ambition of Mr. Spofford, denominated by Editor Bowker, of the Library Journal, as the "eighth wonder of the world," to personally serve every Member of both House and Senate. Many are the stories told of this wonderful man, who seemed to know not only where every book was on the shelf but just where to find anything in any book demanded by the legislator. Perhaps no man in Washington was so well and favorably known as this man, and certainly no man more widely served the great and distinguished figures of his generation, whose service was the favorable comment of the statesmen of his time.

Only yesterday one of the attendants in the Congressional Library, who has served there 30 years, told me an incident where Senator David B. Hill, of New York, came to the Library looking for something in relation to Blackstone's Commentaries. He spent over two hours in the research. Just as he was passing out he passed Mr. Spofford, who asked him if he had found what he wanted. Senator Hill replied that he had not. Mr. Spofford wanted to know what it was, and when the Senator told him, he said, "Wait a moment, probably I can help you," and within five minutes he handed to the Senator a volume with the page containing the information which the Senator wanted.

I remember a very interesting incident that is told in connection with Mr. Spofford when a gentleman appeared asking for certain information on the Ordnance of 1787. Mr. Spofford took down volume after volume, passed it over to the research man, and as the research man took the volume, he said, "It is not in this; I have examined that before." Mr. Spofford finally said, "I can not help you; I regret it"; and when the gentleman started out Mr. Spofford said, "Wait a minute; if you care to take the time you might go to Marietta, Ohio, and look up Prof. Andrews, who is the best-informed man on the Ordnance of 1787 that I know of. If he can not give it to you, I do not know where you can find it." The gentleman blushed and said, "I am Prof. Andrews myself."

Many interesting incidents could be hunted up from the older people here in Washington concerning this remarkable figure, who served personally in the Library, which at that time was just off the rotunda under the dome.

While the purpose of the Library was originally limited to the service of the legislative department, under Spofford it soon extended to both the Supreme Court and the Executive, including the various departments and numerous bureaus under the departments. The growth was so constant that all available space where it was housed in the Capitol Building was occupied. In 1897, when the Library was moved to the new quarters, 600,000 volumes were crowded into a space allotted for but 400,000 volumes. The rapid growth dates from the entrance of Spofford, to whose genius was due not only the fine response of the public, both official and nonofficial, but also to the plans and execution which resulted in the most complete and superb library building of the world.

Agitation for a new library building began back in 1873. Discussion continued somewhat intermittently for 13 years. In 1886 authority was given to purchase a site, which cost $585,000. An appropriation of $500,000 was made to begin the construction.

The original plans were outlined by Architect Smithmeyer. Later the construction was placed under the direction of Gen. Thomas L. Casey, of the Army. The architectural designs were worked out by Paul J. Pelz and Edward P. Casey. In 1896, upon the death of Gen. Casey, Bernard R. Green took up and completed the building. The total cost was $6,347,000, exclusive of the site, which cost $585,000. A library which had numbered about 75,000 volumes in 1864, when Spofford came to its head, had grown to nearly 1,000,000 volumes by 1897, when it was transferred to its new home in September of that year.

The housing of the collection of books in the most beautiful building in the world was the realization of the dream of Mr. Spofford, who expressed the wish to leave the responsibility of its expansion to other heads. The former crowded quarters had given way to a wonderfully commodious structure of about 10,000,000 cubic feet of space, where 2,000 readers can be accommodated at one time in the midst of one of the world's greatest collections of books, pamphlets, maps, and so forth. Mr. Spofford asked to be relieved and was made a sort of librarian emeritus, with Mr. John Russell Young as librarian. In this position Spofford continued until his death in 1908. Two years after his appointment Mr. Young died. President McKinley sought the best possible talent, which was found in Dr. Herbert Putnam, the librarian of the Boston Public Library. Dr. Putnam was the first specially trained librarian to be selected, and he, at the request of the President, accepted the position, although at a substantial financial sacrifice.

His service during these more than 20 years is another of the many evidences of President McKinley's remarkable talent to call to the service of the Government a high grade of ability.

I am not going into the financial side of this Library; I am not going to put this statement into the form of begging an appropriation. But I know the membership of the House will be more or less concerned with the material appreciation of the expert men that are found in this building just across the way.

With this appointment of Mr. Putnam began the fourth stage of the growth of the Congressional Library. Up to this time the chief activity was confined to the collection of publications and the service of the Government here in the Capital. With the advent of Dr. Putnam began the present remarkable library organization. In 1897 several divisions had already been organized; among them were the following:

1. Division of Manuscripts, now employing 4 persons.
2. Division of Maps and Charts, now employing 6 persons.
3. Division of Music, now employing 6 persons.
4. Division of Prints, with 5 persons.
5. Division of Copyright, with 91 employed at present.

The Cataloguing Division was created in 1899.

The Order Division was organized in 1900 and now employs 13 persons.

In 1901 were organized the following:

1. The Card Distribution Section, employing at present 69 persons. The stock now numbers over 60,000,000 cards.

2. The Periodical Division. The total number of periodicals received is beyond 13,000. Over 1,000 newspapers are received; 275 foreign. It employs 12 persons.

The reading room has seating capacity for 250 readers, who have access to over 400 newspapers and more than 3,500 magazines. Three hundred and seventy-five newspapers are bound and now found on the shelves. It employs at present 72 persons.

3. The Documents Division. More than 40,000 documents are annually received. At least 10,000 are foreign and about the same number are from the various States in the Union. It employs 7 persons.

The last 20 years have witnessed the development of this Government institution into a genuine National Library. This has been the ambition of the present librarian, who has already realized his dream. Dr. Putnam clearly distinguished the function of the municipal library, the State library, and the university library on the one hand from that of the National Library on the other. Each of the three former serves a constituency not within the purview of the National Library.

The head of the Library planned to make the National Library serve the entire country through other libraries in the following ways:

1. By the sale and deposit of catalogue cards, of which there are now in stock 60,000,000.

2. Interlibrary loans by which any person, in however remote part of our country, can secure through the local library books from the national library.

3. Distribution of the publications, including its bibliographies.

4. By cooperation in publication.

In this way the research investigator is not limited to the books on the shelves in his local library. In every library center can be found a card catalogue of the Congressional Library, which informs the attendants and patrons of the various centers of the collections of the national library. This organizes the library centers into one stupendous library system, with Washington as the center as a general clearing house for library information throughout the Nation. It thus serves the general reader, who is not limited to the authorities found in the Congressional Library, enormous as are the present sources, numbering in the collection 2,831,333 books and pamphlets, 166,448 maps, 829,400 volumes and pieces of music, and the 418,976 prints. Through the interlibrary arrangement he has access to the collection of about 3,000 libraries scattered throughout the Nation.

By international arrangement, with some additional inconvenience, he also has access to some of the world's greatest libraries outside of the United States. This arrangement exists with 138 libraries, from 24 countries.

The conception of a great national library was announced by the librarian soon after his induction. In 1905 he set out the functions in a report in which he referred to fields of research as follows:

1. A library for special service to the Federal Government.
2. A library of record for the United States.
3. A library of research, supplementing other research libraries.
4. A library for national service; a library which shall respond to demands from any part of the country in the aid of research.

This ambitious program has now been realized.

The municipal library serves an entirely different purpose from the university library. The State library serves a purpose that probably would be served by both university and municipal. A university library is primarily for research, very much like the library in the various governmental departments. Several of the departments support the finest libraries of this kind in the world.

I have a list of the libraries that are using the National Library's stock of cards. It runs very closely to 3,000 libraries. I also have a list of the foreign libraries that are using the Library of Congress. I think there are by actual count 39 libraries of foreign countries that draw upon this library here in this Capital for research work. I here append the list:

The foreign list does not include many municipal libraries in the Old World with which we have affiliation.

Out of this Congressional Library go books to States from Maine to California for research advancement only. It is serving in a research way every remote section of the country. It is not primarily for readers, nor is it for self-cultivation. This Congressional Library is not a circulating library such as the city or municipal library, whose collection of books are for cultural reading, for delight, or self-cultivation. A library like the one on Massachusetts Avenue and K Street will show a greater circulation of books than the National Library. But the book that goes out from the National Library goes to research men, whether here or elsewhere, who become stimulated thereby to writing books, results of investigations, which multiply the books that fill such libraries as this in the city of Washington. So when we examine a list of the books that go out of the Congressional Library to the various libraries of the country, it is not the number that is significant but the quality.

GROWTH OF THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

The growth of the Library has been almost phenomenal as seen in the light of the small expense. It is rapidly overtaking all other collections, and will soon have first rank in number of volumes of books, as it already has in Americana, in music material, American imprints, official documents of all countries, and of the publications of learned societies throughout the world. There are three principal sources of this growth:

1. Copyright deposits, two copies of each copyrighted publication.

2. International exchange of official documents, to satisfy which the Library is allowed 100 copies of each official publication of our Government.

3. Returns from the exchange of the Smithsonian Institution.

Other sources, such as donations and purchases, add to the collections, such as the Russian and Chinese collections, each of which is doubtless one of the richest outside of those countries.

It would seem reasonable to expect public-spirited men in many countries where America is appreciated would follow the example of Yudin and others and donate valuable collections of publications for permanent use through this great research institution. Certainly in no other way could better use be made of source material. Likewise could no place be found where better care would be taken to insure the realization of the donor's purpose. It is to be hoped that the example set by Smithson back in the forties, which made possible the Smithsonian Institution, in many respects without a parallel, and the example of Yudin may be followed by other foreigners, and especially by many Americans who possess collections of rare value.

Fellow Members of the House, perhaps it is not known to many of you that over here in the Library we have the richest collection of Russian books outside of Russia. The collection includes certain manuscript records of the early Russian settlement in Alaska. In pure literature the Library includes the best edition of every important Russian writer. Even the fine arts are fairly represented, especially notable being a set of the Rovinski publications, perhaps the most nearly complete in existence. It probably is not known to many Members of the House that over in the Congressional Library is the finest collection of Chinese books that is found anywhere outside the Empire of China. This collection was commenced with books brought over here by Caleb Cushing, the first United States minister to China under President Tyler. It contains volumes that can not be duplicated. The Choo He History, 100 and 110 volumes; the History of the Eight Banners, 314 volumes; three sets of Kang Hee's Dictionary, 40 volumes; and a dictionary of classical expressions, 120 volumes, are among the notable possessions. Some of them are not to be found anywhere outside of China.

Perhaps it is not known to many that the Library contains a fine collection of Japanese books. It was started with a collection of 9,000 volumes, and is rapidly growing.

The Government has never become a book collector in the sense of the book fancier, which does not stand on cost. It expends only a meager sum for additions, something less than $100,000 per year. It consequently can not procure the rich, rare book or manuscript, which can only be had at a price. However, it does procure photostatic copies where such is allowable and available. This has come to be a valuable feature of library service here in the Capital.

PHOTOSTATIC REPRODUCTIONS.

Among the richest collections in various parts of the world no duplicates can be had at any price. They are not in existence. This is why the old libraries of Europe and Asia are so priceless in value. Destruction of these sources would deprive the world of these riches, as they could not be reproduced. The nearest possibility of reproduction is through the photostatic process, which has been introduced quite extensively in the National Library.

When it can not secure the manuscript, it frequently has the privilege of photographing it, and in this way all sorts of invaluable information is secured by this new plan of seeking the next thing to the rare manuscript—its photograph.

Some days ago we were discussing the question of presidential disability, and in looking up the bibliography on it we found that back in 1881 the North American Review had printed four articles from four distinguished men on the subject of presidential disability. We looked the Library over, and could not find it. It was finally found by the Library in some place here in the city, and immediately the Library took a photostatic copy of it and supplied it to Members of the House, and it is now in the Library. I was shown only this morning this remarkable apparatus, which is one of the very valuable additions to a real national library, and which is to come into more general use in supplying photographs of valuable documents now in the Library, desired by many away from Washington.

THE WORK OF HIGHLY TRAINED EXPERTS.

When the present librarian came to the head of the Library he had only to add to the facilities of the collections, housed in the most commodious of buildings, a library organization to make it a truly national library. This has been done at a comparatively small expense. In this organization there are less than 600 persons employed, including 148 under the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds. Among these are to be found the highest grade of scholarship and trained expert service. They include classifiers—that is a term that would not be very intelligible to the average Member of Congress unless he would make some study of its significance. Here is a sample of classification work. Here is a volume of 597 pages on the subject of social science. Science is only one field of investigation of the boundless fields for research and which becomes a very small part of the whole field. Social science, the title of this volume, is only one little nook of the field of science. The volume contains only the titles. I picked it up in the Library just as an example of intensive work. I might want to find what has been written and printed and what is now available on the subject of social science, not confined to our Library, but extending to the world libraries. Here it is. If I want to find what is in the British Museum on that subject, if I know the key to this volume, I can locate it and then by our international interlibrary arrangement I know how to proceed. I can not secure the book from those old libraries in Europe, as they are purely reference libraries and must be consulted on the spot. However, they can secure the book from us. We are one of the few libraries carrying on such service. If I wish the information in Europe's great libraries I can have some one look the matter up for me. This volume is the work of the classifier, and displays the endless field in which he now works in attempting to notify the reader what has been published and to make it easily available.

THE WORK OF THE BIBLIOGRAPHER.

We have been talking on the subject of dyestuffs. The bibliography of dyestuff in the volume which I hold in my hand, and which has recently been prepared and published, contains 185 pages. The bibliographer does not serve the general reader. The general reader is served in the general reading room over here. That is the first step in public education through the Library. The bibliographer serves the research man who wants to know what has been written on these subjects, and his business is such as keeping a record of all bibliographical work, past and present; second, preparing a list of references on all popular questions; third, through the Catalogue Division prepare and publish a bibliographical record of every book which will find a place on the shelves of the Library. But, besides the bibliographer, the research man must have the interpreter. A Member of the House told me the other day that he became involved in a very serious dispute upon a matter of fact that was found in the Spanish language. He did not know just how to settle it. He spoke to me, and not being a Spanish student and not being able to read the original, I said to him, "Go to the Library and in five minutes you will find a man who will give you a translation, and you can have it before you in perfect English." It does not matter what language it is, they have that research ability over here in our Library. Men and women over there, gentlemen, are working like worms and you have never seen them unless you have gone where they are. They are doing in the most quiet way the most important work in research, and making it possible for Members of Congress to utilize the stored-up wisdom of the ages through the result of their research, as noble work as can be found anywhere in the world.

Cataloguers, bibliographers, interpreters, and scholars in various lines of research, science, language, literature, and other fields, calling for the trained specialist. Through these channels the legislator can have brought to his assistance at once necessary data, without which he could not act with the highest degree of intelligence based upon accurate information. A controverted issue involving a dispute which turns upon some event, the only record of which may be locked up in a foreign language, can easily be cleared up within an hour or two of time, in which the experts will lay a translation of the record before you.

Mr. BLANTON. Will my distinguished friend yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to my friend.

Mr. BLANTON. I just wanted to pay a tribute to Mr. Washington, who used to be there and who used to render valuable services to every Member of this House who called upon him. As I have said once before, he has stayed there and worked until the wee small hours of the morning to my certain knowledge on several occasions, and I thought it was only due to his memory to say that in his behalf.

Mr. FESS. I thank my friend for his utterance of appreciation. The House showed it by advancing the salary up to the time that he was the custodian.

Mr. BLANTON. But the House showed it, the distinguished gentleman will remember, after he was dead and gone in paying it to his widow.

Mr. FESS. The House showed it before he died in a handsome advance.

Mr. BLANTON. But considering the kind of services he performed, even that advance was hardly worth mentioning.

Mr. FESS. Well, I would not say it was not worth mentioning, but it was not commensurate with his work, I will admit.

One of the surprising features, aside from the talent of the expert, is the wonderful facility in serving the reader, whether within the Library Building or the Chamber of the House or Senate. Any book may be handed the reader in the reading room within three minutes after the order. It can be delivered to the Congressman in the Capitol within 15 minutes after the order.

WASHINGTON RAPIDLY BECOMING THE WORLD'S GREATEST CENTER FOR SCHOLARSHIP.

It may not be known to all Members of the House that here in Washington, connected with the various research divisions of the Government, are located the greatest group of great scholars that can be found in any other center in all the world.

I want to emphasize that statement. It is absolutely true. These scholars are associated with the various governmental departments, each of which has special library facility for its use. There are a score of such special libraries which a dozen years ago contained considerably over a million volumes of books and pamphlets. Among them the libraries of the Surgeon General's Office, the Agricultural Department, the Bureau of Education, the Bureau of Standards, the Fish Commission, and the Geological Survey are the finest of their kind in the world. However, the Congressional Library contains not an insignificant portion of the force of experts to be found in Washington.

I asked an authority some days ago whether it was wise to collect all the libraries within one building and place them under the control of the Library of Congress. The answer was in the negative; that they all ought to be affiliated with the National Library, as they are, but that we do not have room over here, and that the libraries can be better used for the purposes of research where they are now located.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. OLDFIELD. You speak of these libraries in the departments. Does not the Congressional Library have a copy of each of the books that these other libraries have?

Mr. FESS. It has not a copy. It has a good many duplicates, but these libraries have a good many books that the Congressional Library does not have at all. I had that information this morning.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I was under the impression that the National Library had copies of all books in the departmental libraries.

Mr. FESS. There are a great many books that they do not have duplicates of. One of the libraries on the Mall, the Surgeon General's library, is distinctly the finest collection of books of that sort that can be found anywhere in the world, and it is housed in rather a shabby building. I think there should be a fireproof building to house that library, for if it were lost it could not be duplicated.

THE ONE GREAT OBSTACLE TO OVERCOME.

The one obstacle thus far is the inadequate salary allowed. It is such that constant injury is suffered by the loss of this service to other fields, which has some compensation by making this Library the training school for library work throughout the country.

A very significant incident of that sort came to my attention a few days ago. The man who was found wonderfully fitted both by nature and by acquired training to build up the musical collection over here came at a low salary which reached its height in $3,000 per annum. He stayed here until he had brought this collection to the first rank in the world, not only in number of collection but especially in the character of the constituent parts of the collection, in its organization, and so forth. He was offered a superb salary, perhaps $10,000, to go to the head of some great firm, and two years ago he left the Library. Of course, we could not keep him. And while that is rather an exceptional case, it not being common, it represents what we have to face in this expert service.

LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE SERVICE.

The most recently added division is the legislative reference service, to assist the legislator in assembling data on questions involving important legislation and also in assisting in drafting bills. During the closing year 1,604 inquiries were made of this service. The character of work of this service is displayed by what it was called upon to do. For example, on the question of public finance by those interested in budget legislation the following list of inquiries is suggestive:

A brief discussion of the taxing power of boards or commissions.

This list suggests the comprehensive character as well as the supreme importance of the work of this service. Similar lists can be shown on various other topics, such as military affairs and diplomatic questions. The importance of this service will become apparent as Members become acquainted with the facilities supplied by it.

The above is a list of titles, or rather of subjects of inquiry, from Members of the House and Senate on the one subject of public finance. It covers a tremendous field of inquiry, and the same thing can be duplicated on the question of diplomatic relations during this discussion on the peace imbroglio and the same on questions touching military affairs during our discussion as to reorganization of the Army. The number of inquiries is not the significant fact, but the character of the inquiries. And now, fellow Members, I wish you to get this distinction in library service, that the general reading room serves the general library purpose. The bibliographic division goes a step beyond and serves the research man. It does not supply the research man with information. It supplies him with the "where you can find it." In other words, the bibliographic function is best expressed by the answer of the famous judge who was asked by a brilliant young lawyer about a certain fact in law, when the judge replied to him, "Come to my office and I will at once look it up." The brilliant young barrister said to him, "Judge, I am not going to your office to take your time. I supposed you could just answer that without any effort at all." The judge replied, "Young man, the real test of a lawyer is not the law he knows, but his ability to find out what he does not know."

Now, that is the bibliographer's function, and that work over in the Library is very important and stupendous in its reach. But beyond that, and to you and me vastly more important than that, is the legislative reference service, which goes beyond telling us where we can find the information, which if we were left to pursue we would be lost in the Library, but this service lays before you the material it has searched out and which if we had to locate it would take a lifetime to find, especially if we should go in there without training in that particular service.

Oliver Wendell Holmes was once asked upon returning from Europe, having said to some one that he had visited the British Museum, as to how long it would take a man to become acquainted with the contents of that museum. He said, "He ought to be born in the museum, to start with, and live to be 80 years old, and never leave it." Likewise the average Congressman who would want to look up data supporting pro and con a piece of legislation that would undertake to get at the bottom of it by his own research to find out what has been written would not have time to cover it, even if he had a disposition to do it. And I express the hope that this new field, started only a short time ago, in response to House and Senate committees working on legislation and doing a remarkably important piece of work, will receive ready support, because it certainly must not be discontinued, but should be enthusiastically indorsed as one of the newest and most important divisions of a great national institution. This support should be commensurate with the growth of demands as they come upon the Members for legislation.

RECAPITULATION.

Now, Members of the House, I have taken as much time as I care on the general subject of the Library. I ask the privilege to make a brief recapitulation of what I have attempted to say.

The Library is still third in dimension, but overtaking the first two—Bibliotheque Nationale and British Museum. In point of quality it can not overtake them, for they have material original in form which it can never secure. But it tries as far as possible to secure the substance of this, most important to an American investigator, by copies and facsimiles, especially material relating to American history. It thus saves many an investigator a trip abroad or directs him where he should go to best advantage.

It gets and preserves many volumes not suitable for a local library. The result is to save local libraries the expense of getting and accommodating those books. For under the system of interlibrary loan they are made available to investigators throughout the United States.

In this respect the Library of Congress differs from national libraries abroad, such as the British Museum and the famous Paris library, which are purely reference libraries, which must be consulted on the spot.

Its printed cards represent a service which is also unique, the one successful attempt on a general scale to centralize once for all the expense of (1) cataloguing books and (2) of manifolding the catalogue entries.

In addition it is (1) a legislative library for Congress; (2) the main reference library for the executive departments and bureaus; (3) the law library of the Supreme Court; (4) the copyright office of the United States; and (5) the National Library to render a special service for the entire country.

Its reference readers number as many as those in the British Museum or the Bibliotheque Nationale; but the facilities accorded them, for example, of direct access to the shelves, surpass those of any other considerable reference library whatever. Unlike the Bibliotheque Nationale and British Museum, which close at sundown, the National Library is open till 10 o'clock every evening, and on Sundays from 2 until 10.

Its building is in cubic area about 10,000,000 cubic feet, equal to that of the Capitol. In floor area it greatly exceeds it. Its shelving capacity is sufficient to accommodate 3,500,000 volumes and can be increased to double that number.

This building is one of the most notable of modern architectural achievements and equally notable for the nicety with which it is maintained—a model in this respect for all public buildings.

A trip through the Library at any time, and through the workshops, through the various divisions—and they are numerous—will show you that where you would expect an immense amount of accumulation of dirt instead a place immaculately clean.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to conclude.

Mr. FESS. I think I can conclude in 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may proceed for 10 additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. DENISON. I assume the British Museum and the National Museum of France have a lot of rare historical volumes, of course, that can not be duplicated anywhere in the world, and that the Library of Congress does not possess?

Mr. FESS. That is true.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman know whether or not those Governments permit others to take photograph copies of those books, so that our Library can secure them?

Mr. FESS. I know that is done on a limited scale, but I should judge there are manuscripts they would not permit to be photographed.

Mr. DENISON. I would judge that to be the case. I understand that some of our original documents, like the Constitution, can not now be photographed any longer.

Mr. FESS. I am not sure that they can not, but I am rather of the opinion that they can not.

By the way, there is one line of work done in the Library that every Member of Congress ought to be acquainted with, and that is the repairing and rebuilding of manuscripts that are being eaten or being destroyed. I saw that process. That is a very valuable and very unusual work.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. RHODES. I followed the gentleman's remarks with unusual interest, and I remember he said the Library Building is the most beautiful building of its kind in the world. Has the gentleman stated in what year the present building was erected?

Mr. FESS. The law providing for the erection of the building was passed in 1886, and in that year $500,000 was appropriated to proceed with the construction, and it was finished in 1897.

While in material of distinction the Library can not match the great libraries abroad, it has already in certain fields collections of great significance and in a few preeminence, for example:

American history: Its collection of manuscripts, including the personal papers of a dozen of the Presidents, from Washington to Roosevelt and Taft.

Scientific societies: Transactions and proceedings, which come to it through the exchanges of the Smithsonian Institution; one of the largest and most nearly comprehensive of such collections in existence.

Newspapers and periodicals: Bound files; a very large and representative collection.

I did not verify the statement that we have a complete collection of the London Gazette, dating as far back as 1665, the oldest complete English newspaper in the Library and the only complete file in the country, neither did I verify the published statement that we have hundreds of volumes of the London Times, the file being complete from the beginning, 1795. May I ask my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] as to that? Does the gentleman know?

Mr. TEMPLE. No.

Mr. FESS. I have seen the statement, and I could have easily verified it, but it did not come to my mind when I had the opportunity. I am reading now the list in which we are preeminent as a library.

Public (official) documents: Of all countries, resulting from the international exchanges conducted by the Library itself.

And in special fields of literature, for example:

Americana: Including the results of copyright.

Political science.

Law.

And certain (unexpected) groups, for example:

Russia: The Yudin collection, 80,000 volumes, perhaps the most thorough outside of Russia.

China: One of the largest, and in certain respects certainly the richest, outside of China.

Its collection of music is probably the largest in the world. Developed for the needs of the serious investigator—composer, critic, historian, conductor—it is rendering signal service to such investigators in America. For instance, in no other institution in the world could the history of modern opera be studied or written as here.

Its collection of prints developed on its recent side by copyright, or its more classical side by gift, is constantly drawn upon for illustration, and the exhibits from it interest, inform, and influence thousands of visitors annually.

Its collection of maps is constantly drawn upon not merely in research but in litigation and public boundary disputes, for example: Venezuela and Alaska.

Its service to Congress includes—

1. The issue of books specifically asked for.
2. Lists of books responding to a particular inquiry.
3. Compilations furnishing, in brief, data upon a pending question in legislation.

This last is the function of the legislative reference service established a few years ago; a service quite indispensable if Congress is to have full profit of the material in the collections. For this material, submerged in nearly 3,000,000 volumes, in numerous languages, can be extracted and reduced to available form only by men familiar with the collections and skilled in the use of the bibliographic apparatus. These men must be well grounded academically, good linguists, and with ability to express with precision the results obtained. Among them must be specialists in law, economics, and political science.

They must form a permanent corps, for the experience and ability is cumulative. Also the work requires bibliographic apparatus—indexes, and so forth—which must go on currently and be kept up.

There is no such thing as ever finishing the catalogue. That is an unending piece of work.

An efficient such corps, adequate in numbers, is indispensable to enable the Library to render to Congress the service to which it is entitled and which it can get in no other way.

I want the membership to get this statement: The cost of it, even at $75,000 per annum, is relatively slight compared with its possible value as a tool in legislation.

PUBLICATIONS.

The major and most distinctive publication of the Library is its printed catalogue cards. But it has issued also—

1. "Select lists" of references to books, and so forth, dealing with topics under current discussion, especially in Congress, for example, lists on Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, the Danish West Indies, and so forth; lists of arbitration, budgets, currency, Federal control, immigration, railroads, trusts, and so forth; and guides to the literature of the law of three foreign countries—Argentina, Germany, and Spain.

2. It has published in book form catalogues of certain groups of material; for example, of its American newspapers (files), geographical atlases, orchestral music and operatic librettos, Hubbard collection (prints), Thacher collection (incunabula).

Also calendars of certain groups of manuscripts—for example, of the Crittenden, Paul Jones, Monroe, Pierce, Van Buren papers, and of certain of the Washington papers.

I think it would be a delight to any Member of Congress to spend a little time in looking over those valuable papers and letters of George Washington. They are very rare and can not be found in any other place in the world. These calendars are regarded invaluable accessions to the Library.

These catalogues and calendars have received high commendation as useful contributions to knowledge and research.

3. The publication in extenso of texts in its possession is not its policy. But it has made two exceptions. It has published the records of the Virginia Co., of London, of which the surviving text is in its keeping; and it has edited, and has in part published, the Journals of the Continental Congress, of which the originals are in its custody. Twenty-three volumes have thus far been issued, and the remainder, about 10 volumes, have been delayed only through insufficiency in the allotment for printing.

4. The rest of its publications are primarily administrative—for example, the Catalogue of Copyright Entries (which costs $35,000 per annum) and various manuals and handbooks to the use of the collections.

The editing of all of these publications has been done by the regular staff and has involved no especial appropriation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the membership of the House to the cost of this remarkable institution across the way.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. May I have five minutes more?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COST.

Mr. FESS. The total appropriation for the library, the copyright office, and the care of the building and grounds is about $720,000 per annum.

Against this are receipts, copyright fees, and proceeds of sales of the printed cards, totaling about $200,000, so that the net outlay for the Library is about $520,000 per annum.

In addition, there is, however, the expense for printing and binding, for which the annual allotment has been about $200,000.

The Government Printing Office has a branch office in the Library, and the cost goes to the printing bill, but it is really for the Library.

The cost of the land and building was about $7,000,000, which is only half the cost of a battleship in the days when the Library was built, and only a third of the cost of a battleship at the present time.

The annual expenditure is about equal to the cost of the upkeep of a modern battleship. In 15 years a battleship goes to the scrap heap.

The amount annually spent for books and other material for collections is about $98,000. This barely suffices for the ordinary material, ordinary in form.

A single American collector, Henry Huntington, has during the past 15 years spent over $10,000,000 in purchases for his private collection. There is not a book in this collection which should not be in the National Library of the United States, but the funds of the Library do not permit competition for the rarer material, even Americana.

The reference department alone of the New York Public Library, Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue, expends about $750,000 annually. The branches cost $840,000 more for the Borough of Manhattan alone. The New York Public Library has income-producing endowments of over $14,000,000. The Library of Congress has only one endowment, the Hubbard fund, amounting to $20,000.

NEEDS.

1. Additional shelving.

A bookstack is needed to occupy the northeast courtyard. Provision for it has been included in the estimates for each of the past four years. Apparently approved in principle, action has been deferred (1) because of the war, (2) because costs are still high.

The collections must grow indefinitely and the accommodation for them is necessary. After the northeast stack an addition to the rear, possibly, or preferably an auxiliary building on the block to the eastward with tunnel connection.

2. Additional expert service.

3. A salary scale sufficient to secure and retain competent experts as against the competition of—

(1) Other Government establishments.
(2) Universities and colleges.
(3) Other research corporations.
(4) Business.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. FESS. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have his time extended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. I do not want to close without a final statement of the Government's possibilities in research service. This Library is a complete satisfaction to the perturbed soul of the scholarly Edward Everett, who years ago exclaimed "Who can see without shame that the Federal Government of America is the only Government in the civilized world that has never founded a literary institution of any description or sort?" The answer to that cry is the world's finest research center.

TWO MORE STEPS NECESSARY.

To complete the scheme of housing the Government's records steps have already been taken to erect a modern archives building. The necessity of this building has long been apparent, and its location and erection will doubtless take place in the near future. The universal approval is evidenced by the unanimous action of the House creating a commission with authority to proceed to select a site. Further procedure was interrupted by the war.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. One other step is necessary to make the largest use of the Capital as the world's greatest center for scholarship—a national university as a research institution to utilize the vast library sources and the laboratory facilities connected with the various departments of the Government, rich beyond those of any other country on the globe.

Mr. Speaker, these two additional steps are necessary to fulfill the dream of the devotees of learning. They would at once give this Capital the first rank of all capitals as the world's greatest intellectual center—a Mecca to which the scholars of the future will come to add to the sum total of knowledge. This consummation is easily within our reach. [Applause.]

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and (with the accompanying report) ordered to be printed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The call is with the Committee on Military Affairs.

LESSEES OF BUILDINGS AT CAMP FUNSTON.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 3706) authorizing the Secretary of War to make settlement with the lessees who erected buildings on a 5-year lease on the zone at Camp Funston, Kans., and for other purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. The House goes into the Committee of the Whole automatically, does it not?

The SPEAKER. Surely.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is much opposition to this bill, and that a great many of the Members are absent, I thought those facts would influence the gentleman from Wyoming not to bring this bill up to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. The general debate is not exhausted, and during the general debate the situation may be clarified. Gentlemen who are opposed to the bill may be strengthened in their opposition, or the opposition may fade.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to call the Members over who are interested in the opposition.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me we could go on with the general debate on the bill at least without demanding a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. In view of the fact that there is strong opposition to the bill, I do not like to do it, but I feel compelled to insist on the presence of Members.

Mr. MONDELL. I trust the gentleman will not do that, because I shall be compelled to move a call of the House at this hour in the afternoon.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there are Members who are opposing this bill who ought to be here, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, in order that they may be here.

Mr. MONDELL. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH), there were—ayes 42, noes none.

Accordingly a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HICKS. I make the point that this is the regular order, ascertaining whether there is a quorum present or not.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. That the gentleman from Wyoming ought either to take steps to secure a quorum or he ought to do something else.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The result of the roll call has not yet been announced. On this vote 202 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, December 30, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 30, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we lift our hearts to Thee, the author of our liberties. Thou hast taught us in Thy Word that if we know the truth we shall be free. We seek the guidance and blessing of God as we face the ever-increasing responsibilities of life. As we come to the new year by the grace of our Lord we pray that Thou wilt endue us with such measure of that grace as that we may perform faithfully and well the duties that are upon us; that we may see our country in its rightful relationship to all nations; that we may see our people prosperous and happy; and that we may above all see the coming of the kingdom of Thy truth and righteousness among us and among all men. We ask it for Jesus' sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

MOUNT WEATHER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the commission composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of investigation into the suitability of the premises known as Mount Weather as a home for disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADJUDICATION OF CLAIMS.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the motion is put I would like to know the status of the unfinished business.

Mr. CURTIS. It is still the unfinished business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senate bill 3390, the nitrate bill, is still the unfinished business?

Mr. CURTIS. It is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Can we have an understanding that we may have the bill read when the unfinished business comes up and that an opportunity will be given for anyone to speak on it to-day before adjournment?

Mr. CURTIS. That is perfectly agreeable.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I would like to be heard on the motion for a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the motion debatable?

Mr. ASHURST. I think it is.

Mr. CURTIS. I will withdraw the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. CURTIS subsequently said: I renew the motion made a few moments ago that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the motion debatable?

Mr. CURTIS. It is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thought it was not.

Mr. ASHURST. It is a fact that the Senate rules provide that the motion is not debatable, but I ask the Senate and the Chair to grant me a moment's time to explain why I intended to object to the motion to adjourn until Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion had better be withdrawn.

Mr. CURTIS. I will withdraw the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn, and the Senator from Arizona is recognized.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. ASHURST. On the 13th of this month the Senate passed a bill proposing to grant an extension of time, to wit, until July 1 of next year, within which to perform the assessment work or representation work on unpatented mining claims for this present year. In other words, the bill extends the time six months within which this year's work must be done. The bill passed the House and is now with the President, and has been with him for some days. If the President should veto the same or should fail to sign the same before to-morrow night, such circumstance would precipitate great financial loss and protracted litigation amongst thousands of mining men, miners, and prospectors in the West.

If the President should veto the bill I had hoped that the two Houses of Congress would remain in session so that they might pass the same, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding; but I have been informed that it will be impossible to get a quorum to-morrow, hence it would be useless for me to object to the motion or to vote against the motion to adjourn until Monday. I can only therefore express the hope that the President will sign the bill to-day or at least to-morrow, as to-morrow is the last day when Executive approval may afford relief to mine owners and prospectors. I thank the Senate for permission to make the explanation.

Br. BORAH. Mr. President, I quite agree with the view expressed by the Senator from Arizona as to the injury which would follow should the bill to which he refers ultimately fail of passage. I have not, however, entertained any doubt about the fact that it would become a law. I have no reason to believe that the President will veto it. I join with the Senator, however, in the expression of the view that it would be unfortunate if the bill should not ultimately become a law.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I have surrendered the floor. I have been indulged long enough.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I am very greatly interested in the bill referred to by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and in its becoming a law. I know of no reason why the President should veto the bill, and I have every reason to believe that the bill will become a law some time to-morrow if not to-day. It not only will affect mining men in the United States but also in Alaska, and it will affect them very seriously, too.

The bill was intended to grant those men the opportunity of doing the mining assessment work for 1920 and 1921 in the spring of 1921, so as to save expense. It seems to me that it is a meritorious measure and should become a law before to-morrow night.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, unfortunately there are two sides to every question, and this one is not an exception. I am in receipt of numerous letters and telegrams protesting against the passage of the bill which is referred to, many of them coming from miners who are out of employment, who say that if the law which the bill proposes to suspend is not suspended they can make a hundred dollars upon each of these claims by performing the work which the statute requires. I shall, therefore, with some philosophy feel resigned to the inability of the President to approve the measure.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from Colorado is opposed to the bill?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I am not opposed to it in the sense that I would try to defeat it. I do know, however—and the Senator from Arizona knows—that large areas of the public domain in the West are held by men under mining locations who do not patent their claims, because when patented they have to pay taxes upon them. If they can get out of doing the required statutory work by appealing to an easy Congress, which yields to them as it does to every other class that seems to be potential and powerful or influential, why not entirely repeal the law?

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator from Colorado will moderate his opposition to the bill so as to refrain from personally visiting the White House and refrain from personally urging the President to veto the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, Mr. President, the precedent which has been set by my friend from Arizona will not be followed by me. [Laughter.] I leave that to him and to Miss Alice Paul and to the representatives of the "Irish republic," who, I understand, are circling the White House every evening.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether, in view of the fact that the bill only extends and does not suspend the requirements of the annual assessment work, it should not become a law?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I know that it will be again suspended in July.

Mr. ASHURST. No; it will not.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly, it will. We began to suspend the law along in 1893; we set the precedent then, and we have been either suspending the law or temporarily repealing it ever since.

Mr. HENDERSON. We can talk about that in July next, but the condition sought to be relieved is one which confronts us immediately.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Nevada and I will not be here to talk about it in July.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CURTIS. If there is to be no further debate, in reference to the bill, I renew my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas that when the Senate adjourns it stand adjourned until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

THE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. NORRIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 414), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

CLAIMS AGAINST GERMAN GOVERNMENT.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 415), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a full and complete statement of all claims and the amount of each filed with the State Department by American citizens against the German Government since August, 1914. Also the names of the claimants, together with all facts in possession of the State Department relating to said claims, the nature and character of the same, and all evidence bearing upon their validity and merits.

RELIEF WORK IN CENTRAL AND EASTERN EUROPE.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I submit a concurrent resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 35) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas it has come to the attention of the American Congress that as a result of devastation of the World War, the countries of Central and Eastern Europe were so grievously afflicted that they have not as yet found themselves able to adjust economic conditions so as to provide the necessities of life for their millions of population; and

Whereas it has been established upon such authority that can not be gainsaid that their population is being decimated by death through lack of proper foods and medicines, and that now millions of their people, including not less than three and a half millions of little children, within these countries are in destitute circumstances; and

Whereas the responsibility of raising and administering $35,000,000 for the relief of these people has been undertaken by American relief organization known as the European Relief Council, with Herbert Hoover, chairman, and Franklin K. Lane, treasurer, and which represents the following well-known organizations, themselves in charge of responsible citizens: American Relief Administration, American Red Cross, American Friends' Service Committee (Quakers), Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, Knights of Columbus, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association; and

Whereas through a cooperative arrangement between the Governments of which the stricken people are a part and the relief organization referred to, the populations can be cared for and the lives of millions saved; and

Whereas this organization is administering the raising and distribution of funds in such manner that not a single dollar contributed to the fund is deducted therefrom for the expense of maintaining the organization or for any purpose other than that of extending relief to the stricken people: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Government of the United States officially indorses the relief work undertaken by the European Relief Council and earnestly calls upon the people of the United States to contribute out of their substance to the humanitarian activities of such organization.

INAUGURAL EXPENDITURES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any further morning business?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before proceeding to further business, as I see one or two members of the Appropriations Committee are present, I desire now, as a matter of information, to learn what procedure is adopted and by what means and methods we appropriate money for the inauguration of the President elect. I am unable to find, from my investigation, any other practice than that of expending whatever the Joint Inaugural Committee sees fit to expend, and then the Appropriations Committee taking care of it. I am informed that four years ago we appropriated $70,000, and I understand that this year the expenditure is expected to reach $100,000.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Idaho has reference to the newspaper reports of the probable expenditure of $100,000, I desire to say that that is the amount which has been collected by the people of the District. That money, however, is expended not around the Capitol but for all of the activities of the inaugural day away from the Capitol.

Mr. BORAH. I do not have reference to the amount which the citizens are raising; that is a matter which I have no desire to discuss; I should be glad to see them contribute any amount that they desire to contribute; but what I am interested in is to ascertain whether the Congress appropriates for the occasion? Is the money put in the form of an estimate, to begin with, or does the committee simply go ahead and make the expenditures and then Congress pay whatever the sum of those expenditures may be?

Mr. SMOOT. Always in the past the work has been proceeded with, and, when the bills were all in, the appropriation has been provided.

Mr. BORAH. Does the committee which has charge of the inauguration also have charge of the amount which is to be expended?

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is under the jurisdiction of a separate committee; but the Appropriations Committee provides for the money. I can not say to the Senator how much the amount will be nor do I think the committee having the matter in charge can do so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I may be mistaken, but it is my recollection that we have always heretofore passed a joint resolution authorizing the expenditure of a certain amount of money for inaugural purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think any specific amount has been named in such joint resolutions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. My recollection is that the sum appropriated heretofore has been $35,000, but I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. SMOOT. We have already at the present session passed a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to take charge of the inaugural ceremonies. The resolution was passed about a week or 10 days ago.

Mr. BORAH. As I recall, neither that joint resolution nor any of the similar joint resolutions previously passed specified any amount at all, but merely gave a blanket authority, which I think is very bad practice.

I call attention to this subject because I think there ought to be some limit upon the amount which we are going to expend at the beginning of this administration, pledged as it is to economy, and if some one else does not take charge of the matter, who is better fitted to do so, and who is connected with the Appropriations Committee, I shall attempt in the beginning of the next week to put a limit on these expenditures.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, would it not be a good idea to hark back to "Jeffersonian simplicity" a little at this time?

Mr. BORAH. So far as I am concerned, I should like to limit the amount to be expended to $10, which would be enough to pay the presidential automobile fare to the Capitol and back.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I take it that the expenses in connection with erecting stands, and so forth, down town will be borne by the citizens' committee?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. NELSON. The expenses of the joint committee, so far as we know at present, relate to the construction of the platform in front of the Capitol Building for the inaugural ceremonies. The committee instructed the Superintendent of the Capitol to accept the lowest bid, which was about 30 per cent higher than the bid received for doing the same work four years ago. Beyond that the committee have taken no action. We hope to be able to obtain the use of some of the surplus Government buildings here, if there are any, for the occupancy of militia organizations and soldiers who may come here to attend the inauguration. There certainly, however, ought to be some definite appropriation made for these purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that there ought to be a definite amount stated?

Mr. NELSON. I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say that at no time has there been paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate any sum to house different organizations coming from the various States during the inauguration of a President.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Utah will allow me to correct him, the purpose of the committee was to investigate and ascertain what public buildings here could be utilized for such purposes without incurring any expense.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator's statement is in accord with what I said. The building commission have applications now—I can not say from how many organizations, but from many organizations outside of the District—for housing purposes amounting to scores, I will say. As chairman of the commission, I asked Col. Woods to see the owner of the building known as the Liberty Hut, on the Union Station Plaza, with the idea of having that building remain intact, it having come to the knowledge of the commission that it was contemplated to demolish and remove it before March 4. Col. Woods has not yet reported as to whether that can be done; but I will say to the Senator that every available space in the Government buildings, including even the isles in some of our main buildings, in the past has been used for sleeping purposes by organizations coming from the different States. That will have to be done again, but no money has been appropriated for that expense in the past, and no doubt there will be none for the approaching inauguration.

Mr. NELSON. Let me ask the Senator a question in connection with that matter. Is any resolution of Congress necessary to authorize the occupation of the buildings to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the building commission has that power under the law now, I think.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will yield, I desire to ask, has the building commission power to authorize the use of any building where it will involve inconvenience to the employees or a vacation of any portion of such building by Government employees now housed therein?

Mr. SMOOT. No; they have not.

I will say to the Senator from Idaho that the joint resolution which was passed by the Senate on December 8 reads as follows:

That a joint committee consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next.

That is an exact copy of the joint resolution that is generally passed on such occasions. Then, the expenses that have been incurred under such joint resolutions have been paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and the House jointly.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the Senator from Minnesota is chairman of the joint committee?

Mr. NELSON. I am a member of that committee. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] is chairman of that committee.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Minnesota, however, is on the committee?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether it is the understanding that if permission is granted for the holding of the inaugural ball at the Pension Building legislation will be required for that purpose?

Mr. NELSON. We have nothing to do with that. The Committee on Rules have no more to do with that than the Emperor of China. It is wholly a private affair of the citizens of Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the inaugural ball, if held in the Pension Building, will be under the direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia; and in the past, whenever it has been held there, that committee have applied to Congress for the passage of legislation authorizing them to hold it in that building.

Mr. LENROOT. One other question. That has always cost twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars, as a matter of fact, has it not?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not state offhand just what it has cost. I know it has cost a good deal of money.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption there, in reality it has cost much more than twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars, because it means that all the furniture of the building must be moved out and stored, and then moved back in; so that it is not only a question of the cost of moving it out and moving it back, but practically everybody employed in the building stops work, although the pay goes on, during all that time.

Mr. BORAH. So far as I have been able to ascertain there is now no way of determining how much we are going to spend. We shall have to determine that next week.

AMENDMENT OF CLAYTON ACT—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 349).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith without my signature Senate bill No. 4526, amending section 501 of the transportation act by extending the effective date of section 10 of the Clayton Act.

The Clayton Antitrust Act was responsive to recommendations which I made to the Congress on December 2, 1913, and January 20, 1914, on the subject of legislation regarding the very difficult and intricate matter of trusts and monopolies. In speaking of the changes which opinion deliberately sanctions and for which business waits, I observed:

"It waits with acquiescence, in the first place, for laws which will effectually prohibit and prevent such interlockings of the personnel of the directorates of great corporations—banks and railroads, industrial, commercial, and public-service bodies—as in effect result in making those who borrow and those who lend practically one and the same, those who sell and those who buy but the same persons trading with one another under different names and in different combinations, and those who affect to compete in fact partners and masters of some whole field of business. Sufficient time should be allowed, of course, in which to effect these changes of organization without inconvenience or confusion."

This particular recommendation is reflected in section 10 of the Clayton Antitrust Act. That act became law on October 15, 1914, and it was provided that section 10 should not become effective until two years after that date, in order that the carriers and others affected might be able to adjust their affairs so that no inconvenience or confusion might result from the enforcement of its provisions. Further extensions of time, amounting in all to more than four years and two months, have since been made. These were in part due to the intervention of Federal control, but 10 months have now elapsed since the resumption of private operation. In all, over six years have elapsed since this enactment was put upon the statute book, so that all interests concerned have had long and ample notice of the obligations it imposes.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has adopted rules responsive to the requirements of section 10. In deferring the effective date of section 10 the Congress has excepted corporations organized after January 12, 1918, and as to such corporations the commission's rules are now in effect. Therefore it appears that the necessary preliminary steps have long since been taken to put section 10 into effect, and the practical question now to be decided is whether the partial application of those rules shall be continued until January 1, 1922, or whether their application shall now become general, thus bringing under them all common carriers engaged in commerce and at last giving full effect to this important feature of the act of October 15, 1914.

The grounds upon which further extension of time is asked, in addition to the six years and more that have already elapsed, have been stated as follows:

"That the carrying into effect of the existing provisions of section 10 will result in needless expenditures on the part of carriers in many instances; that some of its provisions are unworkable; and that the changed status of the carriers and the enactment of the transportation act require a revision of section 10 in order to make it consistent with provisions of the transportation act."

When it is considered that the Congress is now in session and can readily adopt suitable amendments if they shall be found to be necessary, such reasons for further delay appear to me to be inadequate. The soundness of the principle embodied in section 10 appears to be generally admitted. The wholesome effects which its application was intended to produce should no longer be withheld from the public and from the common carriers immediately concerned, for whose protection it was particularly designed.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
30 December, 1920.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask what becomes of the message—whether it lies on the table, or is to be referred to a committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is looking at the Constitution. The Constitution provides that—

Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it.

The Chair has an impression that it is the duty of the Senate to reconsider it immediately, unless by motion or otherwise it shall postpone the reconsideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Would not a motion to send it to a committee be in order at this time? Would not that be considered as proceeding to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rise for an inquiry. Is this a veto of a bill, or is it merely a suggestion by the President as to pending legislation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is a veto.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is manifestly a veto of the bill. It is returned with the usual phraseology which is attached to a veto, in which the President states that he withholds his signature from this bill.

Mr. KING. I have just returned to the Chamber, and I rose for information.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it is the desire of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the veto message at this time, I will say that as a member of the committee I have no objection. I do not know how other members of the committee may feel about it, nor do I know whether we have a quorum in attendance upon the Senate at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think the opinions of the present occupant of the chair are in accord with those of former occupants of the chair. He thinks these bills have been sent to committees after veto, and that delay has taken place in the consideration of the veto. Without trying to overrule the opinions of former presiding officers, the Chair is clearly of the opinion that under the Constitution it is the business of the Senate to consider this question—not to send it to a committee at all, but to determine whether it wants to pass the bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President, or whether it does not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the veto message and the bill may lie on the table, to be taken up at the convenience of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, in relation to the bill which the Congress passed extending the effective date of section 10 of the Clayton Act, I think it is fair to say that it has been extended at least twice before except as to corporations organized after January 12, 1918. That extension, as I recollect, has always been recommended by the Interstate Commerce Committee or the Judiciary Committee on the recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission itself, resulting from conditions growing out of the war and subsequent to the war.

Since the last session of Congress, or during the session, the commission informally—I do not remember whether by a communication or not—recommended that the Committee on Interstate Commerce should take up the subject of making some amendments to section 10 of the Clayton Act, not repealing it or doing away with the principle, but making some amendments to make it workable, preserving its main features. On the recommendation of the commission—certainly on the recommendation of the chairman of the committee on legislative matters—the committee reported this bill for an extension in order to give the Congress a chance at this session to consider that subject; and I know that the chairman of the committee intended to hold hearings on the subject as soon as he was able to get back, and to hear the Interstate Commerce Commission and all parties interested. So that it was not, so far as I know, the intention of the committee or of anyone else to repeal section 10, but simply to give an opportunity for consideration, and that opportunity did not exist during the last session of Congress.

So far as I know, that is the fact in connection with the action of the committee and of the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed.

ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the bill may be read at length.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to designate any five persons to act as an organization committee for the purpose of organizing a corporation under authority of and for the purposes enumerated in this act.

ORGANIZATION.

The persons so designated shall, under their seals, make an organization certificate, which shall specifically state the name of the corporation to be organized, the place in which its principal office is to be located, the amount of capital stock, and the number of shares into which the same is divided, and the fact that the certificate is made to enable the corporation formed to avail itself of the advantages of this act. The name of such corporation shall be United States Fixed-Nitrogen Corporation.

The said organization certificate shall be acknowledged before a judge of some court of record or notary public, and shall be, together with acknowledgment thereof, authenticated by the seal of such notary or court, transmitted to the Secretary of War, who shall file, record, and carefully preserve the same in his office. Upon the filing of such certificate with the Secretary of War as aforesaid, the said corporation shall become a body corporate and as such, and in the name United States Fixed-Nitrogen Corporation, shall have power—

First, to adopt and use a corporate seal;

Second, to have succession for a period of 20 years from its organization, unless it is sooner dissolved by an act of Congress, or unless its franchise becomes forfeited by some violation of law;

Third, to make contracts;

Fourth, to sue and be sued, complain, and defend in any court of law or equity;

Fifth, to appoint by its board of directors such officers and employees as are not otherwise provided for in this act; to define their duties, to fix their salaries, in its discretion to require bonds of any of them, and to fix the penalty thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure any of such officers or employees;

Sixth, to prescribe by its board of directors by-laws not inconsistent with law regulating the manner in which its general business may be conducted and the privileges granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed;

Seventh, to exercise by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents all powers specifically granted by the provisions of this act and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business for which it is incorporated within the limitations prescribed by this act, but such corporation shall transact no business except such as is incidental and necessary preliminary to its organization until it has been authorized by the Secretary of War to commence business under the provisions of this act.

The corporation shall be conducted under the supervision and control of a board of directors, consisting of not less than 3 nor more than 11 members, to be appointed by the Secretary of War. The directors so appointed shall hold office at the pleasure of the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War shall be ex officio chairman of the board and shall have power to designate one of the directors as vice chairman. The vice chairman shall perform the duties of chairman in the absence of the Secretary of War.

The board of directors shall perform the duties usually appertaining to the office of directors of private corporations and such other duties as are prescribed by law.

POWERS OF THE CORPORATION.

The corporation shall have power—

(a) To purchase, acquire, operate, and develop in the manner prescribed by this act and subject to the limitations and restrictions thereof the following properties owned by the United States:

1. United States nitrate fixation plants Nos. 1 and 2, located, respectively, at Sheffield, Ala., and Muscle Shoals, Ala., together with (a) all real estate used in connection therewith; (b) all tools, machinery, equipment, accessories, and materials thereunto belonging; (c) all laboratories and plants used as auxiliaries thereto, including the fixed-nitrogen research laboratory at Washington, the Waco limestone quarry in Alabama, the electric power unit at the Warrior River station of the Alabama Power Co., and transmission lines, and any others used as auxiliaries of the United States fixed-nitrogen plants Nos. 1 and 2.

2. Any other plants or parts of plant, equipment, accessories, or other properties belonging to the United States, which are under the direct control of the President or of the War Department, and which the President or the Secretary of War may deem it advisable to transfer, convey, or deliver to said corporation for use in connection with any of the purposes of this act, or for any purpose incidental thereto.

(b) To acquire, establish, maintain, and operate such other laboratories and experimental plants as may be deemed necessary or advisable to assist it in furnishing to the United States Government and others, at all times, nitrogen products for military or other purposes in the most economical manner and of the highest standard of efficiency.

(c) To sell to the United States such nitrogen products as may be manufactured by said corporation for military or other purposes.

(d) To sell any or all of its products not required by the United States to producers or users of fertilizers or to others.

(e) By direction of the President, to act as his agent in carrying out and performing any or all of the duties imposed upon him by section 124 of the act of June 3, 1916, known as the national defense act, including, after its completion, the operation of the hydroelectric power plant now being constructed at Muscle Shoals, and the use and sale of the hydroelectric power to be developed under authority of the act of June 3, 1916, aforesaid, and the President is authorized, in his discretion, to delegate to the corporation any and all powers and duties conferred or imposed upon him by said act which relate to the production, development, or manufacture of atmospheric nitrogen products, or which are incidental thereto, and to pay into the treasury of said company any unexpended balance out of the appropriation made by section 124 of the act of June 3, 1916, such funds to be used by the corporation for the purpose of said act as amended by this act.

(f) To enter into such agreements and reciprocal relations with others as may be deemed necessary or desirable to facilitate the production and sale of nitrogen products on the most scientific and economical basis.

(g) To purchase, lease, or otherwise acquire United States or foreign patents and processes or the right to use such patents and processes.

(h) To obtain from the United States or from foreign Governments patents for discoveries or inventions of its officers and employees, and, in the discretion of its board of directors, to require any and all of its officers and employees as a condition of their employment to enter into agreements with the company that the patents for all such discoveries or inventions shall be and become in whole or in part the property of the corporation.

(i) To assume any or all obligations of the United States entered into in connection with the construction, maintenance, and operation of the plants to be transferred to the corporation under the provisions of this act.

(j) To deposit its funds in any Federal reserve bank or with any member bank of the Federal reserve system.

(k) To sell and export any of its surplus products not purchased by the United States or by persons, firms, or corporations within the United States.

(l) To invest any surplus of available funds not immediately used for the operation, construction, or maintenance of its plants or properties in United States bonds or other securities issued by the United States.

(m) To lease or purchase such buildings or properties as may be deemed necessary or advisable for the administration of the affairs of the corporation or for carrying out the purposes of this act; and with the approval of the Secretary of War to lease to other persons, firms, or corporations any of its properties not used or needed by the corporation, or to enter into agreements with others for the operation of such properties. In the operation, maintenance, and development of the plants purchased or acquired under this act the corporation shall be free from the limitations or restrictions imposed by the act of June 3, 1916, and shall be subject only to the limitations and restrictions of this act.

CAPITAL STOCK.

The capital stock of the corporation shall be divided into two classes, to be known as common and preferred. The common stock shall be without par value. The company shall have no power to issue stock except that issued to the United States under authority of this act.

In exchange for the properties purchased or acquired from the United States and from time to time transferred, conveyed, or delivered to the corporation by the President or by the Secretary of War, as provided by this act, the corporation shall cause to be executed and delivered to the Secretary of War a certificate for all of the common stock of the corporation, which certificate shall be evidence of the ownership of the United States of all such common stock. In consideration of the issuance of such common stock to the Secretary of War, the President and the Secretary of War are authorized and empowered to transfer, convey, and deliver to the corporation all of the real estate, buildings, tools, equipment, supplies, and other properties belonging to, used by, or appertaining to the plants and properties to be acquired by the corporation under the terms of this act, and to transfer, convey, and deliver as and when they may deem it advisable any other equipment, accessories, plants, or parts of plants or other property referred to in this act and which the corporation is authorized to acquire or purchase from the United States under its provisions.

The President or the Secretary of War, as a condition of the transfer, conveyance, or delivery to the corporation of any property herein referred to, may require the corporation to assume any and all agreements and obligations entered into by the United States in connection with the construction, maintenance, or operation of such plants or other property.

The corporation shall have the power to issue and sell preferred stock in any amount not to exceed $12,500,000, of a par value of $100 per share, such stock to be entitled to 5 per cent dividends. All such stock shall be subscribed by the United States of America, and such subscription shall be subject to call upon the vote of the board of directors of the corporation with the approval of the Secretary of War at such time or times as may be deemed advisable, and there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of making payment upon such subscription when and as called.

Receipts or certificates for payment by the United States of America for or on account of such stock shall be issued by the corporation to the Secretary of War and shall be evidence of the stock ownership of the United States. The Secretary of War is authorized to use any funds now available for the completion of the construction and equipment of such United States nitrate plants, Nos. 1 and 2, and accessories, either after or before the conveyance and delivery of such properties to the corporation in accordance with the terms of this act.

DISTRIBUTION OF EARNINGS.

All net earnings of the corporation not required for its organization, operation, and development shall be used—

(a) To pay dividends on outstanding preferred stock, such dividends to be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts;

(b) To develop and improve its plants and equipment;

(c) To create a reserve or surplus fund until such fund amounts to $2,500,000;

(d) The remainder to be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Federal reserve banks shall be authorized to receive deposits of the corporation. The corporation shall not have power to mortgage or pledge its assets, or to issue bonds secured by any of its properties.

The United States shall not be liable beyond its stock subscription for any debts, obligations, or other liabilities of the corporation.

The corporation and all of its assets shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the United States and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation. The directors, officers, attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, agents, and other employees of the corporation shall not be officers or employees of the United States within the meaning of any statutes of the United States, and the property and moneys belonging to said corporation, acquired from the United States, or from others, shall not be deemed to be the property and moneys of the United States, within the meaning of any statutes of the United States.

The accounts of the corporation shall be audited under the regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, who shall include in his annual report to Congress a detailed statement of the fiscal operations of said corporation.

The Secretary of War may appoint any officer of the War Department or any other persoa as a director of the corporation, and under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War any officer of the War Department may serve as an officer or employee of the corporation, and may receive such compensation for services rendered to the corporation as the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of War, may prescribe.

If any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

The right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the morning business on Monday next I shall address the Senate on the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is fair for the Chair to state to the Senator from Kentucky that Monday is Calendar Monday, and also that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has given notice that he will address the Senate on that day at the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. STANLEY. Then I give notice that I shall address the Senate on Monday next when the unfinished business is taken up.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 3, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 30, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, whose goodness stands approved in a thousand blessings, new every morning, fresh every evening, let Thy spirit penetrate our minds and enlarge our conception of life and its vast responsibilities; that our work in the vineyard of humanity may bloom, blossom, and bear acceptable fruit unto Thee and unto our fellow men; that we may have lived and wrought and left behind us a record worthy of emulation; that the world may quicken its progress toward a better and higher civilization. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MILLER, for to-day, on account of official business.

To Mr. SWOPE, for three weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. KINCHELOE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. EAGAN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION.

Mr. MADDEN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 15441) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered printed.

Mr. HOLLAND. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia reserves all points of order on the bill.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 15422), and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided between the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be controlled equally by himself and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if he can give the House any information as to the program for the remainder of the week.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has been giving that matter more attention than I have. I had hoped that we could go on with the bill to-morrow, but I do not know whether that is in accord with the views of the gentleman from Wyoming or not.

Mr. MONDELL. I join in the hope just expressed by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARRETT. As far as I am informed I know of no objection to that.

Mr. MONDELL. And that we remain in session to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT. What about Saturday?

Mr. MONDELL. I think we should not be in session on Saturday.

Mr. GARRETT. Suppose the gentlemen arrange the matter at this time. Is there any reason why that should not be done?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Friday, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Friday it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, why is it not possible to give all Members of the House, as well as a few of them, the opportunity to use to-morrow for their own affairs? It is the day before New Year's. Lots of us have got to make our arrangements with the banks to carry us over for next year. [Laughter.] We have many other things to do. Some of the employees of the House are interested in having the day before New Year's as well as the Members who can go home on a few hours' notice. I think the gentleman ought to give us to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. They will have New Year's Day, and I think we should work up to that time.

Mr. BLANTON. It is suggested to me that the banks are all closed on New Year's Day, and that we will have to do what we do to-morrow. I do not want to make the point of no quorum to-morrow.

Mr. GARNER. Then do not do it.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to obstruct business, but I think the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Wyoming should be more considerate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming that when the House adjourn to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa that the time for general debate be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am having prepared some charts that will not be here for half an hour, and I shall, therefore, yield first to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] for 10 minutes.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up much of the time of the House, but I feel that it is my duty to make some remarks upon appropriations for "inland and coastwise waterways." The bill will be generally covered by the distinguished chairman of the committee, and my remarks will be brief and confined to this one subject, which will be found on page 65 of the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. What subcommittee of the present Committee on Appropriations handles that particular work?

Mr. MAGEE. The subcommittee on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. GARNER. And this is contained in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. MAGEE. At page 65.

Mr. GARNER. And that is the only appropriation you propose to make for that work this year?

Mr. MAGEE. That is the only subject that I am going to discuss now, and, so far as I know, this is the only proposed appropriation for such purposes.

The estimates submitted to the committee aggregate $6,924,350. The aggregate amount allowed is $1,250,000 for specific purposes, mainly for terminal facilities in several cities and for operation. The amount allowed for operation, $300,000, is, as I understand, to meet an estimated operating deficit.

I most heartily approve the cut made by the committee in the estimates, to wit, $5,674,350. However, I am opposed to making any appropriation in the premises. Operations by the Government upon certain inland waterways were begun under authority of the Federal control act of March 21, 1918, and such operations of vessels upon the Mississippi River, Black Warrior River, and the New York State Barge Canal have been continued by the War Department under provisions of the transportation act approved February 28, 1920.

In my judgment, whatever justification may have existed for such operations in time of war, there can be no justification for a continuance thereof in time of peace. [Applause.] Whatever improvements upon inland waterways have been made, or are being made, could most properly have remained under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The record of the Government in such operations has been, and promises to continue to be, only a series of large deficits and an inexcusable waste of public funds. For the year 1919 the operating deficit on the Mississippi-Warrior section was $740,782.59 and on the New York Barge Canal $160,718.21. For the year 1920 to October 1 the operating deficit on the Mississippi River was $522,994.61, on the Black Warrior River $267,817.79, and on the New York Barge Canal $86,837.96. The War Department estimates an operating deficit on these three waterways for the year 1922 of $424,285. In these deficits nothing in any case has been allowed for depreciation. In a statemen. filed by the War Department with the committee the item of depreciation in each of the three projects is estimated as follows: On Mississippi River section, $127,807.17; on Warrior River section, $97,068.14; and on the New York Barge Canal section, $170,000.

The committee was informed that the War Department expects that the time will come when the department can operate vessels upon these inland waterways at a profit. I do not concur at all in this Utopian expectation. It reminds me of an incident in a lawsuit that I once brought for one of my clients. The attorney for defendant moved for a change of venue upon numerous affidavits stating what he expected to prove by this or that witness. Upon the hearing of the motion the judge presiding finally became impatient and said to him:

If you have no other grounds for your motion except expectations, you had better quit now. Holding court is at public expense, and I will not permit you to waste the public funds upon expectations.

[Applause.]

While the people of the State of New York were entirely willing during the war that the Government should take control of their canal, they now demand, in time of peace, that their waterway be free from the blighting hand of governmental operation through the War Department. [Applause.] The Government is killing the canal, because private persons will not invest their money in the construction and operation of vessels upon the canal in competition with the Government. We are insistent that the Government stop at once the foolish business of wasting large amounts of public money in experimental operations upon our waterway.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman speaks of the Government killing the canal. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the Government helped to make the canal.

Mr. MAGEE. No; this is our waterway, built with our money.

Mr. BLANTON. And the Government has never spent any money on it at all?

Mr. MAGEE. Not any money except the moneys that have been wasted in the experimental operations that I am describing. This is our property. What we demand is that the Government save this money and not waste it on our public waterway. We demand that this waterway be restored to the State that constructed it and owns it. That is the united demand of my State, regardless of party affiliations.

Mr. BLANTON. Right in that connection I would like to ask the gentleman whether the waterways do not belong to the people—not, say, to Texas or to New York, or to some other State, but to the people of the United States? I refer to the waterways, generally speaking.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield me five minutes more.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MAGEE. My own idea is that our public waterways should be developed through private enterprise—encouraged, if you so desire, by the Government—but when you come to consider the inefficient work of the Government, through the War Department, in these operations that I have described, and which can not be denied, then, so far as I am concerned, I am against appropriating one cent of public money to be wasted in this manner.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I want to ask the gentleman a question for information. I saw the statement in a newspaper that the overhead charge of the Mississippi Barge Canal was $272,000 annually. Does the gentleman know whether that is correct or not?

Mr. MAGEE. The gentleman from Mississippi may not have been present when I gave the amounts of operating deficits.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But the gentleman did not mention the overhead charge. This article stated that the overhead charge was $272,000. I made inquiry, tried to get the facts from the authorities here, from the bureau, and they sent me a great book that probably some expert accountant might be able to go through and ascertain the facts; but, of course, if there is an overhead charge of $272,000 on the Barge Canal, there will always be a deficit. I imagine that would be about reasonable for such an institution as the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

Mr. MAGEE. The gentleman may find the figures which he desires in the record of the hearings.

We hear more or less talk about the reconstruction of the several bureaus and departments of the Government in the interest of efficiency and public economy. I most respectfully suggest that here is a splendid opportunity to test the good faith of those preaching efficiency and rigid economy in public expenditures by refusing to make appropriations of public funds for continuing a meddling governmental activity, whose only purpose of existence appears to be the squander of public money. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], who has charge of the time on the other side, is temporarily out of the room. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, what I have to say has been suggested by some remarks made by the speaker who just preceded me. Personally, I doubt very seriously if we can ever develop any transportation on the inland waterways of the country by having the Federal Government do it. I am one who has very little faith in the Federal Government doing any sort of private business in any except a thoroughly extravagant and inefficient way.

I have understood in a very general way—I do not know whether it is correct or not; I would not be responsible for the figures—that the overhead charge on the barge line on the Mississippi River, operated by the Government, is $272,000 annually. I asked for the information and was told that that was a mistake, and they sent me a great document, with about a million figures in it, which I do not understand. An expert accountant might have been able to dig out the facts, but I could not.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the volume of business which incurred this overhead charge of $272,000 amount to $272,000?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Probably it did, but I am not sure as to that. I think the volume is quite large. I was impressed with the figures $272,000. I do not believe the Government is going to attend efficiently to any business anywhere, much. It certainly is not making any demonstration in any line of properly private business, except that the Government will do it at tremendous cost. I am very much interested in the Mississippi River Barge Line. I hope it will be the forerunner of a revival of river traffic. If the overhead is as great as indicated, I fear that the bad financial showing will discourage private capital from investing, because it is certain that showing will be poor if this overhead is an evidence or indication of the kind of economy being practiced. I believe the experiment ought to continue, even at a loss, because if it does result in a renewal of the use of the river as a highway for commerce it will be worth much more than it costs.

But if we want to develop the commerce on the Mississippi River and other rivers it can be done, in my opinion, not by Congress making any more laws, but by Congress repealing some already on the statute books. Now, here is the situation. The Interstate Commerce Commission permits, or can permit, under the law as we have passed it, the railroad companies to give a preferential rate to a town that is located on a navigable river. We used to justify river and harbor appropriations in this way. Here is a river. We have potential competition. These towns have been given preferential railroad rates on the theory that the river furnishes potential competition. Therefore appropriations for the benefit of the navigation are justified because the people get the benefit of it in lower railroad rates even though they do not use the river. But now the Interstate Commerce Commission has decided that there must be actual competition or they will give no preferential railroad rates to a town on a watercourse. With this result, it is proposed that private enterprise put in a line of boats and do this business. Well, as soon as they do that they will create actual competition, and if they have actual competition then the Interstate Commerce Commission permits or can permit the railroad to cut the rate, and that puts the steamboats out of business. The result is that private enterprise will not engage——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Now, what does that all result in? Here is a town located on the bank of a navigable stream, yet we can not develop any navigation by boats because as soon as the private enterprise puts a boat in there they have actual competition and the railroad rate is lowered and the steamboat is put out of business. Therefore with this club hanging over them the people dare not use the river and the railroads can not under this rule give preferential rates, and so the railroads are the only people who get anything out of it. The rates are kept up because there is nothing but potential competition, and nobody is willing to invest any money to have actual competition because they fear as soon as actual competition exists the railroad rates will be lowered and destroy the enterprise.

Now, if we want to restore commerce to the rivers of the country, it can be done by forbidding the Interstate Commerce Commission—or taking from them the power—to give the railroad a preferential rate at the river towns. Then the people on the river can put the steamboat in and get the benefit of the river transportation with cheaper rates without a club hanging over their heads that as soon as they do that the Interstate Commerce Commission may permit the railroad to come in and reduce the rates and destroy them.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What public benefit is expected to be secured from the expenditure of the appropriations proposed in this bill?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I am not really familiar with that provision. But I think the people of New York ought to be permitted to have their own canal. They paid $150,000,000 or $160,000,000 for it; I think it is none of our business to be interfering with them.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the interstate commerce law also say that when the railroads do decrease the rates to meet competition on a river the railroads can not raise the rates again?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; it must be simply a fairly compensatory rate; that is all. That is my recollection of the law. They can make these preferential rates, but they must be fairly compensatory, and I would like to see the color of a man's eyes who can stand up in front of an expert railroad rate maker and prove this differential that they put in in order to put the steamboats out of business is not fairly compensatory. It is utterly impossible. There is no more technical science, if we may call it a science, than rate making, and any man who undertakes to stand up in front of experts will find himself worsted and chagrined, because they will produce figures you do not understand and can not answer; but we do understand that the steamboat may be put out of business as soon as the commission allows the railroad this discriminatory rate in favor of the river points.

Mr. DOREMUS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. DOREMUS. Is it the gentleman's understanding that in the presence of actual water competition the Interstate Commerce Commission will permit a rail rate lower than the water rate?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; but they will permit a rate, a differential, in favor of the water points by the railroads, provided only that it is fairly compensatory. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to say a few words this morning on the gold situation. The State of California is the largest gold-producing State in the Union, and produced more gold than any other State in the Union in 1919. Alaska comes next, Colorado third, South Dakota, Arizona, Montana, Utah, Oregon, and then Idaho. During 1918, 1919, and 1920 the gold-mining situation was serious. So many men were desired in the munition plants and shipbuilding plants that they left the mining districts for this work. Wages were higher in this field, and they have not returned. Of course, many of the soldier boys left, and they took more from these mining districts in proportion to the population than any other district in the Union, because there were many single men. Gold is the only one product in the United States that did not enhance in value or could not enhance in value during the war. Every other product, no matter what it was, raised from 10 to 1,000 per cent. The mining man's material, his labor, his powder, everything raised from 10 to 1,000 per cent, and that is a serious condition, a very serious situation.

From personal observation, in going over a part of Nevada and practically all the mining territory of California and southern Oregon and southern Idaho this summer, I found this to be the true situation. In the mining counties not only in the State of California but in every other State of the Union the last census shows a decrease instead of an increase where it ought to have been an increase had the mining increase been properly provided for and taken care of. There is a bill now before Congress known as H. R. 13201, and called the McFadden bill. That bill simply authorizes $10 per ounce for gold that is produced after the enactment of the law when the gold is used for mechanical purposes. There is no bill pending in this Congress that will do as much for this great interest of this country as that legislation. It simply requires that those who use this gold shall pay a reasonable price for it. They have been getting it at a nominal price, the standard price, but so far as all other charges are concerned—and you may look into every industry that has used gold during the last five years—they have made a raise in their price incommensurate with every other product, while as a matter of fact they pay less for every other product produced.

I want to read this article from the Calaveras Prospect, printed right in the mining region of California by C. W. Getchell, publisher and proprietor, a man who has lived there 40 years and who knows the situation and speaks from first-hand knowledge. I hope my Republican friends, who have control of the committees in this Congress, will see that this legislation is reported and passed before the 4th of March. The reasons are stated in this editorial, and they are so clear, and the language is so plain, and the points are so specific that I can present my case in no better shape than by reading it. It says:

THE M'FADDEN BILL.

It is now up to California and all gold-producing States to use every endeavor to secure the passage of the McFadden bill at this session of Congress. As concerns California at least there is no measure likely to come before Congress of such vital importance as this bill. With a revival of gold mining assured by the passage of this bill will come a prosperity that can and will offset most of the after-war problems that now beset us.

With the high cost of material and labor induced by war conditions, all low-grade propositions have virtually suspended operations. Four, five, and six dollar rock is no longer profitably mined, and only those mines especially well equipped and favorably located are able to handle anything showing these values. Hundreds of mines all along the gold-producing belt are now idle that contain vast ore bodies of low-grade ore, which only await the passage of this bill to resume active operation.

I want to add here that those statements are true, from personal observation and personal investigation upon the ground.

With the readjustment of wages that is bound to come in the near future, the rapidly lowering cost of material, and the promise of abundant water for power, the outlook was never better for a prosperous season for mining, provided the McFadden bill passes.

It becomes the duty now for every man interested in the prosperity of the State, whether or not he is directly interested in mining, to bring every influence in his power to bear to secure the passage of the bill at this session. The prosperity of the gold miner means the prosperity of the State, so that every citizen of the State has a direct interest in the bill. No matter how small your influence, if you think you can pull a pound, get in and pull it; if more than a pound, go to it for all you are worth. That is the only way to get things done. Don't let this bill lie over until the extra session. There will be too much to do then, and it is not likely to come to life again if passed over now. Now is the critical moment in mining, and this fact should be impressed on every Congressman from this State. Miners may starve to death while awaiting help. Time is the essential feature of this situation.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, what this able editor has said is true, and Congress ought to relieve the situation. Twice in the history of this country has California come to our relief and to the relief of the world in producing gold that we needed to maintain and stabilize our credit. It is no burden upon the Government; it is no special privilege granted to anyone; but you have fixed by your law the value of an ounce of gold and provided that it can not be raised or lowered, so far as the miner who produces it is concerned, in selling it to the market. Think of it, a great product like this, that means so much not only to California and the West but to every State in the Union and to the Federal Government!

I trust this bill will be reported out and passed early by the House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4682. An act to amend section 74 of the Judicial Code as amended.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I asked the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] whether or not when a railroad decreased its rates for the purpose of meeting the competition of a steamboat line it would then have the power to increase it again if that competition ceased to exist, and he said no. In further answer thereto I beg to say that I find in section 406, subsection 4, paragraph 2, that:

Section 4 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(2) Whenever a carrier by railroad shall in competition with a water route or routes reduce their rates on the carriage of any species of freight to or from competitive points it shall not be permitted to increase such rates unless, after hearing by the commission, it shall be found that such proposed increase rests upon changed conditions other than the elimination of water competition."

I think this section establishes the correctness of my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in presenting the sundry civil bill in the last session of Congress I perhaps used a word that led to some little criticism. I hope it led to no hard feelings. I used the word "saving" in connection with the action of the committee in reducing appropriations, and it was contended earnestly by my friends on the other side of the aisle that I should have used the word "reduction." I had assumed that when a department asked for a given sum of money, they asked for it with the intention of spending it, and my experience has been that as a general rule when a department is given an appropriation it does spend it, and if it is not given the appropriation the department can not spend it, and that therefore by reducing the amount asked for we had effected a real saving. But the term "saving," it seems, is very obnoxious to some people. They do not like it, and inasmuch as the present administration has not distinguished itself along the line, I can see now some effect to the use of the word "saving" in connection with the administration of governmental affairs. So in presenting this bill I am going to use the word "reduction" in appropriations, and shall refrain from using the word "saving," so that there can be no misunderstanding or hard feelings on the part of anyone.

The total amount of the department estimates in this bill were over $805,000,000—$803,000,000 originally, with some supplemental estimates.

The total amount carried in the bill is in round numbers $383,000,000. This is quite a reduction over the current law, but it is also a substantial increase over the appropriations that were granted for the year 1916, for example. When, however, you recall the fact that of the $383,000,000 carried in the bill there is $223,000,000 for three distinct services, growing directly out of the late war, namely, compensation to the discharged soldiers, vocational training for the discharged soldiers, and hospitalization for those soldiers, you will see at once that the increase is not excessive. If we subtract the $223,000,000 growing out of the war from the $383,000,000 carried in the bill, we have then for those activities that we appropriated for during the year 1916, $160,000,000, as compared with an appropriation of $126,000,000 appropriated for the year ended June 30, 1916.

That increase is large. It is quite a substantial increase. It is an increase that is out of all proportion to our increase in population or our increase in wealth since 1916; but when we recall how prices have gone up and up since 1916, and when we also recall the fact that wages have been advancing very materially since that time, and that the Government of the United States must go into the same market that everyone else goes into when it wants either labor or material, I think you will agree with me that the amount of the increase is very moderate, indeed. In fact, it was found necessary to say no, no, no, to a great many worthy objects in order to bring about this reduction. The committee in reporting this bill has not done many of the things that it would like to do. It is easy to say yes to everybody who knocks at the door of the committee and asks for appropriations of money out of the Federal Treasury. It is an easy and comfortable thing to agree with the Members of Congress, members of the Cabinet, and heads of departments and bureaus who come to you and want this appropriation and that appropriation. And yet, if the demands of every Member of Congress in that respect with regard to activities in his district were reflected in the appropriation bill, then instead of reporting a bill of $383,000,000 it would be necessary to increase this appropriation by more than $300,000,000, because you must remember that every dollar of this appropriation, except the comparatively small amount that is expended in the District of Columbia, in the Hawaiian Islands, in the Panama Canal Zone, and the Philippines, is expended in the congressional district of some Member of this House.

It has been necessary to stop certain activities. It has been necessary to say to some of the Government departments that were expecting to engage upon large building programs that because of a shortage of houses all over the country the Government of the United States ought not to think of building permanent buildings or monuments, the construction of which could well afford to be postponed until a more opportune time.

There are places in the United States where public buildings are sorely needed. There are other places in the United States where Congress has authorized the erection of public buildings, and where the buildings authorized have not yet been built and where no building for post-office facilities ought to be built for 25 years, and maybe never. Certainly in times like these the Government must conserve its resources. It must face actual conditions, and doing this it beholds many of our people oppressed by a load of taxation the like of which they have never been laboring under before. They are demanding that this load be made lighter, that taxes be substantially reduced. In such times we are brought face to face with a condition where we ought to stop, look, and listen before we vote money out of the Treasury when we do not know whether that money will be there to pay these appropriations or not. [Applause.]

This last year more than 4,000,000 people in the United States made an income-tax return showing a taxable income. It was not long ago that conditions were altogether different. The World War has brought a change; and, whether we like it or not, it is here, and we as business men must face it. In 1907, for example, without levying a single penny of direct taxes there was brought into the Treasury by a system of indirect taxation that did not affect industry, unless it was to stimulate its production, something like $850,000,000. There was expended that year about $740,000,000; and without levying a single penny of direct taxes we were able to discharge all of the obligations of the Government for that year and pay on the Nation's debt $111,000,000. As I have stated, last year 4,000,000 persons in the United States paid a direct tax to the Government, and the aggregate of such taxes amounted to almost $4,000,000,000. The Government's obligations are now so large that they must be met largely by direct taxes.

This debt, created because of the war, must be paid and the interest on Government obligations must be met as they mature. These are the first things that the Government must do, because its credit must be maintained at all hazards. Obligations already created must be discharged before we think of creating new ones.

But I would not have you believe that the Government of the United States is not a going concern. It is a going concern, and as compared with other Governments in the world it stands first in credit, first in international wealth, and, so far as the present indebtedness is concerned, it stands the lowest among the great nations of the world in its indebtedness as compared with wealth of its people.

When the World War began Great Britain proper—that is, the British Isles—had a national wealth of about $69,000,000,000. That was the value of all the banks and all the factories and farms and everything owned by the people of Great Britain. At the close of the war Great Britain had a national debt of more than $38,000,000,000, a debt equal to 60 per cent of the wealth of all the people of the British Isles before the war.

France had a national wealth before the war of $56,000,000,000. France closed the war with a national debt of more than $44,000,000,000. The interest on the debt of France will require every year more than $2,300,000,000.

Italy entered the war with a national wealth of less than $23,000,000,000. She closed the war with a national debt of more than $17,000,000,000.

We may, indeed, be thankful we are better circumstanced.

The United States to-day has a national wealth estimated at $240,000,000,000, and she has a national debt of approximately $24,000,000,000. In other words, the national debt is about 10 per cent of her national wealth. Notwithstanding this commanding position that the Government of the United States occupies in the financial world, yet our people feel the burden of excessive taxes necessary to pay the interest on it and to make some payment on the principal and to pay ordinary Government expenses. They feel this heavy load and they are demanding that Congress shall give them relief.

The Committee on Appropriations has been working along one line for some time in order to help give relief. The committee has contended that there can be no substantial reduction in taxation until there is a reduction in appropriations; that the reduction in expenses must precede a reduction of taxation.

In reporting this bill eliminating this year, as we did last year, practically all public buildings—and there is a great deal of public work along that line that ought to be done—until we know what the reconstruction policy of the United States will bring forth—and no man knows what it will be—the committee thought it best to wait until business generally has become more normal or stable. Personally I believe the prices are going to continue to go down and down, that labor in the United States is too high, and that we will not be able to compete in getting our portion of the world's trade unless we can employ labor at a reasonable and just wage. I do not believe wages will go where they were before the war or that they ought to, but I believe if prices are to be greatly reduced the labor that enters so largely into construction costs must be greatly lowered.

These are in part considerations that have been and are in the minds of every member of the Committee on Appropriations with regard to the bills we must report to the House. We receive from Members of the House every day the admonition to cut these appropriations. The admonition has come from the Democratic Members as well as the Republican Members.

I believe that this Congress is bent upon the accomplishment of one big thing, and that is to reduce the high cost of government in order that there may be a substantial reduction in taxes. [Applause.]

There are a good many items in this bill. I have had two charts prepared that will give you something of a picture of the appropriations. This chart deals with all the appropriations, while this on my left deals only with the sundry civil bill. The black line represents the appropriations that were made in the last Congress for this fiscal year. The red line represents the estimates of the executive departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and the green line represents the amounts as they have been reported thus far to date. The figures at the top represent in millions the amounts asked for or appropriated. In this bill there was asked for, as I have already stated, over $803,000,000. The bill carries $383,000,000, as against $435,000,000 for the current year.

To bring about that reduction it is necessary to eliminate entirely some of the big objects of the appropriation. There was one estimate, something like $50,000,000, for building military camps in the United States. The General Staff has agreed upon a building policy for permanent buildings. They desire to divide the United States into nine military areas and at some place in each area to start a building program and build permanent buildings. They asked for $50,000,000 for this year to start that program. It is the intention of the General Staff to abandon all the temporary buildings used for training purposes, to abandon all permanent Army posts, that have been built at an expenditure of many, many millions of dollars, and build new permanent buildings under this new plan, and to commence that building program at a time when the building prices are at the peak. The Committee on Appropriations does not attempt, in refusing to make this appropriation, to pass upon the military necessities of the case.

We have no opinion as to whether or not it is necessary under Army reorganization plans to do something along this line. But we do know that if that plan is to be adopted there is plenty of time in the future to adopt it and commence work upon it. Before there is an appropriation the Military Affairs Committee should look into the plan and make an authorization if it approves.

When Secretary Baker was asked how much it would take to complete the program he very frankly said he did not know, but finally when asked whether it would cost a billion dollars or more he was advised by one general who accompanied him that his opinion was that the cost would be somewhere about seven hundred million or eight hundred million dollars.

Until matters of that kind are more thoroughly discussed in Congress, until Congress has the opportunity that it could not possibly have at a short session, to discuss big problems like this, a problem that will involve the expenditure of an amount equal to one-thirtieth of the total national debt, it seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations—and this was the unanimous opinion of that committee—ought not to inaugurate such a building program at the present time. [Applause.] Therefore we have carried nothing for that purpose. If in the future Congress shall direct that something be done along this line, there will be ample time to commence a building program along lines finally agreed upon.

There is another item which has been omitted that we will hear much about before we conclude the bill. It is an item, I am frank to say, that has some merit and yet an item which I think under all of the circumstances ought to go over for a couple of months at least.

I refer now to the completion of the Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals. We have built two nitrate plants in that vicinity, one at Sheffield, Ala., costing, as I recollect, approximately $13,000,000, and one at Muscle Shoals, costing approximately $60,000,000. I shall not attempt to give the exact figures. The one at Muscle Shoals and also the one at Sheffield are operated, I think, by one large power plant. At least, the one at Muscle Shoals is operated by one of the largest steam plants in the United States, if not in the world. At Sheffield they may have a small steam plant, but I am not sure about that. The plan now is to complete the dam that was started and is in progress of completion at Muscle Shoals. The national defense act carried an appropriation of $20,000,000 for acquiring nitrate plants. Seventeen million dollars of that amount was allotted by the President, or whoever had charge of the allotment, and I think it was the President, for building the dam at Muscle Shoals. They have commenced to build the dam at the point where Jackson Island appears in the river. It was necessary to build four large cofferdams at an expense of approximately $400,000. Of the $17,000,000 that have been appropriated all will be spent, according to the statement of the officers, by the 30th day of May, 30 days before the end of this fiscal year. One of the cofferdams will have the cement and concrete placed in it. Three of the cofferdams will, to a greater or less extent, be exposed to high water, and if left for any great length of time they may be carried away.

The Government has also expended approximately $600,000, as I recall, in the building of a temporary bridge across the river at this point, on which are located four industrial railroad tracks. Those are constructed for the purpose of pouring cement into the cofferdams and into the main dam. It is said the dam will do three things: First, it will be an aid to navigation; second, that it will provide a cheap power with which to run the nitrate plants, in order that the Government may have a plant for a military supply of nitrates in time of war or when there is a threatened war; third, that it may have cheap nitrates for fertilization for the farmers in time of peace. Also that there will be an excess of power that can be sold to the industries and to municipalities within a radius of a few hundred miles of the place where the power is generated.

I have tried to make the statement of facts without any tinge as to how I personally feel with regard to the project. We did not in the hearings go into all the facts of the case, because, first, we did not have the time, and, secondly, we understood full hearings had been had before another committee. The Secretary of War stated that the Senate Committee on Agriculture had had very extensive and exhaustive hearings on this subject.

Those hearings were commenced on March 22, 1920, and the Secretary of War stated that the whole case was presented in those hearings and that it would be simply a repetition to call those witnesses again. The committee agreed with that, and, therefore, we have had to go over not only our recollection but to go to those hearings for information upon the subject.

I realize that if this dam is to be completed it will be necessary before the end of the year to take some action with regard to appropriations, because to stop work on a plant where between four and five thousand men are working, even for 30 days, would result in considerable loss to the Government. If we are to stop for 30 days, then there is a very strong argument why we should stop for a longer period, even though there might be considerable loss, so far as the washing out of the cofferdams or even the temporary bridge is concerned.

The work on the nitrate plants has not been very satisfactory. Plant No. 1 can not be said to be wholly a failure, but certainly no one can contend that it is a success.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will permit, I do not think that statement in quite as broad aspect as the gentleman has put it should be permitted to go unchallenged. At plant No. 1 there were a number of activities centered. My recollection is that the total cost of that plant was something between thirteen and fourteen million dollars. The only unit which was unsuccessful was the ammonia unit, in which they attempted to develop ammonia by the Haber process, and the cost of that unit was between five and six million dollars.

Mr. GOOD. I thank the gentleman. The fact remains, however, that in adopting the Haber process in plant No. 1, we failed to avail ourselves of the study which the Germans had made of that process, and tried to improve upon it. As I recall, we attempted to produce a sulphate of ammonia at that plant, or perhaps I would better use a broader term, because I get mixed in my chemistry in regard to these matters. We attempted to produce nitrates by a process using a lower temperature and more pressure.

As the gentleman knows, those are the two big elements that comprise the Haber process—a high temperature and great pressure. It was thought that by reducing the temperature and increasing the pressure a cost reduction would necessarily follow, but the result has been that they have not been able to successfully manufacture nitrate under the scheme they now have with the present facilities. They are now studying the matter here in the laboratory in Washington in an effort to perfect that system. I think that is correct.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman is correct about that. I merely meant to call attention to the fact that the ammonia part of plant No. 1 was only one of several activities that were centered there. The gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. GOOD. With regard to the necessity for this plant, and for making appropriations at this time, I can not but feel that a great blunder was made when the American Cyanamid Co. was given a free hand in the making of the plans for building plant No. 2, which is the large plant. I have forgotten whether it is the American Cyanamid Co. or the American Chemical Co., but the two were in very close relation and they, or one of them, prepared the plans and constructed this plant. Remember, one or the other of these companies which have been working very closely together has the patent rights for the Haber process.

The Haber process is covered by a great many letters patent, and these companies, or one of them, hold the letters patent. True, the basic patent was granted 17 years ago, but when this company was given the power to make the plans for this plant it made its plans for the manufacturing plant to fit in with its patents; and so every unit of the building, every piece of construction, everything that was done was done in order to turn out nitrates at plant No. 2 under the Haber process that is covered by these letters patent, and they receive royalties on every ton that they produce, $5 a ton royalty on cyanamid and $10.11 per ton on nitrates of ammonia. The royalties under the present contract for 100,000 tons of nitrates of ammonia, the estimated annual production, would be $2,200,000.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman tell the committee how much money will be required to complete the dam and nitrate plant and the length of time for its completion if the money is provided?

Mr. GOOD. To complete the whole project, if we are going to do the thing that is planned to do and follow it through? I assume that the gentleman means by his question how much will it cost to complete the dam that will aid in the navigation, and to build the other dams that will have to be built in order that navigation will be improved up to the coal fields and develop the country that gentlemen in that section want developed. It will be a considerable sum and will take several years.

Perhaps it is a very meritorious thing to develop the navigation of this great stream so that boats can go above the shoals; to do that, I take it from all the hearings that it would cost, in addition to what has been already appropriated, somewhere between sixty and one hundred million dollars. It is estimated now, I understand, just to build this dam and to build a lock and a power house and install the machinery, that it will cost $45,000,000. Now, the President allotted $17,000,000 for the work, so it will take about $33,000,000 to complete——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Twenty-eight million dollars.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; $28,000,000 to complete the dam.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. And when completed could we then compete successfully with Chilean nitrates?

Mr. GOOD. That, I think, is a very grave question. We have only the estimates of the Army engineers upon the question; we have had their estimates all along. Their estimates have been rather unreliable in respect to costs. I think they have done things in regard to this whole project that has in a way injured the project. One of the first things they did was to build a fine clubhouse for officers of the Army, and according to the pictures which were exhibited here they built a great many officers' quarters, permanent buildings for officers of the Army, long before there was any need for anything of that kind. Almost $2,000,000 has been expended for building officers' quarters and homes for workmen, which I understand is permanent. When you appropriate $10,000,000 here I do not know how much of that will be expended for carrying on activities of this kind. Certainly not a penny ought to be available for additional quarters for officers of the Army at this point. How much it will cost and whether or not it can be operated in a way that we can compete with Chilean nitrate and pay $10 a ton royalty in my judgment is a serious question.

I think that if we are not compelled to pay a royalty, from what I have read in these hearings, if the statements are to be relied upon, we could come well within the price that we have to pay for Chilean nitrates. If I recall correctly there were imported into the United States before the war some four or five hundred tons of Chilean nitrate a year. There is an export duty on Chilean nitrate. Just the minute that the United States commences to turn out nitrate in large quantities for fertilizer, if Chile wants to compete with the American manufacturer and to supply the needs of the agriculturists in America, and finds it will be necessary to reduce the export duty, of course that country would reduce it. After all, I do not know that the export of Chilean nitrate will be interfered with by this construction. The maximum, as I recall, of production would not be more than 100,000 tons a year. Possibly I am mistaken about that, but it is approximately 100,000 tons.

Mr. GARRETT. Is the gentleman referring to ammonia sulphate?

Mr. GOOD. To ammonia sulphate, not cyanamid.

Mr. GARRETT. The capacity would be the same as the capacity of ammonia, which is 110,000; but it is not the purpose to use all the units, as I understand, on the War Department plans, so the gentleman is probably correct, or he may be a little bit high.

Mr. GOOD. Now, as to the power to be developed. If these nitrate plants are to produce nitrogen to full capacity every year, I do not see how it is possible for the United States to do what the War Department contemplates in the sale of power, because, as I recall the facts in the case, the primary horsepower is only 200,000 horsepower that would be developed by the construction of this dam, and at some seasons of the year it falls greatly below that amount. My recollection of the testimony of Mr. Roberts is to the effect that one year at the low-water season only 89,000 horsepower was developed. Now, it will be necessary, if the Government of the United States engages in this enterprise and makes contracts with the municipalities that we will furnish them light and power, for us to do as we are now doing a great many things, do it at the Government expense by running a steam plant, and that seems to be the plan, because, according to the hearings, in order to operate this plant they will have to operate the steam plant to the extent of furnishing one-ninth of the power for a part of the year. Now, certainly the Government ought not to make any contract of that kind. Certainly the Government of the United States ought not to make a contract to furnish heat, light, and power for the industries in this or any other section at a loss to the Government of the United States. When a town or any industry contracts for heat or light they want a constant flow of electricity, and if we agree to furnish it we have got to provide it. I do not care whether the river goes dry or whether there is a flood, whether we are producing the power for what we receive for it or whether it costs twice the amount we get for it we have got to furnish it if we make the contract.

And the utilities and the industries will not contract for it, and it will be a worthless thing to them for us to furnish an excess of power unless we agree to give a certain amount of power all the time. So I think we might as well dismiss from our consideration one or the other of these things—either abandon the making of nitrates for the farmers or abandon the project of furnishing light and power for the industries and the municipalities. In any event, we will be compelled, whether we do the one or the other, at the lowest stages of water to supply steam power, according to the testimony of the Government's experts before the Senate Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. LARSEN. Which does the gentleman recommend?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is recommending for the present to delay the matter until we can have an examination by disinterested civil engineers and be informed from disinterested sources how much this whole dam is going to cost, what it will cost to complete it, what the unit cost to develop that water power will be, what it will cost to develop navigation, how many dams will be necessary; and then, after we have done it all, what water power will be developed, how much it will cost per kilowatt to produce it, and what it will cost per ton to make nitrate and those other chemicals that it was proposed to make for the purpose of fertilizing farms.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In connection with the gentleman's suggestion that it is desirable to secure the estimate of civilian engineers, is the gentleman acquainted with Mr. Cooper, who constructed the great Keokuk dam?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I am acquainted with him.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman regard him as one of the most successful hydroelectric engineers in the country?

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman has that reputation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman know his opinion?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Cooper is in the employ now of the War Department as consulting engineer, I think, and I have very high regard for his opinion. I regard him as a very competent engineer, but I have not any statement from him with regard to how many kilowatts of power will be produced by this plan; how many more dams it will be necessary to construct in order to aid in navigation, or just how much power will be generated at the minimum of flow, and to what extent we will be compelled to supplement that power with steam power, and questions of cost, except only the cost of this particular dam. Mr. Cooper says he made his estimate with regard to this dam, and my recollection is that his estimate was $45,000,000 as the cost of the dam and the lock and the power house.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman, of course, knows, in connection with his statement, that Mr. Cooper is an engineer of the War Department and that he is furnishing his great services to the Government absolutely free of cost as consulting engineer?

Mr. GOOD. I did not know that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is a fact.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Granting that these plans could be completed, could the Government then successfully compete with private enterprise in the manufacture and sale of fertilizer?

Mr. GOOD. I think it all depends on the plan. If we adopt the plan now that the Government has adopted in regard to the Emergency Fleet Corporation in managing the ships, I would say no. We would never know whether we had a surplus or a deficit. We would never know just what we were doing. If some plan were adopted for the creation of a corporation, with stock to be owned by the Government, where books could be examined and reports made to Congress, and competent men placed in charge, with salary sufficient to pay for their ability, we might know what we were doing.

We will have to become accustomed to some higher Government salaries if the Government is going to engage in this kind of an enterprise. You can not compete with the American Cyanamid Co. in the manufacture of fertilizer and nitrate if you are going to have $2,500-a-year men or $5,000-a-year men to manage the plant, when the competing company pays five to ten times such sums for their manager, in order to secure the best talent available. You have got to apply to Government affairs the same business principles that a business man adopts in connection with his affairs if you want the Government to succeed in business.

Mr. FESS. I understand that we have spent so much money there that it is proposed to complete the plant in order to save what has already been expended. Has the committee ever looked into the feasibility of the disposition of the Government's interests to private enterprise? Would that be possible?

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations got this estimate, but because it is the short session of Congress, and in order to report the bill out at an early date, and because we were referred by the Secretary of War to these Senate hearings, we made no investigation along that line. When I first noticed the item in the estimates I did not know of the hearings of the Senate, and I supposed we would have full hearings. My time has been so taken up on other matters that I had not followed the hearings of the Senate.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will permit, first, our unfortunate experience in Government operation during the war and the very great uncertainty about this whole proceeding, as to how much it will cost to complete it, and, secondly, whether it will amount to anything after it is completed, suggest to my mind the idea that we ought to go slow in even doing anything, or in saving what we have completed, because there may be a greater loss by going on than by stopping now. At least I would want to satisfy my own judgment about the matter.

Mr. GOOD. That was my opinion and the opinion of the committee, that we should go slow until we had an understanding and an unbiased report of business men and technical men who could secure this technical information—and it is highly technical. We will have to rely upon the judgment of men. We have some highly technical men in the War Department, but the War Department is bent on doing this thing, and without making any reflection on the ability of those men in the War Department who have been studying this subject, it seems to me that we have arrived at a time when, if we are to appropriate more money, it ought to be with special knowledge of what the plant will cost to complete, including the completion of all the dams that it is necessary to build in order to complete the project if navigation is included; how much power we will generate, and what we can get for that power, either by selling it or by manufacturing nitrate.

I do not know that, and there is not a member of the committee that knows it; and if there is a man in the United States that knows these things, he has kept a part of the knowledge under a bushel, because I have not been able to find from any source all of the facts which it seems to me in these times of stress Congress wants and needs, namely, accurate information upon these business essentials. And that is the reason why, in a broad way, we have omitted that item entirely.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman does not mean to intimate, does he, that the building of a second dam will be necessary in order to accommodate this nitrate plant and carry out the plan?

Mr. GOOD. No, not at all; but in reading through the hearings I notice references to the fact that if navigation is to be improved it will be necessary to build other dams. I do not know how many will be needed and I do not know what they will cost. The hearings had before the Senate committee were conducted in a little different way from the hearings that are conducted by committees in this body. I do not think they give the information that the gentleman from Tennessee wants.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is a river and harbor proposition in regard to the navigation of the river above?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; the gentleman will recall that the argument of the Secretary of War for the construction of this dam was as an aid to navigation. That was one of the things that was being urged, so that if that is one of the projects, I am doubtful if it is going to do very much in aid of navigation if it is not supplemented by another dam, possibly two, farther up the river. Am I not correct about that?

Mr. BANKHEAD. As the gentleman from Tennessee says—if the question is addressed to me—that is entirely a navigation project. But from the standpoint of the nitrate plant that is already completed, the completion of this one dam is all that is necessary.

Mr. GOOD. I understand that; but the Secretary of War said that the appropriation was asked for two purposes, and one was to aid navigation. Now, then, if I understand the hearings, this would not be a great aid to navigation if we stopped right here.

Mr. BANKHEAD. You could only get 18 miles up with that one dam.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I notice in the bill an item of $75,000 for the Council of National Defense. What is the need of an appropriation of that character at this time?

Mr. GOOD. The Council of National Defense was an organization created before we entered the war, and before, I suppose, the administration had any thought of entering the war. It was enacted, as I recall, in 1916, and it was enacted in response to the quite general demand throughout the country that somewhere there ought to be in the Government an organization that would correlate the various governmental activities so that one department would know what the other departments were doing with regard to those things that would be necessary in time of war. There was a great deal of information in the Department of Agriculture necessary to the War Department, for example.

The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce, if I remember aright, were by this act constituted the Council of National Defense, and that council was made a permanent organization, and it was intended by that organization to obviate some of the great mistakes that we had made in years past in not utilizing the knowledge in the possession of the Government so that it might be available in time of an emergency.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that, having adopted the budget plan, it would be an unnecessary thing to continue this council?

Mr. GOOD. No. I can see how the Council of National Defense will be a real, live central organ where all of these various departments will furnish the very information that is necessary both for the Army and for the Navy, and if you do not have it there, then you will have to have a Council of National Defense in the Army, and one in the Navy, and so on.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Could not those departments, with their present working forces and the appropriations they call for in those different departments, manage to secure this information without this separate appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. Well, they will have to furnish a great deal of it, and a good deal of this money will be expended in securing information of a certain character which the Council of National Defense will need, and a great deal of the work to be done in the departments will be sent in to this Council of National Defense, which will be a clearing house of useful information which it is necessary for the Government to have in time of emergency.

Now, there is another item in the bill that will unquestionably cause considerable discussion, and that is the item of $147,000,000 estimated for in regard to the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, particularly the one in regard to the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

The Shipping Board has been marking time very largely for some time. If it knows the condition of its affairs, it is unable to impart that information intelligently to anyone else. I doubt if it knows what its condition actually is. I think there is no division politically with regard to our opinion as to the lack of knowledge by this organization. Sitting across the table from the members of the subcommittee was the gentleman who has charge of the operations of all these 2,000 or more ships. Sitting next to him was Mr. Tweedale, the comptroller of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. With all of the assurance necessary to carry conviction of the truth of what he was saying, the man who was the director of operations said, "We will make next year $95,000,000. We will actually make a profit of $95,000,000 next year in the operation of this organization." Mr. Tweedale said, "We will not make a cent." Both those men were right there together. You can not find out to-day how much a single ship made or lost that sailed six months ago. They know absolutely nothing about their business. The provision of this bill is simply that they shall use not more than $55,000,000 out of the sale of ships, the sale of plant and material, to pay for the ships and for operation next year. If they make the $95,000,000, then they will have all they estimated for.

Now, we must have, sometime, somewhere, a policy with regard to this great property which we acquired during the war. We have in round numbers $3,000,000,000 invested in ships to-day. We have sold a few of them. I think we have sold them under a policy that is shortsighted, and yet I can realize the motives that actuated the men who originated this policy. Personally I do no know a man engaged in private shipping in the United States. I have no friends that I know of who are engaged in that enterprise; but I have some positive convictions with regard to a governmental policy governing our merchant marine. We have, or will have, more than 2,500 ships. The cargo ships cost the Government on an average more than $185 per dead-weight ton.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has consumed one hour.

Mr. GOOD. From one standpoint everybody would like to see the Government get out with as little loss as possible, and I understand that. I wish it were possible that we might do that; but now let us see how that can be accomplished. Do we want an American merchant marine? Do we want these ships to fly the American flag? If we do, we have got to adopt a policy that is big enough and broad enough to permit that to be done. Notwithstanding the great loss that Great Britain suffered in her merchant fleet during the war, the merchant fleet of Great Britain to-day does not stand her more than $125 per dead-weight ton. I am told that the shipping laws of the United States are not favorable to the operation of ships, but that those laws make the operation of American ships much more expensive than the operation of ships flying other flags. If that is true, what is it necessary for the Government to do? We, the Government, want to get out of this business of operating ships, because the Government can not go into a big enterprise of this kind and operate it as efficiently and effectively as private enterprise can.

My thought has been that we ought to consider that these ships acquired during the war were acquired, through high prices, at excessive costs, and that we ought to forget that and mark it off as a part of the war cost, a large part of such cost, and let us sell these ships; but let us not sell as we have been selling them. Why, we have sold ships to Americans who were engaged in the shipping business, and five of the concerns to which we have sold are now in the hands of receivers, and others to whom we have sold can not make expenses at the present time and can not make their payments to the Government on their purchases. My thought has been that we ought to sell these ships, and if necessary sell them at $100 per gross ton, being careful always to provide that they shall forever fly the American flag, and put the concerns that buy them on a business basis so that it can compete with its competitors. If they can not compete, why talk of an American merchant marine? If the men of America are not able to compete with their competitors whose ships fly other flags, there will be no American merchant marine, and we will go on and on, drifting as we are drifting now, in this socialistic scheme of Government operation, with the taxpayer every year footing the bills, maybe, by deficiencies or other appropriations. Pending in the committee now there are estimates for $90,000,000 for deficiencies for this year. We must approach this as a business proposition, and even after we have done that and have placed our ships in the hands of private capital on a basis comparable with the ships owned by other countries, then it may be necessary to supplement that by as much of a subsidy or something else—I do not care what you may call it—as other countries pay for operating their ships. Otherwise we want to forget this dream of an American merchant marine, and the quicker we forget it and abandon it the better.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. As I understand it there are something like 95 ships either under construction or under contract for construction.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Is it contemplated that those ships shall be completed or that the contracts shall be canceled and settlement made?

Mr. GOOD. All of the contracts have been canceled that it is proposed to cancel. A survey was made by the Emergency Fleet Corporation or the Shipping Board, and where it was found that it would be cheaper to cancel the contract and not complete the ship the contract was canceled, but where it was thought that it would be cheaper to construct the ship, then the ship was constructed.

Again, some of the contracts were for ships of about 6,000 tons or a little more, as I recall, and they were cargo ships, and the contract was changed for tankers, for which there was a greater demand.

Then some of the cargo ships were changed into passenger ships, and our experience has not been very flattering in that respect. While before the war ships of that character were constructed for $125 a dead-weight ton, or less, it is going to cost us now $500 a dead-weight ton to produce passenger ships.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I understand that there were 950 or 960 contracts that were canceled. but I also understood that there were 95 ships out of the 950 or 960 contracts, and I did not know whether they were to be completed or the contracts were to be canceled.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will take the hearings he will find a table or two giving the rate of progress, the extent they are completed, and the estimates in regard to each ship, and my recollection is that every ship will be completed before December, 1921.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does England or any other foreign country operate a merchant marine, or are they operated by private concerns?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know; I think no country except the United States operates a merchant marine as a governmental proposition. I am not a marine man and I know very little about it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then if we operate our merchant marine we will be the only nation on earth that does do it.

Mr. GOOD. It is possible that during the war some nation might have acquired ships and may be operating them; but I think not.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I think it is fair to say, in answer to the gentleman from Michigan, that no nation is operating a merchant marine now. Brazil tried it and made a failure of it.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. I understood the gentleman to say that we ought to sell these ships.

Mr. GOOD. I certainly think so.

Mr. HICKS. At the price of $100 a ton?

Mr. GOOD. If necessary.

Mr. HICKS. Is there a demand for them? Can they be sold at that price?

Mr. GOOD. The Government has had no policy. A year ago it was ready to sell them for not less than $185 a ton. The Committee on Appropriations labored hard with them to bring down the price where they could sell the ships, because they could never sell them for as much as they could a year ago. They have kept on reducing the price until now they ask $165, and I suppose its purpose is to slide down with the market; but the trouble is it has formulated no real American policy for a great merchant marine.

Mr. HICKS. I agree with the gentleman that the ships should have been sold when there was a market for them, but on a recent trip to the western coast, when I saw ships lying at anchor we asked a man connected with them why those ships were not sold, and he said there was no market for the ships at any price, that they could have sold them a year and a half ago but the Government would not let them do it, and now there was no market for them. Now, we have dozens of ships rusting to pieces because we did not adopt the policy a year and a half ago.

Mr. GOOD. We ought to have adopted a policy to sink all the wooden ships right after the armistice. That would have been a good riddance.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We had that matter up in the Committee on Merchant Marine. Under the provisions of the so-called Jones Shipping Act it was provided that after July 1, 1921, the net proceeds of all operations of the Shipping Board should be converted into the Treasury with the exception of certain operating expenses. The purpose of that provision was to obviate the criticism that was made against the Shipping Board because they never knew how they stood, whether they were operating at a profit or a loss, and in order to meet that situation we inserted the proviso in the Jones bill passed at the last session.

I understand that the Committee on Appropriations in reporting the present bill has not followed the provisions of this law but has departed from it, and I would like if the gentleman would explain that in full.

Mr. GOOD. The Committee on Appropriations feels that some ships should be sold. It feels that now is not the time to take money and loan it to any shipping concern to build other ships because the Government has no money to loan. The committee feels that it has got to get behind the Shipping Board and compel it to sell the plants and equipment. This will certainly be a movement in that direction. A point of order may be made, but if so I think the Shipping Board can get along for a while without any money, and the quicker it gets to that point the better. Until they can come to Congress and say "We are losing so much money," or "We are making so much money," and lay that before us they are not entitled to much consideration. The quicker we find out the facts the better. If anybody wants to make a point of order, if they want to cripple to that extent the industry, they can do it. We are not going to appropriate, if I can prevent it, a single penny out of the Treasury of the United States for next year for this board that does not know its business, that is wasting the people's money, and if they are going to get any money they must get it out of the salvage of the plants. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that is just what the gentleman is running into by not requiring all of the revenue to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. You are making it possible for the Shipping Board to put off the day of final reckoning as to the profit or loss of the operation.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think so. I think if the gentleman had been on the Committee on Appropriations and watched the spectacle of man after man in high positions in these organizations, who knew nothing about the business in which they were engaged, the gentleman would not be ready to criticize the committee. We want them to commence to salvage some of these plants and materials, and they must get to work; they have got to learn this business or get out of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what I am complaining about—that he is allowing by this bill the Shipping Board to do.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman would have us appropriate how much—$147,000,000? Does the gentleman mean that if they receive $1,000 for carrying a cargo to Liverpool that that $1,000 should go into the Treasury?

Mr. BANKHEAD. My answer to that is that I would have the gentleman carry out the provisions of existing law.

Mr. GOOD. But if the gentleman knows what the provisions of that law are he is much better informed than a great many Members of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can read it to the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I can read it too, but I can not understand it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman's party is responsible for its existence.

Mr. GOOD. I can not understand the provisions of that law; I do not care who is responsible for it. The gentleman is a member of the committee that reported out that bill, and I will ask him to answer my question, whether or not every dollar that is received is to be turned into the Treasury.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think so.

Mr. GOOD. Of course not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But does the gentleman state that under his bill all funds are to be turned into the Treasury that are provided should be turned in?

Mr. GOOD. No. We are leaving that to the other committee. Frankly, we are reporting a provision in conflict with the law in this respect. I agree with the gentleman, but we are doing it in the interest of the taxpayers of the United States, and if the interests of the taxpayers are not to be considered then some one can make the point of order to the provision and try to force an appropriation. I for one shall oppose any direct appropriation unless the appropriation provides that not a dollar of it shall be paid until an equal amount has been turned into the Treasury from the sale of salvage or ships, so that we can accomplish the same thing in an indirect way.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman has just stated that he would advocate the sale of these vessels as low as $100 a ton, provided it is necessary to do that in order to sell them. We have great confidence in the judgment of the gentleman, but I would like to say that if we were to notify the buying public that this body would authorize a law of that sort—$100 a ton—that no one contemplating a purchase would ever offer any more.

Mr. GOOD. But they are not offering anything now, and after we do sell them the ships are operated for a little while and then the concerns go into the hands of a receiver, and we do not get any real money. We get a paper contract, and if they make good, then the Government will get the money. This is a very big undertaking, and it is going to take a great deal of capital. I do not know whether $100 a ton is the right figure or not, but the proposition that I was trying to make is this, that if in order to put the capitalization of the ships on a par, per gross ton, with the capitalization of vessels flying other flags it was necessary to bring the price down to $100 a ton we ought not to hesitate one minute, and write off the difference as a war loss, because it was understood when we went into this shipping business that the ships were going to cost us more than they were worth, but we had to have the ships in those days and we were all for it, and we did not consider so much the cost; but now, having the ships, are we going to waste them, throw them away entirely, and appropriate every year for a deficiency for other appropriations for operating losses?

Mr. SIMS. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he said that foreign nations were building ships at a cost of $125 a ton.

Mr. GOOD. Not now. I said that I understood that, taking it by and large, the merchant ships of Great Britain, notwithstanding the fact that she lost a good many during the war and had to pay a higher price for the ships than otherwise, in average cost of her merchant marine did not exceed $125, and it is likely that it was much less than that.

Mr. SIMS. But they can build them more cheaply, I understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. GOOD. I really could not give the gentleman any accurate information as to the cost of building ships now. I would hesitate to give the gentleman an estimate as to the cost of building ships, or any other fact that I wanted him to rely upon, if I got my information from the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, because I do not think the information would be reliable. They do not seem to know.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does not the merchant marine act of 1920 authorize the Shipping Board to sell these ships at any price that is proper in its judgment?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then the complaint is not against the law but against the Shipping Board for not selling at a marketable price.

Mr. GOOD. That is true. Mr. Chairman, I have just a few other observations to make with regard to some large items in the bill. First, it will be observed that there is a reduction from $160,000,000 to $125,000,000 for compensation to the beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The department estimated that it would take $160,000,000. That is a very much larger amount than they had for the current year. They have this year $125,000,000, but it is going to cost more for next year to pay this compensation than it does this year. The War Risk Insurance Bureau will have on hand, notwithstanding the fact that a great many Members of the House were fearful that we had cut the appropriation for the bureau too much, on the 30th day of June next $37,000,000 of unexpended balance. We reappropriate that, and by the reappropriation of $125,000,000 we practically give for compensation all that the department asks.

So, too, with the Federal Board for Vocational Education. They asked for $78,000,000. We have given them $65,000,000. The estimate is that they will have $10,500,000 of unexpended balance on June 30, 1921. That amount we reappropriate, and that gives the board $75,500,000, or thereabout. It is possible there will be considerably more than that amount. It is difficult to determine a year and a half in advance the expenditure of an appropriation like this. There may be some changes in the law, very likely there will, but the board knows, and the discharged soldiers know, and the public knows that this Congress and any succeeding Congress will pass such acts and make such appropriations as may be necessary, whether in a regular appropriation bill or in a deficiency bill, to provide for the rehabilitation of these men.

The committee has tried under very difficult circumstances to keep the bill strictly within the law. There is but one increase in salary, as I recall, and that is the salary of the man who is at the head of the Freedmen's Hospital here in the District. He has some six or seven hundred patients under his charge. He is compelled to provide for his own house and everything of that kind. He receives a salary of $3,000, which is not enough for him to live on and live as he is required to live, and we have increased that salary from $3,000 to $4,000.

It is the only case notwithstanding the fact there were demands from practically every service for increases. And that is the question that we must face in the next Congress if not this Congress. The question of going to work and fixing the salaries of Government employees not only in the District, because some labor organization or other organization is back of District employees, but we want to do it for those men who are in the field, who are performing service there. We have a great many scientific men scattered throughout the United States. Members of the House sometimes complain with reference to underpaid, as they call it, Government employees, meaning a person who gets from $800 to $1,500, usually a young girl or boy who lives at home, who has no dependents, forgetting all the time the claims of the scientific men employed by the Government. Every day a college or university or some institution somewhere is grabbing the Government's scientific men—men whom the Government has trained; men whom the Government can not afford to lose, and yet it is going on every day, and if you want to know how demoralizing the effect is go to one of these institutions of the Government that is doing a great work by some of the best and brainiest of men.

Yesterday morning I received two letters from two separate departments of the Government, and in each case a scientific man left the Government employ because two colleges not far away from Washington had taken and paid each of them a thousand dollars more than the Government paid. These men are paid such meager salaries that when you consider their salaries with the salaries paid men outside you are almost ashamed of yourself. The work of readjusting these salaries, both in the field and in Washington, is very important. I desire also to call attention to the fact that we are indulging a good deal of money on this question of Government aid; Federal aid to States for this and that thing is becoming very common. We carried last year an appropriation of a million dollars for Federal aid to States with regard to venereal diseases; carried it also the year before. There is no authority of law for it now, and so we did not appropriate the money. Now let me tell you what happened in my State. I do not know what happened in other States, but in my State they took the chief health officer and increased his salary, almost doubled it, as soon as they got the Federal aid, and paid him a salary more than was received by the governor of my State. That is what Federal aid is doing. Men are deceiving themselves in regard to Federal aid.

They are deceiving their constituents, but some day an enlightened public sentiment will call attention to the fact that the money is coming out of the pockets of the American taxpayer, whether they take it out of one pocket and pay it to the county treasurer or whether they take it out of the other pocket and pay it to a Federal tax collector; it is all coming out of the pockets of the American taxpayer, so let us not delude ourselves by trying to get State legislatures to make appropriations for certain things on the consideration that Congress will give a like amount, because the money comes out of the taxpayers just the same.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. There are several States in the Union that cooperate under this Federal aid, and while, for example, our State pays 12½ per cent in, it gets 4½ per cent out.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And other States pay 1 per cent in and get 10 per cent out, and our people are taxed to make up the deficiency in the States that get the excess of appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. It is a vicious plan and ought to be discouraged. These are things we must discourage if we are going to keep down appropriations. Another thing, while estimates this year are, in round numbers, about $4,700,000,000, of that amount this Congress will not pass upon $1,300,000,000 at all. We have indulged here in a practice that is absolutely vicious of making appropriations in legislative bills that are to become permanent annual appropriations. For example, we appropriated a number of years ago a million dollars a year for good roads in national forests. There is no place, no committee, now to examine that to see whether the money is being spent in an economical way or whether the money is wasted, or anything of the kind. It is work that ought to be done. But these appropriations ought to come before some committee of the Congress every year. There is $1,300,000,000 that will be paid out of the Treasury on matters that this Congress does not pass on at all. It seems to me that the Congress could do no better service in the interest of economy than to repeal every one of these laws except two, the one in regard to the sinking-fund requirement, that will require $265,000,000 next year, and the interest on the public debt of the United States, that will call for $922,000,000. There are approximately $200,000,000 of general appropriations carried in laws that have been passed years ago. Yet we do not know anything, so far as Congress is concerned, in regard to the economical expenditure of those appropriations. [Applause.] That is a matter that ought to be taken up. It is a matter for legislation.

Mr. FESS. What is the remedy?

Mr. GOOD. The remedy is to repeal the appropriations and let the department which would receive the money come and make their estimates in the usual way, come before the committee and tell the committee what they did with the money the year before and what they propose to do with the money the next year, just as everybody else does. Let us stop. I plead with the committees that are bringing in these appropriations that you can trust the Congress of the United States to make the appropriations for every service in the United States and let us wipe some of these out and not put them in the form of permanent annual appropriations where nobody knows except the official who pays out the money how that money is being expended. I shall put in the RECORD a statement giving in detail these estimates.

Mr. LARSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN. Will the gentleman state whether any bills have been introduced with a view of correcting the evils of which he is complaining or whether the gentleman contemplates the introduction of any such bill?

Mr. GOOD. On the contrary, we are adding to the list right along every year. The list is growing larger. Now, I have brought in this chart with regard to the various departments that we appropriate money for in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Just as the name implies, this bill carries money for all sundry civil departments of the Government. It does carry money for some other agencies that are not considered among the civil establishments. It carries appropriations for independent establishments and the 10 executive departments. Some of these departments have been growing so rapidly that it has been hard to keep pace with them. Some of the very great increases in the bill, especially those in regard to the Coast Guard and the Coast and Geodetic Survey, are due to the bill that was passed recently increasing the pay of the officers of those establishments. Take the Coast Guard. The amount asked for in this bill was around $15,000,000, half as much as we appropriated during the first year of the McKinley administration for the Navy of the United States. And yet the Government of the United States is the only Government in the world that maintains a coast-guard service. As I have said, these establishments have been growing and growing so rapidly that it has been hard to keep pace with them, and it seems to me that we have arrived at a time when Congress must adopt a business plan for conducting its affairs.

In fact, it must be planned by the Chief Executive of the United States, and when he lays out his plan of what the Government's activities shall be, we must follow that with an estimate of the cost of the plans. And I hope the day is not far distant when we may have a budget system. I regret more than I can tell you the fact that this bill is brought in this year in the absence of a real budget. I hope when the next year rolls around that Congress may have early in its session presented to it one bill which will be at once a working plan of the Government, of the things the Government intends to do for the next fiscal year, and an estimate of the money necessary with which to do it. When that bill is presented no one man, as is now generally supposed, will take charge of that budget. I do not know what the policy of the Congress will be, but if I should be the chairman of the committee reporting out that bill, immediately when the division was reached in regard to the post office and post roads, the subcommittee that had held the hearings, the subcommittee that has considered that subject, would know more about it than the chairman possibly could, and the chairman of the subcommittee would take the floor and defend his items and take charge of the bill until all the items in that division had been completed. And so on down through until all the subcommittee divisions had been taken care of.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman has spoken about the sinking fund law. Is it not true that that law has been absolutely ignored for 10 or 15 years?

Mr. GOOD. I think it has.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What good is the law, then?

Mr. GOOD. If we repealed it, then the Treasury Department would be compelled to come to Congress and ask for a fund to retire certain Government obligations. Then it could not be ignored if the money was appropriated for that specific purpose. I think the gentleman has touched upon a question that is vital with regard to rates of interest and the present rates on Government bonds. Two years ago we had about $3,700,000,000 of short-time certificates. We have now over $2,500,000,000 of short-time certificates. Notwithstanding the fact that last year the sinking fund produced only about $257,000,000, yet the Secretary of the Treasury retired Liberty bonds and Victory notes to the extent of almost a billion dollars. I think it was a very short-sighted policy. I think we ought to have paid off, with that surplus in the Treasury, our short-time indebtedness—indebtedness that was maturing every three or six months. Instead of doing that we borrowed money at 6 per cent or 5¾ per cent to buy bonds that would not mature for 15 or 20 years and that were drawing only 4¼ per cent, and then we commenced to have one class of Government securities competing, in a market of our creation, with another class.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman think it would be a sensible policy for the Government to buy these bonds at the discount they have now?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think the Government ought to do that at all. I think the Government ought to wipe out its current indebtedness that is maturing every day. Now, down in the gentleman's district, if a man had a mortgage on his farm at 5 per cent and it did not mature for 10 years, and the gentleman from Missouri was practicing law, and the farmer's son would come before him and say, "My father has a mortgage on the farm that matures in 10 years; he went down to the bank this morning and borrowed $5,000 at 6 per cent, payable in 90 days, and paid on that mortgage," you would say to the son that he ought to have a guardian appointed for his father. But that is what the Government has been doing this year. Instead of paying $265,000,000 accruing in the sinking fund to retire Liberty bonds, it paid out $1,000,000,000 to retire Liberty bonds and Victory notes, and kept on renewing these certificates around 6 per cent.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman understands that there was a sinking fund created at the time these bonds were authorized to be issued?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And that sinking fund was for the purpose of taking up the bonds when they became due. He wants to keep faith with the people who made that contract.

Mr. GOOD. What does the gentleman think of taking $750,000,000 more out of the Treasury and buying those bonds?

Mr. GARNER. Just as I walked into the Chamber I heard the gentleman state that he would not take up a single one.

Mr. GOOD. I mean outside of those the sinking fund requirement raises the money to take care of. What we are doing is that we are taking $250,000,000 out of the money in the sinking fund to retire these bonds, and also taking $750,000,000 more out of the Treasury and taking up bonds that do not mature for years to come.

Mr. BLACK. Those were purchased in the open market, were they not, at a great deal less than par value?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; and I do not think the Government of the United States can afford to be a buyer of its securities below par, especially in excess of the small sinking-fund requirement. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. If the purchase of those bonds by the Government will relieve the market situation and relieve the pressure that is being brought and improve the market, does not the gentleman think it is advisable?

Mr. GOOD. I do not care about establishing a market for those bonds. I think we ought to keep them. We bought them as a patrotic duty and it is a patriotic duty to keep them, and we ought not to encourage any policy here to create a market on Wall Street for men to speculate in Government securities.

Mr. BLACK. Does not the gentleman realize that a great many people, notwithstanding they may be as patriotic as he or myself or any other Member of the House, are forced to sell these bonds, and therefore must sell them at whatever the market will bring, and that the Government helps those men by going into the market and stimulating it whenever it can do so?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think the Government ought to engage in it in the way it is doing.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The selling price of the bonds to-day is lower than it has been since they were issued.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and we have bought more this year than ever before. The more we buy, the lower down they go.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes. I insisted in the beginning that they ought to carry on the war half by taxes and half by bonds, and in that way they would never go below par.

But I want to get back to the question I asked at first. The reason why I happened to ask that question is that Mr. Payne, when he reported his tariff bill here, had a table showing that it would raise revenue enough to carry on the Government, and Mr. UNDERWOOD asked him if he had not left out an item of several million dollars. Mr. Payne wanted to know what it was, and Mr. UNDERWOOD said it was the sinking fund, and Mr. Payne replied that nobody had paid any attention to the sinking fund law for 10 or 15 years. Is that still going on?

Mr. GOOD. It is to some extent, except that instead of paying out $257,000,000 last year they paid out about a billion dollars in retiring Government bonds, mixing it all up with the sinking fund, so that it is not kept separate, as the gentleman says.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One other question. The short-term certificates bear a higher rate of interest than these bonds, do they not?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do they keep issuing them for?

Mr. GOOD. Because they need the money to retire Liberty bonds. And the effect is to depreciate the value of the Liberty bonds. That is the effect of it. They have two sets of securities bidding against each other, and if the gentleman went into the market to buy a security he would not pay the same price for a Government bond drawing interest at 4¼ per cent that he would for a Government bond drawing 6 per cent. He would be likely to take the one at 6 per cent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have got bonds of every issue except one, and, while I am not rich, I am going to hold them until they pay their value. [Applause.] But part of those bonds bear only 3½ per cent, and from that up to 4¾. In any event, you have got different sorts of securities bidding against each other.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HASTINGS. I was going to ask, if the gentleman will permit me, this question: I understood the gentleman to say that we would quit issuing these short-time notes or securities that bear the high rate of interest. How, then, would the Government get the money it needs?

Mr. GOOD. No. I said I would pay them, but instead of retiring the Liberty bonds I would retire every one of these short-term certificates that is drawing a high rate of interest.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the Government needs the money now and anticipates the collection of revenues, how would you get the money to meet the necessities of the Government?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, well, the Government is getting money in. In that case the water has gone over the mill. Last year the Government retired a billion dollars' worth of Victory notes and Liberty bonds when it had authority to retire only about $257,000,000, and at the same time it kept on renewing the short-term certificates. If it had followed the line of policy that any business man would follow, it would have taken care of the sinking fund requirements, $257,000,000, and paid out the rest in discharge of those short-time certificates. But that is afield. That is a question that is not carried in the bill. I am only trying to explain the items in the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, the Government would have to have the money. If it could get the money it needs at the rate of interest that these old bonds carry, it ought to get it that way; but the gentleman does not think the Government should have to go into the market and get the money at 4½?

Mr. GOOD. No. If it had done as it ought to have done it would have had enough to pay the short-time certificates, or nearly so.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. TEMPLE. The gentleman is discussing what has been done already and not what will be done hereafter. We have been borrowing money at 5¾ to pay a debt that cost us only 4¾?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not in the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to buy these high-rate certificates?

Mr. GOOD. It is in his power; at any rate he is doing it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Going on the basis of the cuts as here made in this particular bill, how much are we going to be able to save in all the bills, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. GOOD. That depends largely upon the policy to be adopted with regard to the military and naval bills.

Mr. FESS. If we save anything like what we saved in the long session, could we not pay these short-term certificates?

Mr. GOOD. Not by pursuing this present foolish policy of redeeming the short-time certificates. Men now are commencing to do business on a falling market. It was easy to make money on a rising market, and men who made income-tax returns showing an income tax this year may not do so next year, nor pay income taxes.

Mr. CARTER. What was the aggregate amount of all the appropriations last year?

Mr. GOOD. Around $4,859,000,000.

Mr. CARTER. How much is the standing appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman means the indefinite appropriation? About $1,300,000,000.

Now, as I was about to say, the bill contains many items in which Members are interested. I know the interest of Members in these various appropriations. When we come to consider them I am sure the membership of the House will approach them in the same spirit in which the Committee on Appropriations considered them, and that was without regard to any Member's district, but recognizing the fact that we ought not now to appropriate for any service that is not absolutely necessary for the next year; that the Government in most departments should be placed strictly on a maintenance basis, and that program is followed throughout.

There were some instances where we were compelled to make increases. We did make a large increase for reclamation, but not a dollar out of the Federal Treasury of the United States, because the money that is coming in to the Government through the oil-leasing act, money that has already been placed in the Treasury, that goes to the credit of that act, is there for irrigation purposes and can be used for no other purpose. Inasmuch as there are so many demands in the West for opening up new territory and putting water on desert lands, and inasmuch as in most cases we found that those lands are now being taken up by discharged soldiers, we felt it to be our duty to appropriate all there was in the fund for that purpose.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will my good friend yield there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What increase have you made in reclamation over the past appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. My recollection is that it is somewhere between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is very good.

Mr. GOOD. The increase over last year was only $5,800,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the committee can hold these departments down to these figures, well and good. They deserve a whole lot of credit for the slashing. But what steps, if any, have the Appropriations Committee taken, and what steps is Congress going to take to prevent these departments from coming in later on with deficiencies, and forcing us to give them what they want, as they have been doing for years and years?

Mr. GOOD. That is a serious matter. I will say to the gentleman that some of the departments that are coming in for deficiencies—and there are some very large deficiencies—will have to explain very thoroughly, I think, to the committee, judging from the attitude of the members of the committee, before they get very large appropriations. I do not believe in encouraging deficiency appropriations at all. The subcommittee on deficiencies will be confronted within a few days with a very large deficiency for the Army and some other departments.

Gentlemen will recall that in the last Congress we appropriated for an Army of about 165,000 men, but made authorization for an Army of 175,000 men. Now, instead of limiting the size of the Army to the figures fixed by the appropriation bill, the Secretary of War, actuated, I suppose, by the demand of the General Staff, conceived it to be his duty to increase the Army up to 280,000 men, the point to which he is authorized to increase it under the general law. He cast aside the provisions of the Army appropriation bill, and I am told that he expects to increase the size of the Army to 280,000 before the end of the year.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you going to let him do it?

Mr. GOOD. Well, he is doing it. He is your Secretary of War just as much as he is mine, and a little bit more so.

Mr. BLANTON. But we have not got the power to stop him?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know whether we have or not, but if I had my way about it the deficiency bill when it is reported would contain a provision that he should not take on a single additional recruit; that he should not add a single new man to the Army; and that he should demobilize as rapidly as possible until he gets his Army down to the size that Congress said it should be for the year. [Applause.]

If gentlemen will look at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD they will see that the War Department has already sent in nominations for officers for confirmation for an Army of 280,000 men, or thereabouts, and if those nominations are confirmed you will have 14,000 officers, or officers for an Army of 280,000 men, when Congress intended to appropriate for an Army of less than 175,000 men; and with the splendid organization and the splendid training of 4,000,000 men in the late war, it seems to me that if Congress now does its duty it will not provide in the Army bill for an Army in excess of 165,000 men, and I should rather see 150,000 men. [Applause.] We might as well have some of these men at work.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. In that connection I should be interested to know what the limitation is on what I supposed was the general law that no administrative officer could spend more than the amount appropriated without committing a criminal offense.

Mr. GOOD. I understand that the Secretary of War contends that the antideficiency law does not apply to appropriations for the Army in so far as the pay of the men is concerned. I can see some reason for that contention. I have not examined the provision, but intend to examine it carefully to ascertain the facts.

Mr. MAPES. The deficiencies apply not only to the War Department, but to the other departments generally, as I understand it.

Mr. GOOD. I had reference to the lump-sum appropriations, such as the pay of the Army. The claim is made—although it comes to me in a roundabout way, but I understand that is the contention of the Secretary of War—that the antideficiency law does not apply in that case. I do not see how he could proceed to create a deficiency in violation of that law if it applied to that appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. If there is any basis at all for that contention I think the gentleman will discover, on examination, that it can apply only to expenditures for the pay of the Army and not to other expenditures.

Mr. GOOD. I understand that is the contention.

Mr. MONDELL. And the Secretaries have always taken the position that except in case of emergency they were bound by the appropriation and its limitations.

Mr. HICKS. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that these irrigated lands were being sought for very largely by ex-service men, and I have understood that to be the fact.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Can the gentleman enlighten the committee as to the number of men who have availed themselves of the opportunity and have made application for these irrigated lands?

Mr. GOOD. I can not, but in one opening of irrigated lands my understanding is that every piece of land was taken under the law by a discharged soldier of the recent war, and that there was not half enough land in that area to supply the demands of soldiers alone.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me to amplify that statement a little bit?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I have taken the trouble to investigate that situation. My recollection is that there have been about 35 applications for every tract that was available. There was one case where 84 tracts were available and there were over 500 men who traveled considerable distances, some of them hundreds of miles, to the place of the opening, and in addition to that there were over 3,000 applications containing certified checks in the sum of 5 per cent of the purchase price; and taken as a whole there were 35 bona fide applications for every tract that was available.

Mr. GOOD. I thank the gentleman. Now, I will not take the time of the committee in a further discussion of this bill. It contains about 2,000 items. When the bill is read some member of the committee will be very glad to furnish information with regard to the reasons why we granted the appropriations, why we have cut appropriations, and the extent to which we cut them.

I thank the committee for their attention. [Applause.]

[1] Carried in naval appropriation act.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], in closing his remarks, criticized the Secretary of the Treasury because he has used certain funds of the Government for the purpose of purchasing Liberty bonds. It is not my purpose to be drawn into any discussion of that particular matter, because I want to consume such time as I may have in discussing two or three features of the pending bill. But I do want to say that the gentleman from Iowa and every Member of this House and the country knows that the Secretary of the Treasury pursued that policy for the sole purpose of stabilizing these bonds. We were confronted with a situation where the value of the bonds was steadily falling, and I dare say if the Secretary of the Treasury had failed to enter the market for the purpose as far as he could of stabilizing the value of these bonds he would have been seriously criticized by some gentlemen on the floor of this House on account of his failure to take steps to protect as far as possible the millions of holders of these bonds.

Mr. MAGEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. MAGEE. I think some time in May, 1920, the Secretary of the Treasury announced that he would not pursue the policy of going into the market and buying these bonds as cheaply as possible after July 1. So far as I know he has not continued that policy since that time. If he discontinued that policy at such time, of course, the gentleman well knows that the bonds have appreciated in value since he ceased that policy.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The bonds are lower to-day than they have been since the war began.

Mr. MAGEE. No; I think that the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I can not be mistaken; it has not been six hours since I read it in the paper.

Mr. MAGEE. Some of the Liberty issues got down to 83.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Eighty-four, and to-day is the first day that the three and a halfs have got below 90.

Mr. MAGEE. Some of the Liberty issues were down between 82 and 83.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Not the three and a halfs.

Mr. MAGEE. I am not talking about the three and a halfs.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I say that to-day is the first day that the three and a halfs have been below 90.

Mr. MAGEE. I make the statement that if the Secretary of the Treasury did discontinue his policy, as he stated he would do, and I assume that he did, since July 1 the bonds have appreciated in value.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I take it that everyone must concede that if the gentleman from Iowa is correct as to the amount of bonds that have been purchased, then the action of the Secretary of the Treasury certainly had some effect in helping to hold up the present level of market values of these bonds, and the gentleman from New York is mistaken in his conclusions. In addition to that, these bonds were purchased in the open market at the current market quotations. They were bearing 4¼ per cent, if I mistake not, and even if the money with which they were purchased was borrowed at 5¾ on short-time certificates, the gentleman will see that the Government has lost nothing in the transaction; but, on the contrary, the holders of the bonds have gained by the action of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MAGEE. Will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. MAGEE. I want to say most emphatically that I do not agree with the views expressed by the gentleman. I think the result of the action of the Secretary of the Treasury has been the opposite of that stated by the gentleman. I have not favored and I can not favor the Government going into the open market and purchasing a single Liberty bond at less than par.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am sure no one would approve of that except, as I stated, for the purpose indicated. The Government can not purchase all the bonds, and the Government certainly owes it to those who hold the bonds to hold the price up as much as possible, and this it endeavored to do by making purchases in the open market with such funds as were available.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to enter into any discussion of the bond question, because I do not want to consume any more time than is necessary. I am sure that I speak for every member of the subcommittee which held the hearings, and also for the full committee, when I say that they had only two things in mind in the preparation and presentation of this bill: First, to ascertain if possible the actual amount of money that was necessary to maintain the activities of the Government during the next fiscal year, and, second, the necessity of holding down and reducing the expenditures for these activities to the very least possible minimum consistent with the welfare of the Government and of the people. Unless expenditures are reduced, taxes can not be lowered; and we have endeavored to rigidly hold down appropriations in this bill in the interest of a burdened taxpaying public. As a result drastic cuts have been made in some of the estimates, but not to an extent, in my judgment, which will interfere with the efficiency of the Government if proper economy is shown by the executive branch. In order to accomplish this it has been necessary to deny appropriations to a number of very worthy and desirable enterprises, but these can be taken care of later on when revenues become more plentiful. I am in accord with the action of the committee with respect to this bill except in a few instances, and I propose to refer to two or three of those items at this time. I shall probably have more to say as to particular features of the bill when it is considered under the 5-minute rule.

The gentleman from Iowa has stated to the committee that this bill carries $323,000,000, and that that is a reduction of $420,000,000 from the estimates submitted by the various departments. That is true upon its face. In passing I may say that I am very glad that the gentleman from Iowa has abandoned the position which he and the majority leader took so confidently before election—that a reduction of estimates in itself constituted a saving to the Government. He now, after the election, speaks of it properly as a reduction of the estimates. We all know that from time immemorial, both under Democratic and Republican administrations, the departments have always submitted estimates far in excess of the amount actually allowed by the Congress. This administration has been no exception to the rule. That is one very strong reason why we should quickly enact the budget system so that these departments, or some official in the executive branch of the Government, will be charged with the responsibility and duty of investigating these estimates before they are submitted to Congress and reducing them at the outset so as to aid Congress in its efforts to practice economy.

Why, to show you how loosely these estimates are submitted, I want to suggest a single case that appears in this bill.

You will recall that $30,000,000 have heretofore been appropriated for the bringing of the remains of soldiers back from Europe. It was stated at the time that it was thought that would be practically all, if not all that was needed. An esimate was submitted for this bill carrying $20,000,000 in addition, but when the Army officer who came before the committee in support of his estimate sat down at the table he voluntarily told the chairman that that estimate was not seriously submitted, but that it was made up at a time when they did not know what the relations of France were going to be with reference to bringing back the remains. He voluntarily told the chairman that only $1,000,000 would be necessary for the next fiscal year. Hence this bill carries $1,000,000 or a reduction of $19,000,000 in that one estimate alone.

I cite that as a most glaring case. I for one do not understand how those who finally submitted the estimates to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to Congress ever permitted an estimate of that kind to pass, but it is a practice that has grown up as a result of the unbusinesslike and inefficient system which has been in vogue during the years past, not only under Democratic but under Republican administrations. I hope this Congress will at this session place upon the statute books a budget law which will correct just that sort of evil. The example cited may be an extreme case, but it is characteristic of what the Members are being constantly confronted with in the consideration of the estimates.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] states that this bill carries $323,000,000, but I think that it should be stated that that is not all it carries as a charge on the Treasury. The gentleman himself pointed out a number of reappropriations that have been made in this bill. There is a reappropriation of $10,500,000 under the item for the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and some $35,000,000, as I recall, for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. If you will take all of these reappropriations, including the estimates submitted for the Shipping Board, you will find that there are charges on the Treasury of more than $200,000,000 which, if you want to get at a correct statement of charges, should be added to the $323,000,000 carried in this bill—provided you appropriated the full sum asked for by the Shipping Board.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is assuming there that the earnings of the Shipping Board will be $95,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. And reappropriations of the amounts received on sales would bring it up to $150,000,000. That is not stated as a criticism of the bill, because it has been the practice of all Congresses in the past, as I undertand it, Democratic and Republican, to make reappropriations, but I have insisted for some years that that is a bad policy; that what Congress ought to do is to make direct appropriations of the amounts needed for these various activities and turn the receipts and unexpended balances at the end of the year into the Treasury of the United States as a part of miscellaneous receipts. That is the only way that Congress will ever be able to keep books with these activities and the only way in which the public will ever be able to know exactly what we are spending from year to year.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I don't quite understand the gentleman. Does the gentleman mean that $200,000,000 are reappropriated in addition to the $323,000,000 to be taken from the Treasury in case these sums authorized are expended?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What I meant to say was this: This bill undertakes to appropriate money to the extent of something like $323,000,000, and it also undertakes to reappropriate money that will be on hand at the end of the fiscal year in addition to the $323,000,000 actually carried by way of direct appropriation. I stated it would be over $200,000,000, and I was assuming for these figures that $147,000,000 has been appropriated for the Shipping Board. I dare say that if the committee had undertaken to recommend, as the law provides, a direct appropriation for the Shipping Board it would have been a much less sum than that—I am sure it would be by the unanimous judgment of the committee; but one prominent officer of that board estimated that during the next fiscal year there would be $95,000,000 by way of receipts from operations. It is true, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] stated, that Auditor Tweedale promptly corrected him and said they would make nothing during the next fiscal year; but if the one is correct and the other wrong, they will have $95,000,000 at their disposal for the purpose of carrying on operations of the Shipping Board, and in addition thereto they will have $55,000,000, which they are permitted to use from receipts from deferred payments on ships heretofore sold, and also for ships sold during the fiscal year, which will make $150,000,000 instead of $147,000,000, which they asked, and in addition thereto they are authorized to use whatever balance is on hand at the end of the fiscal year. But, as the chairman has stated, they are now before the committee asking for a deficiency of something like $90,000,000, and naturally they will have no balance on hand. My own personal judgment is that Mr. Tweedale was nearer correct than the other officer of the corporation, because I agree with the chairman of the committee that it will be impossible for anyone to take these hearings, extending over a day, consisting of more than 200 pages in the book of hearings, and gather any correct and definite understanding and satisfactory knowledge of just what the Shipping Board is doing or what they expect to do during the next fiscal year.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], chairman of this committee, in his usual able and capable way, closely cross-examined these gentlemen in an effort to elicit some definite information, but, unfortunately, their business is such or the situation that confronts them is so complicated and difficult that they were unable to give any clear and definite information.

I wish to concur in what the gentleman from Alabama said, that if we would make a direct appropriation to the Shipping Board for whatever sum we in our judgment think they should have to use during the next fiscal year, that at the end of that fiscal year we would be able to keep books with them and know something about what they are doing, but as long as we give them these indefinite appropriations and the privilege of drawing on this sum and that sum for expenses in operation we will never know and the public will never be able to know absolutely just what sum they are expending. I took that position a year ago, and offered an amendment on this floor in which I sought to get Congress to appropriate directly the exact amount which it was stated would be received in this indirect way, but the House saw fit to reject the amendment. I have only referred to it now for the purpose of emphasizing my own position, that there ought to be direct appropriations made.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Was it disclosed to what extent the fleet built by the United States has been disposed of to private interests, and to what extent it is held by the Government and operated, and how much of that fleet it is estimated will be sold in the next year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They submitted no estimate as to what they would sell during the next year. They do not seem to have any present prospect of selling, and, of course, no one is able to get any information as to just how many they expect to sell.

My recollection is—and I am subject to correction by the gentleman from Iowa—that they have sold about 450 ships—am I correct—out of the total of 2,300?

Mr. GOOD. That includes wooden ships.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That includes all ships sold by the Shipping Board?

Mr. GOOD. I think it is only fair to the department—we do not want to be too hard on them—to say that for the last three months, possibly longer, they have simply been marking time. The board has only had two or three members on it, and therefore have not been in a position actively to function to sell ships. What I had to say in regard to the board was before that time, because I realize they are not even able now to function with only two or three members.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have had their difficulties for the reasons stated by the gentleman from Iowa, and there can be a good deal said for them by way of excusing the condition of affairs. My only motive in referring to it was to emphasize the fact brought out by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] that if we would make direct appropriation for the Shipping Board for the funds that we thought they ought to have to get through the next fiscal year we would be better able at the end of the fiscal year to keep books with them and know exactly what was expended and how it was expended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In that connection I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the attention of the committee was called to the specific directions contained in the Jones shipping bill as a limitation upon the committee in the making of appropriations?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows there is an old legal maxim or adage to the effect that no man can plead ignorance of the law, and I think the committee was well informed as to the provisions of the law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask that question for the purpose of asking this: How did the committee justify flying directly in the teeth of the instructions of Congress in that proposition so recently given them as June of this year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman from Iowa fairly set forth the views of the majority in making the appropriations in this manner, and that was for the purpose of forcing the Shipping Board to take some steps toward the disposition of these ships, which it seems are now being run at a loss, or probably at a loss. I think the gentleman from Iowa very plainly stated the reason for making this method of appropriation. For my own part, in reply to the question as to whether they ought to be sold or not, I have always said that I thought that they ought to be sold at the earliest possible moment, if it can be done consistent with the interest of the Government, and I would like to see them sold, and sold promptly, and in the hands of private capital which would run and maintain them under the American flag, and there ought to be, it seems to me, some direct method of bringing about this result, rather than the method of indirect appropriations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman, in that connection, will recall that only a few months ago the Shipping Board was making an honest effort to dispose of a great many of these ships and a great popular clamor went over the country that they were sacrificing them by selling them at such a low price, and one gentleman even went to the extent of having an injunction issued against the members of the Shipping Board to prohibit them from the sale of such vessels at what was then regarded by them as a fair price and which now they can not get.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was told the other day by a Member on the floor that they had between five and six hundred ships owned by the Government and under the control of the Shipping Board lying in the harbor down near Norfolk, at Hampton Roads, not being used for any purpose, and for which a large fund is required for the purpose of guarding and looking after them. Does the gentleman know whether that statement is correct?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Did the gentleman say whether they were wooden ships?

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand some are wooden ships. I think he said some also were steel ships.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no information on the subject to which the gentleman refers, but I can well believe it, because I saw what appeared to be a fleet of several hundred wooden ships lying idle in Seattle Harbor because the Government is unable to sell them. I believe it was stated that negotiations were on and there were prospects of their being able to sell all or a portion of those ships to other than American purchasers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the Shipping Board making any effort to operate any of those ships which they are unable to sell?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They are making every effort to operate them, yes; and they are making every effort to sell those ships. I believe the Shipping Board has made an earnest and sincere effort to sell all of the ships they could, but I think the question has been whether or not they should accept a lower price than they felt they were justified in accepting. Those ships were built, of course, in war time when material was very high and the Shipping Board did not want to sacrifice them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understood the gentleman to say that out of a total of something like 2,300 ships the board had sold about 450?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is my recollection.

Mr. BARKLEY. What proportion of those that are left in the hands of the board are being operated?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I could not answer the gentleman without referring to the hearings.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. OLIVER. Do I understand that the sources for funds that this bill seeks to authorize the Shipping Board to use are these: First, the unexpended balance at the end of the fiscal year 1920, and then the profits from operation during 1922, and sales and proceeds they may get?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. To the extent of $55,000,000 from the proceeds of the collection of the deferred payments on ships heretofore sold and ships that will be sold during the fiscal year.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the provision is left in this shape is there any method of determining in advance within very large limits what will be spent by the Shipping Board? Is there any possible way of determining, and if the provision remains in the way you have it here, is not the Shipping Board left very largely to spend as it pleases?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Undoubtedly. It depends, of course, on the amount received from operations.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But that amount may be extremely large.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It may be $95,000,000, if one gentleman is correct.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But it may be more than that. You are saying to the Shipping Board, "You are to have discretion to expend the full amount."

Mr. GOOD. Would the gentleman prefer now that we should make a further limitation on that?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think we should make it definite. I think it is the business of Congress to do so, and I should be glad to follow the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Tennessee in making it definite.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman can not follow the gentleman from Tennessee and myself, because we are traveling in opposite directions.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not see that you are traveling in opposite directions on the general proposition. I think each one of you desires to fairly limit the expenditure of the public funds. It does not strike me that the bill does that.

Mr. GOOD. I think we should have a limitation in regard to earnings, but I do not think it is necessary, because I do not think we will have any earnings.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman from Iowa, and I do not think there would be a great difference between him and me as to the amount to be appropriated. Our difference is in the manner in which the appropriation should be carried.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will say this—and the gentleman knows in what esteem I hold him: It seems to me, if I may take the liberty of saying it, it is a poor way in which to frame an appropriation bill, to leave uncertain the amount of the expenditure.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is exactly the point I have been trying to make.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Regardless of the question whether the appropriation ought to be direct or not, what is to hinder the Shipping Board from keeping their books so as to know what their expenses are or whether they have made a profit or a loss?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is a question that I can not answer. It does seem they ought to be able to keep their books in such a manner that they will know definitely what their profits or losses may be. These gentlemen have explained that it is impossible within three or four months to accurately determine the cargo of a certain vessel, for the reason if it goes to some foreign port they do not get the accounts or the bills, and so forth, in for a period of two or three and sometimes four months. After those bills are received, then, of course, they can determine what the profits are.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The claim went further than that, as I understand. No one can tell anywhere along the line what their expenses have been or whether they have made a profit or a loss to any definite amount. If these gentlemen are conducting their books in such a manner as that, I think it is time we made some kind of a provision so that there would be somebody there who could keep some books in a way that would enable us to know something about it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think there is a sincere effort being made at this time to correct the trouble that has been had heretofore. Mr. Tweedale, who is a very competent man, was auditor for the District of Columbia for a number of years, and left that position to go with the Shipping Corporation. He has been trying since last March to formulate and secure information as to the accounts.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he knows what the salary of Mr. Tweedale was when he was auditor of the District of Columbia and what his salary is now?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My recollection is that as auditor of the District of Columbia he received a salary of $4,000 per annum and that when he went with the Emergency Fleet Corporation he was given a salary of $15,000 per annum, and this he is now drawing.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. For the information of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] as to the ships at the mouth of the James River, I would say that there are some 250 of them. They are divided into units of 7. Each one of the units has 40 men guarding it and taking care of it and each man is receiving $100 a month and his board. So that will give some idea of the dead loss, so far as expense is concerned, and shows the absolute necessity for selling these ships.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman think if they were owned by private parties there would be that many men guarding them?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think there would be.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BRIGGS. Have you any testimony under this provision of the Shipping Board as to how much is intended to be appropriated of the sum on hand? Have you any estimate at all of what it would amount to?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It may amount to a great deal or to a very small sum. In other words, they may not make anything during the next fiscal year; and, if so, it will not exceed $55,000,000, because I am satisfied they will have no balance on hand when July 1 comes. They are here now with a deficiency of $90,000,000.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What is the total amount that has been drawn out of the Treasury for the benefit of this corporation?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My recollection is it amounts to some $3,000,000,000 and two or three hundred millions in addition.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. How much has been brought back?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know of anything that has been brought back. It is represented, of course, in the ships, plants, and other property.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The net outlay in cash from the Treasury is the point I wanted to bring out.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There never has been anything in the Treasury, because Congress has followed the policy of permitting the Shipping Board to use the receipts from operation rather than directing them to be paid into the Treasury.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That is one of the worst avenues of graft in the whole Government.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is correct, and that is what I am complaining of.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Is the committee to understand that your committee that is reporting the bill has no information as to the actual number of ships that the Government now owns?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, that information is explicit. It is about 2,312, if I remember correctly.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Does the committee know how many of those ships are being operated now?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I could tell the gentleman if I had the time to examine these hearings.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It is in the hearings?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is in the hearings, and the gentleman can find it. My time is limited, and I have not time to look it up. The gentleman will find that a very thorough examination was made of those who appeared in behalf of these estimates, consuming, as I stated, more than a day. The gentleman will find all that information in the hearings.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. One more question. Does the Government as such operate any ships itself?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It does not.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It leases those ships to private corporations?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Is the contract upon which the lease is based understandable?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I presume it is. The gentleman will find a copy of that in the hearings. His judgment as to that contract is probably much better than mine. I want to say to the gentleman that in my answer to his inquiry a while ago as to the Government operating ships, I did not intend to say that the Government was actually operating any ships. I thought the gentleman's question was directed to the operation of Government-owned ships.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. As I understood the gentleman heretofore, the receipts from the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation have been authorized by Congress to be utilized by the board. Has there been any change made in this bill in that respect?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No.

Mr. GARNER. When do you propose, or do you propose, such a change in the appropriation?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If I had my way, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, it would be made in this bill and would have been made in the last bill.

Mr. GARNER. I just heard the gentleman say in reply to the gentleman from Nebraska that that afforded an opportunity for greater graft than anything else of its kind.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. That was the statement made by the gentleman from Nebraska, a statement in which I concur.

Mr. GARNER. It seems to me that the committee ought to have remedied that, or that some committee of the House ought to have remedied that situation.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] why he does not provide that these receipts shall be turned into the miscellaneous fund, so that we can know exactly what this Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation are costing the country?

Mr. GOOD. That is the law now. The act provides that it shall be done hereafter, and such an amendment would be an amendment to existing law.

Mr. GARNER. And a point of order would lie against it?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I think that point ought to be made.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think it is good law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in reference to the action of the committee in omitting the appropriation for the dams at Muscle Shoals, Ala.

Mr. FESS. Before the gentleman goes to that, will he yield a moment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. FESS. A year ago, when the Shipping Board matter was up, the Members of the House were somewhat shocked at the answer to a question propounded as to the financial situation, that there was not anybody living that could tell. That was a year ago. Now, are we in the same condition as to the business transactions of that board now? Is it true that nobody can tell?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would not say that, but I will say that after an extended hearing it was not made altogether clear to the committee by those who appeared as to just where they stood.

Mr. FESS. Had we not better abolish the whole thing, for a time at least?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think that should be done until we have disposed of these ships in some way.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. OSBORNE. I want to ask the gentleman a question before he leaves that Shipping Board business. I was repeatedly told this past summer while in the Orient by British shipping men that our merchant marine was going to be a failure; that our ships would all be junked within two or three years; that the Americans did not have sense enough, or rather shipping sense enough, to run a merchant marine. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that that is correct; if their ideas are well founded?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, I am sure that I entertain the same views that the gentleman from California entertains, and that is that the Americans can do anything that anybody else can do, and of course I do not agree with the statement made that Americans can not operate these ships, or that this great merchant marine that has been built up by such tremendous expense to the people and in times of excessive costs of materials, and so forth, will be junked or be permitted to leave the seas.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has any effort recently been made to audit the accounts of the Shipping Board, so as to determine just what the financial standing of the board is, what its expenditures have been, and what its receipts and revenues have been?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As I stated, Mr. Alonzo Tweedale, who was the auditor of the District of Columbia, was named a year ago as auditor for the Shipping Board, and he is constantly auditing the accounts.

Mr. BRIGGS. I mean is a special effort being made to put enough accountants on the work to enable the Congress to know something about the affairs of this board?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say in justice to Mr. Tweedale that for a number of months past he has been making special efforts in the auditing of these accounts, but he has met with special difficulties, difficulties that would not exist in any other business or at any other time. For instance, I recall one illustration that he gave. He said that great quantities of material, amounting to millions of dollars, probably, in value, would be ordered for a particular shipyard, and before it reached that particular shipyard it would be found that this material was needed at some other yard, and then it would be rerouted and sent to another shipyard, and yet charged to this first yard to which it was routed, without anything to indicate the change that had been made. He says he is meeting those difficulties as rapidly as possible.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is there any indication as to when the audit will be complete?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; but he stated that he is doing the work as rapidly as he can.

Now, there is one other item of appropriation in this bill to which I wish briefly to refer, which amounts in the aggregate to $1,250,000 for the Inland Waterways Corporation, to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] referred a while ago. If gentlemen will examine the appropriation on page 65 of the bill they will find that the committee has undertaken to segregate the items of appropriation.

In other words, the committee recommends that $400,000 be appropriated to build a port terminal or dock at St. Louis; $400,000 for another at New Orleans, and some amount, less than $100,000, for an activity at Memphis, and $300,000 for operation.

I am not complaining so much at the amount that was allowed to this corporation for the next fiscal year, although they asked for $6,670,000, and it was reduced to $1,250,000; but I take the position that so long as the Inland Waterways Corporation is a going concern, so long as it is actually operating barges upon the inland waterways—in this instance the Warrior and the Mississippi Rivers and the Erie Canal—there should be some flexibility and some elasticity in the funds that are put at its command for the next fiscal year, because we can not expect that corporation, doing business as it is in the operation of these barges, to achieve the very best financial results if its funds are so tied that it is unable to use them as at the particular moment may prove most desirable.

As it is, we appropriate $400,000 to build a dock at St. Louis, and during the fiscal year it might appear that they did not need over $200,000 there, or it might appear that they could use the $400,000 better in some other way in the operation of their business, and I think it would have been a better business policy to have appropriated $1,250,000, the sum agreed upon, as a lump-sum appropriation, and to have trusted to those in charge of this corporation to use that appropriation in the best manner possible. We have got to trust somebody. We are in the business for the time being. Of course, I understand that under the transportation act it is not intended that the Government shall permanently engage in the barge or boat business. That act simply provided for this corporation, in order to encourage commerce on the inland waterways, and it is the intention of Congress as expressed in the act that as soon as the commerce upon the inland waterways is sufficiently developed to justify and enable private capital to enter in and take the place of the Government in the operation of the barges the Government shall withdraw.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What general public benefit is expected to be secured from the expenditure of this $1,250,000 in this way?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As I just explained, provision was made in the transportation act for this service for the purpose of developing commerce on inland waterways, in order to relieve the great freight congestion and to serve the interior of the country, to take our produce to the ports, and to bring products in; and under the express terms of that act it was provided that the Government should operate these barges for the purpose of developing waterway commerce, and as soon as private capital is ready to enter and take over the transportation of the commerce, then I understand it to be the intention of Congress, as expressed in the act, that the Government shall withdraw.

Now I want to discuss for a few moments the failure of the committee to allow the estimate of $10,000,000 for the continuation of the work upon the dam at Muscle Shoals, Ala.

You gentlemen will remember the circumstances under which the Government engaged in the building of the nitrate plants and the steam-power plant and the beginning of the construction of this dam at Muscle Shoals.

As far back as 1907 Congress made an appropriation in the river and harbor act for the purpose of having an investigation made by the engineers with the view of developing water power in connection with the improvement of the river at Muscle Shoals. The Tennessee is one of the greatest rivers in the United States. It is one of the longest and one of the largest rivers in this country. It touches territory in eastern Tennessee and Alabama that is rich in all sorts of resources.

The condition of the river at Muscle Shoals is such that a large dam necessarily must be built in order to make the river navigable at that point. And I may say in passing that it has been estimated that to construct a dam for navigation purposes alone at Muscle Shoals would cost $13,000,000, according to the estimates submitted by the engineers. These various investigations, beginning with 1907, were made with the view of overcoming the shoals and making the river navigable and at the same time developing the great water-power possibilities.

Now, when the European war came on Congress began to take stock of the resources of this country for war purposes, because everyone realized that if the war was protracted there might come a time when this country would be drawn into that war, as it was eventually drawn into it; and I recall that in a hearing before a subcommittee of which I happened to be a member, in company with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, it was stated that at that time we were confronted with the startling situation that we had only five weeks' supply of nitrates in this country for the purpose of manufacturing munitions or explosives. You know that we have been dependent upon Chile for nitrates, because comparatively little synthetic nitrates are produced in this country by private interests.

So, when that situation developed, Congress in the national defense act which passed, as I recall, in June, 1916, authorized the President of the United States to select sites and provide water power necessary for the production of nitrates for war purposes, and also, as stated, for other useful products. It was argued and understood at the time that the other useful products referred to consisted of fertilizer for the benefit of the farming interests of this country.

The President appointed a commission consisting of Cabinet officers, Army engineers, and others who made a very careful survey of the entire country. They were sent to the Southeast for the purpose of making an investigation, and they finally chose the site at Muscle Shoals, in the State of Alabama. They chose it for two or three reasons.

In the first place they recognized the great possibility for the development of power at this place, a possibility which is unequaled by the amount of power produced on the American side at Niagara Falls; and for the further reason that inasmuch as the act provided that this power should be developed for the purpose of aiding in furnishing fertilizer to the farming interests, the South having been longer farmed and longer cultivated than any other section of the country, and there being on that account a greater demand for fertilizer in that section of the country than in any other section, they considered this particular site as the most desirable for all the purposes set forth in the act. There was no other site in the United States that could have been chosen except in the extreme northwest of this country, and that was not practicable for the reason I have stated. The land in that section has not been tilled long and the need for fertilizer is not so great. In fact there is no present need in some sections. This was the only site in the United States which was found to be thoroughly adapted to build a nitrate plant utilizing the power for the purpose of producing nitrates. Now what happened? We were drawn into the war. We were dependent on Chile for our nitrate for munitions or explosives. Everyone realized how unfortunate it was for this country to be dependent on nitrates which had to be brought thousands of miles from a foreign country in order to make explosives. Everyone realized the situation that we would be in if anything should happen to prevent the shipping of nitrates to this country. Everyone realized the necessity of building a great nitrate plant in this country for war emergency purposes. We all know that Germany had no natural supply, but that she carried on the war up to the armistice with synthetic nitrates produced in her own country under the two processes.

So this nitrate plant was projected under the act referred to. Nearly $100,000,000 was expended in building the two nitrate plants. Plant No. 1, being the smaller one, was devoted to the Haber process; and No. 2, costing $70,000,000 or more, was built to manufacture nitrates by the cyanamid process. A great deal of electricity is needed in both processes, not so much possibly in the Haber process, because, as I understand, that is largely a mechanical process, but a great deal of electricity is absolutely necessary in the operation of plant No. 2 because the ingredients are placed in electric furnaces and heated to incondescence by a magnified electric arc.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. GARRETT. In connection with the gentleman's statement as to the Chilean supply of nitrates, I venture to call his attention to a very important fact that apparently has escaped him and a large number of the Members of the House, and I think the public generally. That is, that the explosive requirements as distinguished from the propelling requirements were not obtainable from Chilean nitrates but had to come from ammonia, and wholly independent of the Chilean nitrate supply.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. That is another compelling reason why this plant should have been undertaken. A great deal of electricity is needed in the operation of the plant, and on account of the war emergency the steam-power plant was built and is one of the greatest in the world. But, as the Secretary of War stated, we can not manufacture nitrate for fertilizing purposes with steam power. You must have the cheaper hydroelectric power if you manufacture nitrate for commercial purposes, and hence this plant must lay idle at great cost if this kind of power is not provided.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I am asking the question for information. What is the fall at the point where this dam is to be constructed?

Mr. GARRETT. The fall is 130 feet in 18 miles.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The dam is to be 100 feet high.

Mr. MADDEN. So the fall would be 100 feet.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; that is my recollection. The President has allotted $17,000,000 from the national defense fund for the erection and construction of this dam. The order was made in February, 1918, while we were actually engaged in the war, and at a time when no one knew whether the war was to last six months or six years.

The work has progressed so that it is 30 per cent completed. I do not mean that the actual structure of the dam is 30 per cent completed, but I am referring to the preliminary work necessary, as well as actual construction. Thirty per cent of the work necessary to complete the dam is done, and now we are asked by the majority of the committee to stop the work and junk all the expenditures the Government has made in the construction of this dam; and, more than that, to allow this great nitrate plant, which has cost the Government $100,000,000, to lie idle and not be operated for any purpose.

It is well understood and everybody knows that this nitrate plant should be maintained as a war emergency. It will not only lie idle if you do not have hydroelectric power to operate it for fertilizer purposes, but it will require many thousand dollars each year in order to protect it. It will also cost many thousand dollars in the depreciation of the machinery of the plant in general. That is the situation that confronts Congress.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Would we be obliged to import nitrate in case some agency is not perfected?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Undoubtedly, and we will have to pay an import duty of $12.50 on every ton that is imported into this country.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. It has been stated that even if the plant was built nitrate could not be manufactured at a cost low enough to be practicable. What does the gentleman know about that? It is said that the cost of manufacture would be so high that it would not be practicable.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In reply to the gentleman I want to read what Mr. Washburn, president of the American Cyanamid Co., and one of the greatest experts on fertilizers in the country or in the world, had to say in 1916 before the Committee on Agriculture of this House.

Mr. Washburn is an expert recognized not only in this country but recognized in Germany and all over the world. Here is what he said with reference to the cost of the fertilizer which could be produced. He was asked this question by Mr. HEFLIN:

What is the reduction in the cost of fertilizer to the farmer, do you estimate, could be expected if the Government were to carry out this suggestion for the construction of dams for taking nitrogen from the air?

Mr. Washburn replied:

My anticipation is that the establishment of a nitrogen industry as it can be established with what I believe, and what I believe would appeal to those who study the subject, is the proper and legitimate Government cooperation, will give the farmer his fertilizer for one-half of what he otherwise would pay for it.

When he made that statement, as was stated to me by a gentleman interested in this proposition, the farmer put down his stake and he has remained there ever since in his demand that Congress give him relief from the prices being charged him for fertilizer. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has now consumed one hour.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I shall take a little more time.

Mr. HUSTED. Did the gentleman suggest what he meant by legitimate Government cooperation? Did he mean by that that the Government should contribute something toward the cost of it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Washburn was appearing at that time in support of his proposition that the Hydroelectric Power Co. be permitted to share in the cost of improvements there, and to have the use of the power that would be developed as a result of it, and, as a matter of fact, he proposed at that time to pay something like $26,000,000 for the use of that power; but it was not accepted or acted upon, because Congress passed the national defense act a little later, and the President, acting under the war emergency, decided to take it over for the Government.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is not the gentleman aware that the lowest estimates made at the time that witness was testifying with reference to the cost of the plant are now evidently very erroneous, that there has been far more sunk in the plant now than stated?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman refers to the dam when he says "plant"?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The estimates now are $45,000,000, which is an increase over the estimate formerly submitted, but that is caused by the extra cost of labor and material. I do not want the House to think that we did not have a pretty good hearing upon this subject, a rather extended hearing, in fact.

Gentlemen can read it if they will take the time to do so. Gen. Taylor stated that already the price of certain materials were being considerably reduced; that he did not believe that the plant would cost the amount of that estimate; but he said that owing to the uncertainty of the situation at the present time he was not prepared to submit an amended estimate and would use the estimate of $45,000,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is not the gentleman also aware that hardly any of the hydroelectric plants have greatly reduced the cost below what steam would cost, produced from coal, and that the great dam at Keokuk is not operating to its full capacity for the reason that it does not pay to put in some additional turbines to compete with power furnished by coal, and that the cost of this dam and all of the apparatus in connection with it will approximate the cost of operating by coal?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No. I can not agree with that statement, because the experts called before these various committees do not sustain the gentleman in that position.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If any of them will look at the facts with reference to the power furnished and the cost, he will find it to agree with what I have stated. It is a fact that the great dam at Keokuk is not being utilized to its full power.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Here is a statement made directly in line with the statement made by the gentleman with reference to the difference in the cost of steam power and hydroelectric power:

The importance of the dam can be measured by the saving in a year with water-power operation over steam-power operation. A conservative estimate of the cost of steam power is $36 per horsepower per year, and the commercial value of the water power suitable for operating the nitrate plant is established by Mr. Washburn's offer of $10 per horsepower per year for this purpose. Therefore there is an established saving of $26 per horsepower per year in the use of water power over that which might be realized by the use of steam power. Since the operation of the plant at capacity will require the use of about 100,000 horsepower, the annual saving would be approximately $2,600,000, which is interest at 5 per cent on $52,000,000.

I would say, furthermore, that that does not take into consideration the proposition to sell the surplus power to industries in that section of the country. Reliable witnesses and experts who have appeared before the committee, and who appeared before the Senate Committee on Agriculture, state that the Government may rely reasonably upon receipts amounting to $4,000,000 from the sale of this surplus horsepower and that be used in the operation of the dam.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Reliable witnesses who were testifying before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors not so very long ago, when this project was up, testified that there would not be any demand.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On the contrary, the demand will exceed the supply. Col. Hugh L. Cooper has been referred to. He is one of the greatest hydroelectric engineers in the world. He is the man who built the celebrated Keokuk Dam in the gentleman's State, and I am sure the gentleman would place confidence in Col. Cooper and his complete knowledge of matters of this kind. In a letter addressed to Gen. Harry Taylor, dated November 27, 1920, appearing in the hearings at page 998, he says:

5. Under your instructions we have figured that the plant when completed must earn 5 per cent for interest and 5 per cent for depreciation and operation, or 10 per cent of the cost of the power end of the enterprise. Both of these assumptions are conservative. The kilowatt hours in paragraph 2 multiplied by the selling prices in paragraph 4 will produce a gross annual income of $4,554,000, which is 10 per cent of a cost price of $45,540,000. The best estimate that can be made at this time of the total cost of the project, including the two lift locks and all of the navigation facilities, is around $50,000,000, and thus leaves about $4,500,000 as the amount applicable to the navigation account.

6. All of the above quantities are accurate and are not to be considered as assumptions or approximations. The values for the secondary and primary kilowatt hours are about 50 per cent of prewar steam costs in the territory under consideration.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Everybody concedes the ability of Col. Cooper. Col. Cooper built the Keokuk Dam, but before he began to build it he said that it would cost $15,000,000, when, as a matter of fact, it cost between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000. Every plant that is supplied with power from the Keokuk generation is required to keep an auxiliary steam plant in order to be sure they have the power to run their business, and they must add the cost of the maintenance of the auxiliary steam plant to whatever they pay for the electric energy received from the water power wherever it may be.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Quite true——

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. The condition which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has just described as existing in connection with the Keokuk Dam, viz, the necessity for a steam power plant, is true of every large water-power project in the world.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is what I was about to say.

Mr. GARRETT. That is what I wish to suggest in connection with what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] said a few moments ago as to not developing the full capacity of the Keokuk plant in order to use the water power they are developing in connection with steam power.

I think the gentleman from Iowa will find that the hesitation is due to the fact that if they increase by the installation of turbines the hydroelectric power that the increased power can only be derived at certain periods and that the increased flow of water so far does not encourage the belief that it will be economical to develop the additional power for such periods as it can be developed and operated wholly by water power, and that that element of cost in connection with additional steam power that will be required is the controlling element in the determination.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield.

Mr. HUSTED. Has the gentleman any recent estimate of the cost of fully completing the project?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Forty-five million dollars is the estimate on which they stand at the present time.

Mr. HUSTED. That is the estimate for fully completing it. How much money has been appropriated to-day?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have expended $12,000,000 up to the present time, and by May 31 $5,000,000 additional will be expended.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman also know what the total possible output of the plant in nitrates will be?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think it was stated by the gentleman from Iowa that it was 100,000 tons or 110,000 tons. I do not now recall, I will state to the gentleman very frankly.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the gentleman have any information as to the amount it is estimated there will be demand for commercial fertilizer? How much has been used now, and what is the estimated demand for it for agricultural purposes?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There will be an unlimited demand for all the fertilizer that can be manufactured at this plant. It was stated in the hearings that the demand for fertilizer has increased at the present time to an enormous extent, owing to the fact that the lands in the West are being longer cultivated; and naturally as nitrogen is taken from the soil it is necessary to put it back, and the demand has increased to such an extent that even if this plant were run at full capacity there would still be a demand for all fertilizer produced by private interests in the country and the necessity possibly of increasing the imports from Chile. Now, gentlemen can understand therefore why there is such a demand on the part of farm organizations and farmers for the Government to operate this plant and give to the farmers the relief that they are asking. Gentlemen will appreciate just what will be the result in so far as the price of the other fertilizer is concerned if this relief is not given. The farmers will either pay an enormous and almost prohibitive price for fertilizer or the land can not be fertilized, with the result of loss in production. This is a proposition which appeals not only to the farmer but to the consumer in the cities.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BRIGGS. Can the gentleman tell us what the cost of this commercial manufactured nitrate is as compared with Chilean nitrate and the comparative value?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I just read the statement of Mr. Washburn to the effect that it can be manufactured for half the cost of what it is costing now. Of course we understand that during the war fertilizer was selling for about $100 to $150.

Mr. BRIGGS. But is very much lower now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is very much lower, but it is selling at a high price.

Mr. BRIGGS. How much nitrates has this plant ever turned out?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It was producing nitrates at the time the armistice was signed.

Mr. BRIGGS. And it is not operated now?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; it can not be profitably operated except in the case of war emergency except by the use of hydroelectric power. It can not be operated for fertilizer purposes without obtaining some cheap form of power. That is what this appropriation was intended to cover. The gentleman from Iowa stated that he preferred that this matter go over a couple of months. What is going to happen if it goes over a couple of months? This bill is the only bill under the rules of the House under which such appropriation can be carried. We will have adjourned in a couple of months. If the appropriation is not made for the further construction of this plant naturally the engineers in charge are not going to run up to May 31 and spend all the money now available. It will be necessary for them to begin to curtail expenditures now and quit work. In the event Congress is not going to make further appropriation they will retain enough money to take care of the plant. Col. Cooper, Gen. Taylor, and others stated that if they stop that work even for one year it is going to result in an actual loss of $4,500,000.

Mr. HUDSPETH. They do not ask for the entire $45,000,000?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Only $10,000,000 to carry on the work during the next fiscal year. The actual loss the Government will sustain by reason of the stoppage of this work will amount to four and a half million dollars. That does not take into consideration the loss that will occur in the disintegration of their organization, consisting of more than 4,100 men at present—men who have been chosen and who have been recruited from various places and stations and brought there, and who have now been made very efficient, because the more inefficient have been weeded out and they have retained the more efficient force. Gen. Taylor stated that the force will be disentegrated if this work stops, and if it should start up again it will be necessary to open recruiting offices and re-form the force. And in addition to that, as the gentleman from Iowa stated, there are three cofferdams; four of them, I think, ultimately. One of them has the concrete and cement placed in it practically, and they will be able to remove it in a very short time. The one at Jacksons Island, where they have got a lot of rock excavation to make, will probably be ready to be removed next April. If they stop this work in these cofferdams, which cost $360,000 apiece, and a flood should come this winter or next winter, you may find that they will be wiped out, as well as the bridge, which cost more than $600,000.

Mr. HUSTED. I merely wanted to say that I think the committee in charge of this matter should go very carefully into the cost of the production, because, if fertilizers can be produced there, as the gentleman says, at one-half of their present cost, certainly this proposition should be completed and the country should have the benefit of it. But it seems to me the committee has not gone very carefully into the question of cost there, and their arguments are not very convincing.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I know the gentleman made the point that we were limited in our hearings. We only had the Secretary of War, and Secretary Taylor and Col. Cooper, who appeared before us. But the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] called the attention of the committee to this hearing, consisting of more than 500 pages, before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in the United States Senate, in which every fact and element in the construction of this dam was gone into and discussed from every possible angle. In addition to that, there were hearings before the Committee on Agriculture of the House, which were held on February 9, 1916, in which those facts were gone into, and then the hearings before the sundry civil subcommittee. So it seems to me, if we are to delay this important matter at this critical stage, when to delay means to lose in actual money $4,500,000, and run the possibility of having the $17,000,000 wiped out, we ought to be very frank about it and say that our real object is to delay it and finally to defeat it, or we ought to make the appropriation necessary to maintain it. And that is what the farmers of this country expect you gentlemen to do. I want to say to the Republican majority in this House that if this proposition fails, the responsibility is yours and yours alone. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The farmers have been asking for this appropriation for three or four years. They have been here knocking at the doors of the Congress in order to get cheap fertilizer. Here is a proposition that by the expenditure of comparatively little additional money you can give them that which they ask.

Mr. GOOD. I am sure the gentleman was surprised, as I was, when I sent and got a copy of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Agriculture, to find that as late as March 20, when they commenced those hearings, the only estimated cost complete of this whole structure was $12,500,000.

Mr. GARRETT. That was not the dam. That was the cost, if the gentleman will permit, of converting the nitrate plant into a sulphate plant; that is, putting in the machinery that was necessary to make ammonium sulphate.

Mr. GOOD. I have not gathered that. I have not completed the reading of the hearings yet, because some of them are in fine print. It was $12,500,000, and it would not take that much money to make those changes. Col. Roberts was speaking about the power to be developed by the dam, and the whole hearings, I will admit, were quite confused. You can not tell what they expect to spend the $12,000,000 for.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will permit, originally the War Department made a request for $12,000,000 to furnish working capital and to put in the necessary machinery to make it into an ammonium-sulphate plant. It is now a complete ammonium plant. Subsequently they withdrew that and proposed they would raise the money, and that is in a bill that is now pending in another body—that they would sell on the market 300,000 tons of Chilean nitrate, and by that means derive the capital. That refers wholly to the cost incident to making an ammonium-sulphate plant and not to any expenditure on the dam.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has followed this matter a great deal more closely than I. My examination into the matter has only been since the estimate, and we went into the matter only as fully as we could there, but my understanding is in reading this hearing before the Senate committee that they proposed to issue a preferred stock, and when asked why they issued preferred stock to that amount, when they had spent around $100,000 000 before, they said they only intended to incorporate for enough to complete the project. I took it all the way through that that was the amount that was estimated at that time to complete the dam after the $17,500,000. If not, where were we to get the money to complete the dam and this power house?

Mr. ALMON. If the gentleman will yield, I was present and heard all that was said and am familiar with the proposition, and the gentleman from Tennessee is correct. The item referred to by the chairman of the committee has no reference in any way whatever to the dam, but purely to working capital for the corporation that the Kahn-Wadsworth bill has proposed. About $3,000,000 of it is to add to the present plant what is known as the ammonium sulphate plant, and the $500,000,000 to which the gentleman refers has no reference whatever to the working dam, but to the nitrate plant No. 2.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will yield just a moment further, I wish to say to the gentleman from New York on the question of cost that there was a board appointed in the Ordnance Department known as the Glasgow board, or, at least, they made a report known as the Glasgow report, which went into complete detail. Whether it has changed any since that time I do not know. It is highly technical and pretty long, of course. The gentleman will find that in the hearings held before the subcommittee No. 5 of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department on March 12, 1920. That will be available at the committee room. It goes into great detail.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, gentlemen, I am going to conclude, because I have talked longer than I expected. I prefer to yield to other gentlemen who have made a thorough investigation of this matter and who expect to discuss it. When the so-called farmers' tariff bill was pending in this House gentlemen were very emphatic in the expression of their anxiety to do something to relieve the farmer.

The Republican majority in this House proposed the bill as a panacea for the farmer and as something which would enable the farmer to reap more profit as the result of his labor. That question was controverted. It was at least a question about which some doubt could be expressed, and there were many who contended that it would have the reverse effect, that it not only would not tend to increase the value of the farmer's product, but it would ultimately serve to decrease it, because retaliatory measures might be enacted by other countries to which we export our products, and the farmer would be cut off from foreign markets which he now enjoys.

Be that as it may, here is a proposition, I wish to say to the Republican side of this Chamber, where there can be no doubt about the ability to serve the farmer if you will only make the appropriation necessary to carry the work on this dam to completion, because everybody is agreed, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] in his remarks to-day stated, that there could be no doubt but that the manufacture of nitrate and the production of fertilizer at this plant would be much cheaper than it can be manufactured by using nitrates imported from Chile. There can be no question therefore as to the value of this work to the farmer and as to the benefit you can confer on him by carrying on this work to its completion.

It is no answer, gentlemen, to the requests that the farmers are making for this appropriation to say that they have been pretty extravagant down there in the past in the building of certain officers' houses or quarters, or a clubhouse, as the gentleman from Iowa says. This $10,000,000 is not being asked to construct houses or to put up a clubhouse.

This money is being asked to carry on the work on this dam during the next fiscal year, and to prevent a situation where the Government will have to withdraw from the work and possibly lose the value of all that has been done there. It will take something like three years to build this dam——

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman happen to know where, if at all, nitrates by this process have been economically produced so as to compete with Chilian nitrates by the use of water power?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In Germany, for instance.

Mr. HUSTED. By water power?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Germany made them, but not with water power.

Mr. HUSTED. As a commercial proposition?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman, from information brought out in the committee, that France is now using the largest munition plant she has, at Tours, and has turned it into a fertilizer plant.

Mr. HUSTED. What power are they proposing to use in France? The reason I ask the question is that I understand Germany originally started her plant in Scandinavia, in Norway, and then it was transferred to Bingen, and the reason why it was transferred to Bingen is that they have a coke factory there, and the gas was not used, and they now have means whereby they utilize the gas by a process known as the Claude process, and they thus get the very cheapest possible kind of power, and with that very cheap power they were enabled to produce them economically. But it does not follow at all that down here at Muscle Shoals we could get so cheap a power that we could reduce what is ordinarily an extremely expensive process to a process cheap enough so that we could produce nitrates which we can sell at a lower price than the farmers are now paying.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that if we are not willing to accept the testimony of recognized experts we can not get anywhere. We have got to accept the positive and emphatic statements of men who are recognized as experts and who know what they are talking about. They all agree that it is absolutely impossible to manufacture nitrates there for fertilizer purposes by steam power for commercial purposes, because the price would be prohibitive, but that if they were manufactured by water power, as here proposed, they could be furnished to the farmers who need them at one-half of the present cost.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], if I can have his attention for a moment, that the American Cyanamid Co., which owns the patent on the cyanamid process and which, through a subsidiary of itself built this Muscle Shoals plant, is engaged on the Canadian side of Niagara Falls, and has been for a number of years, in the production of cyanamid. It only carries a product known as cyanamid, and I can not tell how much of it has gone into fertilizer, but it has been produced in large commercial quantities for many years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Who was it that stated that the French were using this process at Tours?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have the statement here.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The statement seems to me positively ridiculous in view of the situation that the French are in at this time, both as to fertilizer and substitutes for fertilizer in the way of power.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no personal knowledge, I will say to the gentleman, but that was the statement that was made, and I think I can turn to it in just a moment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am inclined to think the committee has accumulated a great deal of misinformation on the subject.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will read from the brief of Prof. W. G. Waldo, consulting engineer for the Muscle Shoals Association and the Tennessee River Improvement Association. I have known Prof. Waldo for a great many years, and I know he is a gentleman of high character and fine attainments, a splendid engineer, and a man who does not make a statement unless he is satisfied he is correct in it. In this statement he says:

In addition to such a disadvantage—

And he is referring now to the proposition to let this plant either remain idle or to sell it for salvage, having referred to the experience of the Government in salvaging its powder plants, one of them at Old Hickory, near Nashville, Tenn., which was sold for less than 5 cents on the dollar. He says:

There is the fact that can not be escaped, that other countries are using similar plants built in war time for the manufacture of fertilizers for their farmers, and by operating them for this purpose they are keeping these plants abreast of the developments in this field and are prepared to install such improvements as are being constantly made.

England, though she controls the sea, and although the enormous investment in Chilean nitrate industry is principally British capital, still England, since the war, has caused the formation of a company with $25,000,000 capital to establish the air nitrogen fixation industry in England. France has already turned her largest munition plant at Tours into a fertilizer plant. Japan, with the industry already established, has lately purchased the rights to the Claude process for fixing nitrogen, which is claimed to be cheaper than any of the processes now in operation. Germany has already proposed to ship to the United States, free of export duty, 50,000 tons of pure nitrogen, the equivalent of 250,000 tons of ammonium sulphate.

The United States has already paid to the Chilean Government and the Chilean nitrate interests the enormous sum of $643,734,828. In the face of this situation, and knowing what other nations are doing with regard to their nitrogen supply, should we hesitate for a moment to finish the dam and utilize the facilities which are already paid for, for the purpose of keeping them abreast of the times, aiding our farmers in an important way in time of peace, and at the same time keeping the plant in readiness to meet any war-time emergency?

Now, gentlemen, that is the proposition. It is just simply a question whether you are going to make this appropriation now or whether you are going to postpone it for all time to come. Talk about two months! Why, what further investigation can you make? In two months and five days from now Congress will have adjourned. In what bill are you going to carry the appropriation? If the chairman of the committee was not satisfied with the hearings sufficiently to form an opinion one way or the other, with such an immense sum involved, I am very sorry, indeed, that he did not postpone the reporting of this bill for at least a day or two, until we could have called further witnesses before the committee and examined them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman consider the statement that he read as in any way supporting his proposition? He talks about this English company. Does not the gentleman know that there is no water power to amount to anything in England?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Iowa is begging the question. He asked me for my authority for stating that the Government of France had turned its largest munition plant, at Tours, into a fertilizer factory.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say that that statement is as incorrect as the other.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now the gentleman talks about water power in England. I read that statement to the gentleman to satisfy him by competent authority that the fact which he only suspects not to be true is true.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman want to stand right now on that Tours proposition, that they have great water power there at Tours, France, and that they are using it for that purpose?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I said nothing about water power at Tours.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do you think that with coal at $50 a ton in France she is going to manufacture nitrates from the air?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I said that France had turned her largest munition plant at Tours into a fertilizer plant; and I have substantiated that statement, of which I have no personal knowledge, by the testimony of Prof. Waldo, a highly competent engineer and credible witness.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean to say that with coal at $50 a ton in France the Government of France is manufacturing nitrates from the air at Tours? The committee, I am convinced, did not take any thought about it if they relied on such statements.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I am satisfied that the majority of this committee did not take any thought about it or it would have brought in an appropriation of $10,000,000 to continue the dam. That is what I am complaining of. I am complaining of the fact that when opportunity offers to serve the farmers, to give them fertilizer at less than one-half, the Republican majority on the Appropriations Committee proposes to deny the necessary appropriation to carry on this work although it is now 30 per cent completed. I do not know of anyone in the United States who has protested against the construction of that dam, and I make no charges, but I have received no telegram from anybody protesting against it except fertilizer plants which have asked me to oppose the appropriation. If it will not furnish the farmers with cheaper fertilizer, I can not understand why the Fertilizer Trust and its allied industries are making every possible effort they can to get Congress to turn down the proposition and the Government to lose the money that it has invested.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no fertilizer plant in my State.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the gentleman has farmers who need fertilizer.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We get the fertilizer by planting clover and legumes. But, aside from that, if the gentleman had taken very much thought he would not have given so much consideration to some one hired to carry on the propaganda for this proposition.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman ought not to speak that way of Prof. Waldo. There is not a higher class man in Iowa or Tennessee than Prof. Waldo. He is a gentleman as far from misrepresenting the facts as any man I ever knew. He is a distinguished educator, a distinguished engineer, who is representing the public interest, and no private interest whatever.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the splendid argument which the gentleman from Tennessee is making does not convince the 12 or 15 Members of the majority party on the floor, how does he expect to convert the 100 absent Members who will never hear his speech?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know; I may be speaking to deaf ears, but I have had an opportunity to express my own views as to what is needed.

Mr. GARRETT. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman from Iowa should find it to be a fact that the Government of France is converting its munition factory into a fertilizer factory, would that have any influence on his mind?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I think the statement in a general way is correct, but it is altogether a different process, altogether a different plant.

Mr. GARRETT. We are very anxious to have the friendship of the gentleman from Iowa, and this is a question of fact about which I shall endeavor to give the gentleman some information.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides, in part, for the United States Coast Guard. That service is a small unit, but its record is replete with deeds of bravery and heroism. On December 19 the New York Times published an editorial in reference to the accomplishments of the Coast Guard for the past year. The editorial is a most splendid description of the efficient work rendered by that service. It is in accord with my own view of what the Coast Guard is doing for the country, both on sea and land, in every field where bravery and unselfish sacrifice denotes the performance of duty, exacting and dangerous. It gives praise where praise is deserved and accurately portrays the manifold calls made on those who are upholding the splendid traditions of a service which has never been found wanting. At the present time, with the merchant marine the largest in the history of the Nation, the service of the Coast Guard is of unusual importance. In credit to the officers and men of that service I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the editorial to which I refer may be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOWELL). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE COAST GUARD.

There is probably more reading matter in the Coast Guard report of Commandant W. E. Reynolds than can be found in that mastodonic fiction "Les Miserables," but in the account of what the Coast Guard men performed, suffered, and endured in the fiscal year ended June 30 there is no fiction. * * *

To the summer visitor on the Atlantic seaboard a Coast Guard man is a robust and ruddy person, who has a perpetual vacation and yearns for sociability, with occasional opportunities to be a hero by fishing bathers out of the undertow. As a matter of fact, the men enrolled in this sea and land service in coastal waters from Alaska to Key West and Port Isabel live a life of toil, adventure, danger, and hardship that can not be matched by either the Army or Navy, except when the country is at war. Yet the public knows little about the Coast Guard. It hides its light under a bushel.

How many of us know what superheroes the officers and men of the cutter Unalga were when they fought the influenza at Unalaska? The Unalga lay at Akun Island waiting for a storm to blow over when wireless word came that the "flu" was epidemic at Unalaska. Capt. Dodge at once weighed anchor and was off to fight the plague—a queer seaman's job. Soon after he arrived at the bleak spot he sent this message to headquarters:

"Seventy new cases influenza developed since yesterday; three deaths. At present 150 cases and 7 deaths. Every house in Unalaska affected; several expected to die hourly; situation very serious; no news from villages to westward since last year; men (Unalga's men) digging graves and carpenter making coffins. All natives and nearly all white population down and helpless."

Day after day went tragically by, and each day the men and officers of the Coast Guard cutter fed and fueled Unalaska, cleaned houses, kept up fires, nursed the sick, removed the dead, put them in coffins made by the Unalga's carpenter, and buried the plague victims. An orphans' home was established. There is this item of a June day: "Another band of orphans was picked up and taken to the orphans' home and five bodies were interred." After many strenuous and terrible days the cutter Bear came to the relief of the Unalga's plague-worn crew, followed by the U. S. S. Marblehead and Vicksburg, the Unalga going on to Nushagak to supply medicines and render help. Horrors were cumulative at Nushagak. A party sent to Coffee Point "ministered to numerous sick and discovered a number of bodies that had long remained unburied. Several of the latter had been partly eaten by dogs. The relief party buried the dead and shot all dogs seen." The dogs of Alaska where the influenza raged were neglected and starving. At other times they drew sleds through the snow and were often four-footed heroes. But now they were perishing from hunger. In the Wood River district the dogs, "as ravenous and ferocious as wolves," attacked the Unalga's men and were summarily executed. "Valiant service," Secretary CARTER GLASS called the work of the Unalga's crew, in a letter of thanks to Capt. Dodge. They had added, said the Secretary, "another brilliant chapter of endeavor to the annals of the service."

In looking over Commandant Reynolds's report one wonders how the Coast Guard at sea and ashore could have crowded so much brave, heroic, and useful work into one year and a little more, for it was the end of May, 1919, when the Unalga steamed into Unalaska. On all our coasts, from the Bay of Fundy round to Bering Sea, the Coast Guard men are saving life at sea and on land wherever men and women are in peril. They saved 2,417 lives during the "fiscal year"; they assisted 8,427 persons on board vessels, and they cared for 561 persons along the surf line. There are a hundred stories stranger than fiction in the exacting work of the Grand Banks ice patrol.

Reynolds says that "there was not a day throughout the year when service was not performed by cutter or by station crews designed to assist, relieve, or comfort humanity in one way or another." Read about the rescue of the crew of the schooner Cape Horn, or about the wreck of the H. E. Runnells, or the sinking of the Sunbeam (with her unlawful freight of Chinamen from Cuba, nearly all perished), and the feeling will be that Clark Russell or Morgan Robertson never wrote anything more thrilling. The pen of Reynolds is mightier than any fiction written for "best sellers."

There is nothing too humble for a Coast Guard man to do alongshore if it is useful. They must be a kindly, human sort of folk, for they are ever helping the lost and strayed and relieving vagabonds, and even wanderers "half seas over." It is this active spirit of comradeship that accounts for some amusing or curious items in the long record; for instance, "Rescued a teamster who had fallen into the water with his mule; intoxicated man found by patrol down in water, patrol carried man on his back to station; removed fishhook from finger of small boy; put out in boat and picked up a calf swimming; drove cattle out of cornfield; rescued a horse that had fallen through the ice; removed tablet from memorial building erected to memory of Margaret Fuller, building undermined by surf."

And here is a simple statement of duty performed that tugs at the heartstrings: "Made coffin, dug grave, and buried body of small child of neighbor." What a splendid, often heroic, and always unselfish round of duty is that of the United States Coast Guard! Wherever they may be on patrol or on shipboard under the flag, may a Merry Christmas be theirs!

[Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, to-morrow will largely be given up to a further discussion on one item which I think will be attempted to be put in the bill, and that is in regard to nitrates. I hope, if possible, to have debate on the entire bill closed to-morrow and read the first paragraph of the bill, but to go no further with the reading of the bill to-morrow. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 15422, the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

REREFERENCE.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the rereference of the bill (H. R. 15126) relating to amendment of section 2 of the water power act. It should be referred to the Select Committee on Water Power instead of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Wisconsin understand that the Select Committee on Water Power, having reported a bill, now has an existence and jurisdiction to consider amendments to such legislation?

Mr. ESCH. I think the Select Committee on Water Power exists during this entire session of Congress and that all bills relating to water power should be referred to it.

Mr. WALSH. It is covered in the resolution creating it?

Mr. ESCH. There is no doubt about it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has consulted the chairmen of both committees, the Chair understands. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. 4682. An act to amend section 74 of the Judicial Code as amended.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HICKS was granted leave of absence, for one day, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 31, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 31, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of the universe, whose mandates are implicitly obeyed, under the dispensation of a wise Providence. Thou hast brought us to the threshold of a new-born year with its hopes and promises. The past is replete with Thy goodness. If we were wise we would follow the truths Thou hast placed before us, correct our mistakes, and live to what we know is right, just, and merciful, and be obedient to Thy will.

The recent great war ought to teach us common sense and reason, but we go on blundering, bringing untold misery to the world. Right is right and will live. Might makes for wrong, illustrated in the misery caused by war under the self-centered thoughts which lead ever to disaster. Quicken the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ in our souls, that love may reign supreme. And Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15422, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that when the committee rose last evening the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] had used 2 hours and 19 minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] had used 2 hours and 22 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. This is such an important subject which is to be discussed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that I am sure we should have a quorum in the Committee of the Whole available, and it occurs to me that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] should have a quorum present to hear this important item discussed.

Mr. GOOD. I think there is a quorum in town, but it might develop there would not be.

Mr. BLANTON. We will have to develop only a hundred.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I will not make the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, when it was announced that the Committee on Appropriations had failed to bring in as a part of this bill an appropriation for continuing work upon the construction of the Muscle Shoals Dam, which, I believe, the engineers are accustomed to refer to as the "Wilson Dam," it brought a sense of disappointment, the magnitude of which it is rather difficult to express, to a very large number of people in a very large section of these United States. And if all phases of this matter could be fully understood by the people of the country generally I have no doubt that the regret would be well-nigh universal.

At the proper time during the consideration of this bill I understand that an effort will be made to have an amendment adopted which will carry an appropriation for continuing the work which is now in progress and which must otherwise stop the last of May, or the last of June at most. I desire to discuss this matter for a little while with the Members of the House. What I have to say is being said, Mr. Chairman, for the Members of the House. I am not speaking for the RECORD, and I have no thought of distributing my printed remarks, but I am speaking only in an effort to bring before the membership a true vision of what exists in the Muscle Shoals vicinity.

I should like to introduce you, in the first instance, to the Tennessee River. I should like for you to obtain——

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? How much has already been expended on the Muscle Shoals proposition?

Mr. GARRETT. I can not tell the gentleman the amount that has been expended, but there has been allotted to the dam about $17,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Twelve million dollars has been expended.

Mr. GARRETT. Twelve million dollars, I am informed by my colleague.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are the remarks the gentleman is going to make based on having seen the Muscle Shoals proposition and from his observation in looking over the situation, or is he going only by the record and what is to be seen by that?

Mr. GARRETT. From the record and from personal inspection. I may say that such familiarity as I have with this project was brought about in a very large measure by my work as a member of subcommittee No. 5 of the special committee investigating expenditures in the War Department. That subcommittee made a pretty exhaustive investigation of what is known as the nitrates expenditures, and the matters concerning which I shall talk are largely involved in the question of nitrates. The committee personally visited that section of the country, holding hearings at Florence, Ala., for many days, and personally visited the site of this dam and viewed the work that was in progress just about 11 months ago. We also visited the nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, of which I shall speak, inspecting them thoroughly.

Geologists tell us that if you will begin in the vicinity of Washington and run down the Potomac River and around the coast and up the James River to Richmond, and thence trace in a southerly direction down through the Muscle Shoals vicinity, you will have roughly outlined the old coast line of the Gulf of Mexico. There are many streams in this territory. The largest of them is the Tennessee River.

This river has its beginning in that section of the United States in which there is the heaviest waterfall except, as I now remember it, in the State of Washington. All the country is reasonably familiar with the Ohio River and the Ohio River section, because that river and that section have been improved and developed. It may surprise some to know that the Tennessee River flows through a section whose possibilities are quite as vast as are the possibilities of all that great section of the country drained by the Ohio. The Tennessee River is formed by the junction of the Holston and the Clinch, which come together about 4 miles above the lovely and thriving city of Knoxville. It flows in a southwesterly direction, passing the great city of Chattanooga and enters the State of Alabama a few miles below that city. It sweeps in something of a circle through the northern end of Alabama and runs through a corner of the State of Mississippi, and then, like all true and loyal Tennesseans, turns back into the mother State. It flows then in a northerly direction until it forms a junction with the Ohio. And another fact which may be somewhat surprising to many is that at the junction between the Tennessee and Ohio Rivers the Tennessee is the larger of the two. The volume of water, in other words, is greater in the Tennessee at the point where it empties into the Ohio than is the volume of water in the Ohio at that point.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; I shall be glad to.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Can the gentleman indicate what the flow per second is?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not know; I have not those figures in mind.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Is the stream subject to a wide fluctuation in flow? Is there a period of freshet and then a period of low water?

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, they have periods of high water, but from the Muscle Shoals—and that, by the way, is where the river gives indication of getting disgusted and begins to turn back home—from Muscle Shoals to its mouth at the Ohio River there is practically year-round navigation for substantial river craft.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. The gentleman does not know what the flow is at Muscle Shoals?

Mr. GARRETT. No; I can not tell that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield there for a suggestion, I will say that the Tennessee River has a greater uniformity of flow during the entire year than the Ohio. The Ohio has the larger freshets and floods, which take it outside of its banks, but the Tennessee River, most of the time, stays within its banks, and has a constant flow of water throughout the year.

Mr. GARRETT. I thank the gentleman. I am sure the gentleman's statement is correct.

Now, this improvement, the continuation of which we so earnestly desire, has two great aspects. One is the navigation feature and the other is the development of hydroelectric power; and connected with the latter—that is, the development of the hydroelectric power—there are two other aspects, to wit, the manufacture of fertilizer and the maintenance of what every military man declares to be the greatest material military asset of the Government, to wit, nitrate plant No. 2, located within 2 or 3 miles of this dam, in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals. Therefore all of the basic industries of man are directly involved, and are to be affected by this improvement, to wit, agriculture, mining, manufacture, and commerce.

This river flows through regions rich in minerals; the iron and coal, the marble, the zinc, the barites of east Tennessee; the great iron fields of the Birmingham region of Alabama and the coal fields as well; and in its lower reaches it flows through the rich agricultural section of northern Alabama, Mississippi, western Tennessee, and Kentucky.

Now, that which I am particularly interested in is that gentlemen shall get and keep clearly in their minds what works are there now, and consider them in the light of the possibilities. It is because we in that section know them so well that we are unable to understand the action of the committee in withholding an appropriation for the continuation of a project which has been advanced to the point where it is 30 per cent or more complete. They do not understand it down in Tennessee and other States of the southern section. They know that it is not a local matter. They know that it extends far beyond any neighborhood improvement or any merely local or provincial expenditure, and therefore they are puzzled. They wonder what this omission means. Does it mean that the majority party which now controls the Congress has determined to abandon the policy of development which was then begun? Does the withholding of an appropriation at this time mean that it is the purpose of the dominant powers in this Congress to abandon that work, to let it fall into ruin, and to let that great development go by? Its vastness and the knowledge which exists in the community is that which has brought wonder and apprehension to the minds of the commercial, the industrial, the agricultural interests, all the interests of that vast section.

I do not remember, Mr. Chairman, a time throughout my experience here when I have ever before undertaken to add to the amount carried in an appropriation bill, no matter what party was in power. My disposition has always been to try and aid those who are endeavoring to hold down appropriations. If it was a matter of beginning this activity at this time I should not think, under the conditions which prevail, of pressing; but it has already begun; it is in process of building. If it shall be abandoned the loss to the Government has been estimated, I think, by one as high as $4,000,000, as the result of the temporary cessation of the work for even a few months.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman kindly tell us how much money would be required to complete the Muscle Shoals project?

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman refer to the dam?

Mr. DUNBAR. I refer to the dam and to the entire construction work that is now going on.

Mr. GARRETT. Unfortunately I am not able to tell the gentleman. The Secretary of War stated before the Committee on Appropriations, as I see from the hearing, that it was estimated that the total cost of the dam might amount to as much as $45,000,000. But there were various elements involved. That, for instance, was based on the price of concrete at a dollar higher than it is now, and upon various other elements, so that that is nothing but an estimate. I can not give the gentleman any specific figures as to what the cost of the construction of the dam will be.

Mr. DUNBAR. How much has been expended on the construction of the dam thus far?

Mr. GARRETT. My colleague from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] informs me that on the construction of the dam thus far there has been $12,000,000 expended and obligated.

Mr. DUNBAR. Then there would be required $33,000,000 more?

Mr. GARRETT. No; $17,000,000 has already been allotted. All that is being asked for at this time, I understand, is about $10,000,000.

Mr. ALMON. Seventeen million dollars has been made available on the dam, and $12,000,000 has been expended and contracted for, and about $5,000,000 more is to be used to continue the work until the 1st of May next.

Mr. DUNBAR. Then the appropriation will bring the total up to $25,000,000?

Mr. ALMON. It will bring it up to $27,000,000; and, assuming that it would take $40,000,000, there would be required $13,000,000 in addition to the $10,000,000 asked for.

Mr. GARRETT. Now, I want to state what has been done, so that gentlemen may have a clear idea in their minds of the material things which exist there.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I confess, by reason of my short membership in the House, that I have not the information on this subject that other Members have. I would like to ask the gentleman now speaking, or some other gentleman interested in the matter and having full information, what congressional initiative or sanction there has been heretofore for the work?

Mr. GARRETT. I am just coming to that. Let me say, first, however, that all of the work which has been done at Muscle Shoals and in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals has been the object of very great criticism. It is criticized vigorously in the report of the Graham committee, made to this House at the last session. In minority views filed in connection with the report I pointed out my dissent from much of that criticism, but I do not wish now to go into any discussion of the past. I am ready, however, to discuss that if occasion should ever arise.

Here is substantially the answer to the inquiry of my friend from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM]. For many years efforts were made here to get development started at the Muscle Shoals. So far as I am able to learn from the hearings, one of the first men of the country to vision the great possibilities which existed there for power and for the development of navigation was that very eminent and very practical statesman, the late Hon. John T. Morgan, of Alabama. [Applause.] He saw clearly the possibilities of power development and its consequent benefit in this great, rich section.

Various Members of Congress from the eighth Alabama district, our lamented friend, Judge Richardson, whom many of us here remember so well; probably "Fighting Joe" Wheeler, who preceded him—though I have no record of his activity in that regard—and our worthy friend who now represents that district, Judge ALMON, kept alive, by bills introduced, efforts to bring about congressional recognition of these possibilities and the development of these great powers.

The first legislation on the subject was that contained in the national defense act. I mean now legislation other than surveys. The national defense act was passed in 1916, and in that act it was provided—with the permission of the committee I will insert the language of the act—it was provided that the President should select some point deemed proper for the development of a plant for the manufacture of fertilizer in times of peace and munitions in times of war, and develop water power to be used in connection with the manufacture of these materials—I am not quoting the language accurately, but the act will speak for itself—and appropriating $20,000,000 with which to begin the work. It probably was hoped at that time that $20,000,000 would cover the expense, but it has not done so. The act upon which all the dam work is based is as follows:

Section 124 provided, in part, as follows:

> The President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to make, or cause to be made, such investigation as in his judgment is necessary to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means for the production of nitrates and other products for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products by water power or any other power as in his judgment is the best and cheapest to use; and is also hereby authorized and empowered to designate for the exclusive use of the United States, if in his judgment such means is best and cheapest, such site or sites upon any navigable or nonnavigable river or rivers, or upon the public lands, as in his opinion will be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act; and is further authorized to construct, maintain, and operate, at or on any site or sites so designated, dams, locks, improvements to navigation, power houses, and other plants and equipment, or other means than water power, as in his judgment is the best and cheapest, necessary, or convenient for the generation of electrical or other power, and for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

Another part of the section appropriated $20,000,000 for the work.

Now, I wish you to get clearly in your mind this—and I merely express my own view of the matter: This dam ought to be completed, in my opinion, whatever Congress may determine shall be the fate of nitrate plant No. 2.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is that then the only legislation that has been had that might be said to relate directly or indirectly to this project?

Mr. GARRETT. That is the only legislation under which the dam is being constructed. Of course, the nitrate plants were built out of entirely different appropriations, except a part of plant No. 1.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has this particular project directly by name been recognized or mentioned in any legislation by Congress, or has all of the money been expended under appropriations made for general purposes under the direction of the President or the War Department?

Mr. GARRETT. All of the expenditures that have been made upon the dam have been out of the $20,000,000 appropriated in the national-defense act for that purpose. No other appropriations have been made for it.

Mr. HUSTED. Do I correctly understand the gentleman to concede that at some portion of the year at least the water power would not be sufficient to operate this plant to its full capacity?

Mr. GARRETT. To operate the nitrate plant No. 2?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. No; I do not concede that. The facts are otherwise.

Mr. HUSTED. There would always be sufficient for that purpose?

Mr. GARRETT. The minimum power that will be developed there will be sufficient always to operate nitrate plant No. 2.

Mr. HUSTED. But will the water power be sufficient to operate the plant in all of the phases of its activities which the gentleman has detailed?

Mr. GARRETT. That is my understanding.

Mr. HUSTED. At all times?

Mr. GARRETT. At all times the minimum water power will operate the plant and leave an excess, and during much of the time there will be a large excess of power developed by this dam alone which can be marketed.

Mr. ALMON. If the gentleman will yield, I will state what is shown on that subject in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations. Col. Hugh L. Cooper, who was referred to as the engineer who built the Keokuk Dam, wrote a letter to the engineering department which was printed in the hearings, estimating the power which will be developed by this dam, as follows: Seven hundred million kilowatt-hours per annum average primary power and 1,470,000,000 kilowatt-hours per annum secondary power, which expressed in horsepower is about 125,000 primary and 375,000 secondary horsepower. The secondary power will be used to operate the nitrate plant, and there will be at least 200,000 horsepower primary power for sale by using the steam plant for a short time at lowest stages of the river.

Mr. GARRETT. Coming back to the question of what we have there, two nitrate plants have been constructed in the immediate vicinity, one of them in the very edge of the town of Sheffield. That is a plant which was experimental in character, by which it was proposed to make fixed nitrogen by a modified form of what is known as the Haber process; and I venture to beg the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am entirely familiar with the Haber process.

Mr. GARRETT. I was speaking of another gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] perhaps confused in his mind yesterday the two processes, the Haber process and the cyanamid process.

Dr. Herbert L. Parsons visited Europe shortly before we entered the war, some time in 1916, to be exact, and made a study of the various nitrogen-fixation processes in France, Norway, and other countries of Europe. He did not have the opportunity of examining in detail the Haber process as it was then being developed in Germany.

Now, gentlemen, if Germany at the time she entered the war and initiated the great world struggle had not been absolutely assured that she had developed the Haber or some other process of nitrogen fixation to the point where she could be certain of an almost unlimited supply of nitrates, she never would have precipitated the war at the time she did.

The thing which I called attention to yesterday, and which gentlemen must bear in mind in connection with this, is that Chilean nitrates do not of themselves answer more than one-half of the military requirements of the world. Always you must bear in mind the military necessity for ammonium as distinct from sodium nitrates, which is the Chilean nitrate, and ammonium is produced by atmosphere fixation, by the by-product of coke ovens, and by the stripping of the gas in the artificial-gas producing plants of the country.

Upon the nitrate part of plant No. 1, located near Muscle Shoals, there was expended some five or six million dollars. That, as I said, is a modified form of the Haber process.
